Mr. RANKIN. This is a part of the Mellon plan. Their hope is to kill the adjusted compensation, and this was their first move, as was indicated by the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] on yesterday, who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee and who hurried away to Illinois to vote or to register, so I am told, in a political campaign. As was indicated by his speech, they want to provoke the Democrats into voting this rule down so as to drive this bill back into the Ways and Means Committee, where they can put it on cold storage and keep it there until they get the Mellon tax bill out of the way, which gives a bonus of $233,000,000 to the big taxpayers of the country, many of whom made their fortunes out of the war, and a bonus of more than $300,000 to Mr. Mellon himself by remitting that amount of his 1923 taxes, which, according to his own arguments, he has already passed on to the ultimate consumer. They want that bill to get out of the way so they can bring this bill back here in such a form as to finally kill it or get it vetoed, and they have counted noses sufficiently to know that a bill that would really bring adjusted compensation could not be passed through both Houses over the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in order that the leaders on the Republican side may have an opportunity to object, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record on the soldiers' adjusted compensation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. I object, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman who spoke last had been at all familiar with the facts in the case he would never have made the statements which he has just issued. There is not a member of the Ways and Means Committee on the Democratic side who will say for one moment or even intimate that I have not hurried this bill along just as fast as it could be, and it is here to-day as an evidence of that fact.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no member of the Ways and Means Committee—no Democratic member—who will make any such assertion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TAGUE. I challenge that statement. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman knows that I am stating the fact. I have hurried it from the very first just as much as I could. I had a resolution before that committee at first, and if that resolution had been carried out the bill would have been on its way to the Senate six weeks ago.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. You are not stating the fact, and you know it.

Mr. JEFFERS. Then why does not the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in spite of the protests of these gentlemen we have the statements of thousands of soldiers who want this bill passed without any amendment and without any further debate.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They want something done, and not this miserable talk that has been going on for four or five years.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No; he will not yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Gentlemen make statements that they know are not correct, because we have here the evidence of what the soldiers want in the telegrams that have been received from every State in the Union.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa—

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the rules be suspended and the bill do pass.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 355, nays 54, answered "present" 4, not voting 18, as follows:

NOT VOTING—18.

Anderson	Johnson, S. Dak.	McDuffie	Rogers, N. H.
Britten	Kahn	McFadden	Stegall
Chindblom	Knutson	Michaelson	Upshaw
Fredericks	Lieberger	Oliver, Ala.
Greene, Mass.	McClintic	Reed, W. Va.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota and Mr. Fredericks (for) with Mr. Snell (against).

Mr. Chindblom and Mr. Lieberger (for) with Mr. Tucker (against).

Mr. Rogers of New Hampshire and Mr. McClintic (for) with Mr. Wason (against).

Mr. Greene of Massachusetts and Mr. Steagall (for) with Mr. McDuffie (against).

Mr. McDuffie and Mr. Upshaw (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized to state that if my colleague, Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, had been present, he would have voted for the bill. Mr. OLIVER is out of the city on important business, having already been granted leave of absence.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Georgia, Mr. UPSHAW, is absent. He asked me to announce that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I have been earnestly requested to pair, much against my desire; but it appears that Mr. McDUFFIE and Mr. UPSHAW, on the Democratic side of the House, are both absent. If they were present, they would vote for this proposition. I have already voted against it; therefore I withdraw my vote of "no" and consent, against my desire, to this pair.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I was paired on this question with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CHINDBLUM, and the gentleman from California, Mr. LIEBERGER. I was paired with the understanding that if I got back here to-day in time to vote I should have that privilege, provided I could transfer the pair. Not being able to do that, I have declined to vote. If these gentlemen were present, I should vote "no" and they would vote "aye." As it is, I vote "present."

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MICHAELSON, is unavoidably detained. Had he been here to-day, he would have voted "yea" on this compensation bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACT.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 63) to amend section 11 of the Federal highway act, approved November 2, 1921, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That was obviously a mistake. The chairman of that committee and the chairman of the Committee on Roads are both agreed that it should be referred to the Committee on Roads. Without objection, that change of reference will be made. There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6420. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota;

H. R. 5633. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Pearl River in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 5737. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River at or near the State line between section 19, township 31 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and section 1, township 31 north, range 10 west of the second principal meridian, in the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana; and

H. R. 6925. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Calumet River at or near One hundred and thirtieth Street in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1787. An act authorizing the extension of the park system of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 514. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a right of way over the Government levee at Yuma, Ariz.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair expects to go away to-morrow and designates the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to act as Speaker pro tempore until he returns.

MAIL MESSENGER SERVICE.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6482) authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for mail messenger service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he is willing to permit an amendment striking out the right of the third-class postmasters to make a contract with the Government.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have a committee amendment which will take care of that proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I object, because I do not know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to Members that this calendar, of course, has been printed for several days, and all Members have had an opportunity to familiarize themselves with what is on the calendar.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. But I can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The Clerk again reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter postmasters may be designated by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of mail messengers and others engaged under their supervision in transporting the mails: Provided, That in the discretion of the Postmaster General, postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at post offices of the third and fourth classes may enter into contracts for the performance of mail messenger service, and allowance may be made therefor from the appropriations for mail messenger service: Provided further, That the total amount payable under such contract to any postmaster, assistant postmaster, or clerk shall not exceed $300 in any one year: Provided further, That hereafter special delivery messengers at post offices of all classes may enter into contracts for mail messenger service.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Amend by striking out of line 7, page 1, the word "postmasters," and, in line 8, strike out the words "and fourth class," and insert, following the word "third," the following: "class and postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at post offices of the fourth class."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What does this do to the bill?

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. It simply does not permit the third-class postmasters to enter into a contract for special delivery service, and leaves it to the clerks and to the carriers to enter into that contract.

Mr. McKEOWN. They can not make a contract?

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. The third-class postmaster can not. There are only about four or five hundred of those offices that would be affected.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was wondering what the reason was for not giving them the same rights.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. The fact is that they entered into contracts with the department and took that work away from the carriers and the clerks who should have the contract.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would have objected to this bill but for this fact: The class of postmasters which this bill relieves are those who are the most poorly paid of all of the employees of the Government.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. There are 19,000 offices affected by this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. And if it is not passed there will be no special messenger service after the 1st of July.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it. I am for the bill; I am speaking for it, because nobody spoke for it. I wanted to say a word for it. I was just saying to all of my friends, including the gentleman from Illinois, that the only reason that I am for the bill is that the particular postmasters affected by it are those who are the most poorly paid of all of the Government employees.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; fourth-class postmasters, about 19,000 of them, some of whom do not get enough for their services to pay for the food they eat, much less the clothing they wear. This will give them an opportunity to employ some member of their family as a messenger to perform service in connection with their office. It, in fact, adds just a little to the remuneration that they now receive; therefore I am for it, and therefore, when my distinguished friend from Illinois told me about his amendment, I told him there would be no objection from one of the Members of Congress who sometimes objects to such bills.

But I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] that if he expects to know something about these numerous bills that appear on the Consent Calendar, some appropriating millions of dollars, and if he expects to object to them when they are improper bills, he must do his investigating and find out about them before the House meets to take them up. He must go to the document room and get the bills as soon as they are reported; he must take them to his office when they appear on these calendars; he must spend some of his office time on them instead of writing interesting editorials for his newspapers in going over those bills to find out what they contain. [Applause.] Then, when they are called up, he may rise in his seat and say, "Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill because I know what is in it, and know it ought not to pass," and when he objects to it once and it comes back on the calendar, if it is a bad bill he will find the gentleman from Texas, at least, and probably the required one other man in the House, helping him to put it off of the calendar the second time, and then it will later have to come up regularly in the usual order. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] is going to be a very valuable man in this House before the year is out. [Laughter.] I imagine he is going to find out something about these bills that pass here so hurriedly, and I imagine he is not going to allow them to be passed here two or three per minute, as they have done in years gone by, because he is going to stand up here and insist on knowing what is in them, and that is what every one of us ought to do when we vote for a bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. I rise in opposition to things generally. [Laughter and applause.] First of all, I want to pay thanks to my dulcet-toned friend from Texas, and I want him to know I have been sitting at the feet of Gamaliel in these matters. He is the real thing, and I am going to profit upon that juxtaposition to his feet upon these matters, and I want him to know it. [Laughter and applause.]

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REGISTERED MAIL MATTER.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6352) to authorize the Postmaster General to fix the fees chargeable for registration of mail matter, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I do not expect to object, but I desire to ask what change does this make in the present law?

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Iowa I will say that in this bill the wording is identical with section 3927 of the Revised Statutes with the exception of the provision raising the limit of indemnity to $1,000 instead of $100 as at present, and also gives the Postmaster General the power to fix fees instead of the maximum limit of 20 cents, which is a new provision.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLY. I hope the gentleman will not object until this matter is further explained.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a dozen over here holding in reserve the right to object if the gentleman does not.

Mr. KELLY. Of course, if there is objection, it should be made now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

CONFERENCES FOR CONTROL OF NARCOTIC DRUGS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 195, authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in two international conferences for the control of the traffic in habit-forming narcotic drugs.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman's idea of passing it over now? Why not thresh it out now?

Mr. PORTER. We have a representative in Europe who will be back in about a week from now, and he will probably have a little more information on the subject as to whether we will have two conferences or one.

Mr. BLANTON. This resolution appropriates $40,000 to pay the expenses of five people over to these conferences, which is about $8,000 apiece. That is pretty high for expenses.

Mr. PORTER. Well, that is hardly a fair statement of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, how many are going?

Mr. PORTER. That is a matter entirely with the President.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

CERTIFICATES OF CITIZENSHIP TO INDIANS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6355) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, under regulations to be prescribed by him, to issue a certificate of citizenship to any noncitizen Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who may make application therefor, and, upon the issuance of such certificate to any Indian, he or she shall become a full citizen of the United States:

Provided, That the issuance of a certificate of citizenship shall not in any manner impair or otherwise affect the right of any Indian to tribal or other property.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "become a full" and insert in lieu thereof "be a."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDING ACT FOR DIVISION OF LANDS AND FUNDS OF OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6483) amending an act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any right to or interest in the lands, money, or mineral interests, as provided in the act of Congress approved June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L. p. 539), entitled "An act for the for other purposes," and in acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, vested in, determined, or adjudged to be the right or property of any person not an Osage Indian by blood, shall be subject to sale, assignment, and transfer under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "blood" strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and not otherwise."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "be," strike out the words "subject to sale, assignment" and insert in lieu thereof "sold, assigned,"

Page 2, line 7, after the word "and," strike out the word "transfer" and insert in lieu thereof the word "transferred."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF COTTON STATISTICS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2113) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton," approved July 22, 1912.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice the title of the bill sets forth that it is "to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton,' approved July 22, 1912, whereas, as a matter of fact, the bill does not at all expressly amend the act in question, but, on the contrary, in section 7, repeals the act of 1912, so that this is a new act. There is nothing in the bill to indicate and nothing in the report—a report of seven or eight lines—nothing to indicate what it is going to cost. It seems to me the House should have more information.

Furthermore, the terms of the bill not only authorize but direct the Director of the Census to collect these voluminous statistics every two weeks through a large portion of the year. That seems to me equivalent to an appropriation, because you authorize and you direct; you order a department to do something. Even if you do not carry the money in your bill, there is no discretion apparently left to the department. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] if he will not be agreeable to passing this over, without prejudice, for the present, until some further examination can be made?

Mr. RANKIN. I want to make an explanation to the gentleman from Michigan, and I think it will satisfy him.

Mr. CRAMTON. Personally I would rather have it go over until I can have a chance to compare it.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman would like for me to go into the details and explain the reason for this legislation, I shall be glad to do so. This bill has the approval of the Director of the Census.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have never known anything that is going to cost money that did not have the approval of the department. I have in one hand the act of 1912 and in the other hand

I have that which is said to be, by the title, an amendment. Manifestly it is an extension of the service, and there is no report from the department that favors it, no statement as to what it will cost.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman for his information that the department not only approved this bill but wrote it at our suggestion and with our approval. Mr. Steuart came before our committee and went over it with us. I mean a committee of Representatives from the cotton States, of which I am chairman.

Mr. CRAMTON. The man who wrote it probably never drafted a bill before. The title has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. He not only wrote it, but submitted it to the legal department, and the legal officer approved it. Those amendments are merely interpolations. He took the old bill and where these new changes were put in there he cut the bill and interlined it. He submitted that to his legal officer in the department and he approved it.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to ask the gentleman why the Bureau of Statistics should gather this information rather than the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. RANKIN. I will be glad to answer that. In the first place the Department of Agriculture does not gather ginner's statistics. That comes under the Bureau of the Census. The ginner's report is the only accurate report you can possibly get touching the cotton crop.

Mr. BEGG. Does not or, if it does not, should not the Department of Agriculture get the statistics on the amount of cotton ginned annually just as it does the amount of wheat and corn and any other crop?

Mr. RANKIN. The Department of Agriculture makes the report on cotton crop conditions, and the Bureau of the Census, after it collects statistics as to the number of bales ginned, turns its information over to the Department of Agriculture for its use in arriving at its conclusions as to the cotton crop that is likely to be made. The ginner's report is the only report that can be relied upon. It is not guesswork. The number of bales ginned by the ginner is reported to the Census Bureau.

These ginner's reports come out once a month. Since the boll weevil invaded the South these radical changes sweep over the country sometimes in a few days, and the ginner's reports do not register those changes as they occur. In order to give as nearly as possible exact information to the farmers of the country, to the spinners of the country, to business men of the country, and to the public generally, we worked out this proposition of having these ginner's reports made every two weeks during that critical period of crop development when it was passing through the period of production, being picked and put on the market. We submitted this to the Director of the Census and he came and went over it with us carefully. He suggested some changes and we suggested some.

Every business in the country that is interested in the cotton business that I know anything about, every farmer's organization in the country, approves it. He submitted it to his legal department, and then sent it back to the committee; and Senator HARRIS, who was on this committee with me and worked on it, introduced the bill in the Senate, and I introduced it in the House. It passed the Senate and I had his bill substituted for mine in the Census Committee, and we reported it favorably.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill. It is right in the line of what the Departments of Agriculture, State and National, are trying to do, and in fact there is an international organization that undertakes to do the same thing. But I question the wisdom of building up a duplicate machine in the Department of the Census for the purpose of collecting and gathering and collating duplicate statistics.

Mr. RANKIN. What does the gentleman mean by "duplicate statistics"?

Mr. BEGG. It has heretofore been done annually.

Mr. RANKIN. It has been made annually for 40 years. This is the Census Bureau.

Mr. BEGG. I understand this is the Census Bureau, but does not the Department of Agriculture maintain a force for the same purpose?

Mr. RANKIN. No; the Department of Agriculture does not have a force for the same purpose. The information which the Department of Agriculture receives comes largely through the mail and is merely as to crop conditions. These reports do not relate to crop conditions.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the Department of Agriculture get a report as to crop results as well as crop conditions?

Mr. RANKIN. That department only gets it from the ginner's reports; that is, so far as the number of bales of cotton is concerned.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that I am not going to object to his bill, but I think it is a mistake to expand the Census Bureau for the purpose of doing the work which, it seems to me, should be done by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RANKIN. The Department of Agriculture will frankly tell you that it can not take this away from the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. You gentlemen ought not to be surprised at the display of ignorance by the gentleman from Ohio as to cotton production and we should not be much surprised at such a display on the part of the gentleman from Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object to this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. That sort of argument is not likely to conduce to that result.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentlemen know about everything else on earth except as to cotton production.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, let us get back to the bill and away from ignorance of Members. Can the gentleman from Mississippi give a definite statement, upon authority, as to the comparative cost under the present system and under the proposed bill?

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that there will be some extra cost, but I do not know how much. I am not prepared to say what the extra cost will be, although I submit there ought to be very little extra cost under this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that I have made a hurried comparison of it and, as far as I can see, there are only two additional periods named, 10 in the present law and 12 in the proposed bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman from Michigan will find that possibly there are four, maybe only two or three. But let me say to him that we now have these ginner's reporters all over the country. We have them in every county, and, so far as that is concerned, we could get this information by franked cards, and it would be very little trouble.

Mr. CRAMTON. It does not involve any new field force?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think it would involve any additional force, and it will not put another man on the pay roll.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is just a compilation of the information after it is received?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; largely. There will be some extra work under it, but very little extra expense.

Mr. CRAMTON. I take it the gentleman would not object to putting the title into such shape as to properly describe the act, which can very easily be done. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANKIN. I would not object to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics concerning the amount of cotton ginned; the quantity of raw cotton consumed in manufacturing establishments of every character; the quantity of baled cotton on hand; the number of active consuming cotton spindles; the number of active spindle hours; and the quantity of cotton imported and exported, with the country of origin and destination.

SEC. 2. That the statistics of the quantity of cotton ginned shall show the quantity ginned from each crop prior to August 1, August 15, September 1, September 15, October 1, October 15, November 1, November 15, December 1, December 15, January 15, and March 1: Provided, That the Director of the Census may limit the canvasses of August 1 and August 15 to those sections of the cotton-growing States in which cotton has been ginned. The quantity of cotton consumed in manufacturing establishments, the quantity of baled cotton on hand, the number of active consuming cotton spindles, the number of active spindle hours, and the statistics of cotton imported and exported shall relate to each calendar month, and shall be published as soon as possible after the close of the month. Each report published by the Bureau of the Census of the quantity ginned shall carry with it the latest available statistics concerning the quantity of cotton consumed, stocks of baled cotton on hand, the number of cotton-consuming spindles, and the quantity of cotton imported and exported.

All of these publications containing statistics of cotton shall be mailed by the Director of the Census to all cotton ginners, cotton manufacturers, and cotton warehousemen, and to all daily newspapers throughout the United States. The Director of the Census shall furnish to the Department of Agriculture, immediately prior to the publication of each report of that bureau regarding the cotton crop, the latest available statistics hereinbefore mentioned, and the said Department of Agriculture shall publish the same in connection with each of its reports concerning cotton.

SEC. 3. That the information furnished by any individual establishment under the provisions of this act shall be considered as strictly confidential and shall be used only for the statistical purpose for which it is supplied. Any employee of the Bureau of the Census who, without the written authority of the Director of the Census, shall publish or communicate any information given into his possession by reason of his employment under the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $300 or more than $1,000 or imprisoned for a period of not exceeding one year, or both so fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. RANKIN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has not finished reading the bill, but at this point I want to make a statement. There was a gentleman before the committee who wanted an amendment to this bill which I did not think necessary and possibly would not support if it were offered. The gentleman said some Members on the floor would possibly want to offer an amendment, and I told him if they wanted to do so I would be glad for them to offer it, but I thought I would probably oppose it. I think I am in honor bound to make this statement to the House. This gentleman represented the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and after the word "warehousemen," in line 22, on page 2, he wanted to have inserted "the New Orleans Cotton Exchange," and possibly "the New York Exchange." I told him that if any Member on the floor wanted to offer that amendment I would have no objection to its being offered, but I would possibly oppose its adoption, as I saw no reason for it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That matter was brought before the committee, as the gentleman will remember, and the committee turned it down, so I do not think the gentleman is in honor bound to call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. RANKIN. I thought I was in honor bound to call the attention of the House to it, in the light of what was said to this man when he was before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every owner, president, treasurer, secretary, director, or other officer or agent of any cotton ginnery, manufacturing establishment, warehouse, or other place where cotton is ginned, manufactured, or stored, whether conducted as a corporation, firm, limited partnership, or by individuals, when requested by the Director of the Census or by any special agent or other employee of the Bureau of the Census acting under the instructions of said director, to furnish completely and correctly, to the best of his knowledge, all of the information concerning the quantity of cotton ginned, consumed, or on hand, and the number of cotton-consuming spindles and active spindle hours. The request of the Director of the Census for information concerning the quantity of cotton ginned or consumed, stocks of cotton on hand, and number of spindles and spindle hours may be made in writing or by a visiting representative, and if made in writing shall be forwarded by registered mail, and the registry receipt of the Post Office Department shall be accepted as evidence of such demand. Any owner, president, treasurer, secretary, director, or other officer or agent of any cotton ginnery, manufacturing establishment, warehouse, or other place where cotton is ginned or stored, who under the conditions hereinbefore stated shall refuse or willfully neglect to furnish any of the information herein provided for or shall willfully give answers that are false shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $300 or more than $1,000 or imprisoned for a period of not exceeding one year, or both so fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that I think the title of the bill should be changed. I wonder whether the gentleman has noticed the title of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crampton] has suggested an amendment of the title.

Mr. HOCH. Plainly, the title is inaccurate here.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and I am going to offer an amendment.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill:

SEC. 5. That in addition to the information regarding cotton in the United States hereinbefore provided for, the Director of the Census shall compile, by correspondence or the use of published reports and documents, any available information concerning the production, consumption, and stocks of cotton in foreign countries, and the number of cotton-consuming spindles in such countries. Each report published by the Bureau of the Census regarding cotton shall contain an abstract of the latest available information obtained under the provisions of this section, and the Director of the Census shall furnish the same to the Department of Agriculture for publication in connection with the reports of that department concerning cotton in the same manner as in the case of statistics relating to the United States.

SEC. 6. That the reports of cotton ginned to the dates as of which the Department of Agriculture is also required to issue cotton crop reports shall be issued simultaneously with the cotton crop reports of that department, the two reports to be issued from the same place at 11 o'clock a. m. on the eighth day following that to which the respective reports relate. When such date of release falls on Sunday or a legal holiday the reports shall be issued at 11 o'clock a. m. on the next succeeding workday.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is it existing law that the report shall be made on the eighth day? The purpose of my inquiry is this: Suppose something should arise whereby they could not make the report on the eighth day and it would have to be put out on the tenth day, is not that confining it to a specific time which might cause trouble? If that is the existing law and they have been working under it, of course, that is different.

Mr. RANKIN. I think that is existing law, and I know it is the custom and I know we discussed it and this met the approval of the department.

Mr. BEGG. I withdraw my pro forma amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill:

SEC. 7. That the act of Congress authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton, approved July 22, 1912, and all other laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton."

CONVEYANCE OF PORTION OF FEDERAL BUILDING SITE TO WASHINGTON, MO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6059) authorizing the conveyance to the city of Washington, Mo., of 10 feet of the Federal building site in said city for the extension of the existing public alley through the entire block from Oak to Lafayette Streets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the city of Washington, in the State of Missouri, by quitclaim deed, the north 10 feet of the Federal building site in the said city of Washington, Mo., to be used for an extension of the existing public alley through the entire block from Oak to Lafayette Streets, which said existing public alley now extends but halfway through said block, to be used for a public alley and for no other purpose: Provided, however, That the city of Washington shall open said extension to the existing public alley as herein authorized to be granted, and improve and maintain the same as other public alleys of said city are improved and maintained; also, that the city of Washington shall bear all expense incident to the moving of the north curb and the partial rebuilding of the driveway entrance to the Government lot made necessary by the establishment of the new alley line along the northern boundary of the Federal building site: Provided further, That the city of Washington shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein authorized to be granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described, and in the event that the said land shall not be used for the purpose of a public alley it shall revert to the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "convoy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "convey."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLEANING OF EXTERIOR OF POST-OFFICE BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4290) to provide for the cleaning of the exterior of the post-office building at Cincinnati, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the cleaning of the exterior of the post-office building at Cincinnati, Ohio, in connection with the improvements in the blocks known as Fountain Square, said cleaning to be without expense to the United States and to the entire satisfaction of the representative of the Treasury Department who may be detailed for the final inspection thereof.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I think this bill is of sufficient importance for some Member to say at least a word in its behalf. I am for the bill. In the absence of the majority leader, I want to use five minutes on it. There is a widespread demand now in the United States for cleaning up, and I am glad to see that the majority leader has heard and heeded the demand. The old saying is that charity begins at home, and that applies also to "cleaning up."

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am the gentleman from Cincinnati who introduced this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to give the gentleman due credit. It is to clean up the exterior of a public building in Cincinnati.

Mr. STEPHENS. And I am the one who is fathering the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that is true, but it happens that this particular cleaning up of the exterior is to be performed in the district of the majority leader [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. STEPHENS. And if the gentleman wants to know anything about the matter, I will tell the gentleman all he wants to know.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad we are going to clean up even the exterior of a public building in Cincinnati.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to clean up the interior as well as the exterior.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say to the gentleman that I got an appropriation last year of $10,000 for cleaning the interior of the building.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I know that, and I wish we could clean the interior and the exterior of every public building in the United States. I think it would be money well spent.

Mr. STEPHENS. So do I. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is the duty not only of the majority leader to clean up the exterior of his public building in Cincinnati, but I think it is his duty—

Mr. STEPHENS. The majority leader did not have anything to do with this.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is the duty of his party and I think it is the duty of my party to join him and have a general cleaning up here in Washington.

Mr. BEGG and Mr. STEPHENS rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield first to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. I asked the gentleman to yield so that I might ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] if it is not true that all the city of Cincinnati is asking is permission to clean a Government building?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that is the reason I was for the bill, because it did not take a dollar out of the Treasury. It is the only bill I have seen come here since I have been in Congress, that I have any memory of, that did not seek to take money out of the Treasury, and I am for it mainly on that account.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman is attributing this bill to the majority leader. I represent part of Cincinnati.

Mr. BLANTON. And the majority leader [Mr. LONGWORTH] represents the other part, which embraces this particular building, the exterior of which is to be cleaned up.

Mr. STEPHENS. And I am the one who introduced this bill, and I do not know that the majority leader has anything to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will embrace the distinguished gentleman [Mr. STEPHENS] in double harness with the distinguished majority leader in giving credit for this cleaning up in Cincinnati. I knew the gentleman was from Cincinnati, too, but I thought that the main credit of everything that is done is always given to the leader of a party, and I wanted to do him the honor of giving him the credit for it; but I will divide the honor when I go to extend my remarks, if I can get that permission from the other distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. STEPHENS. But it is my bill. The majority leader did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has gotten in a good humor—if he has had the proper kind of lunch downstairs to put him in a good humor again so that he will let us extend our remarks on a bill, not one that takes $2,000,000 out of the Treasury like the one we passed in 40 minutes awhile ago under a suspension of the rules, but one which takes nothing out of the Treasury—if he will let us extend our remarks, I am going to give the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] full credit for this great cleaning-up system that has been started on the exterior of public buildings in Cincinnati, expressing the hope that before we stop we will "clean up" the interior of every public building in the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman from Ohio does not need any particular credit for introducing this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought that any man from Ohio needed all the credit that he could get. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Oh, that is where the gentleman is mistaken. We do not need any particular credit for duties well performed.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman on that, but I want to say that I am with him on the cleaning-up program. Let us make it a good job. Let us take an object lesson from Cincinnati and start it here in the city of Washington and clean up every single department of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. MARYS RIVER NEAR WILDS LANDING, FLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6725) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Georgia and Florida through their respective highway departments to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River at or near Wilds Landing, Fla.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, this matter was up for consideration before, and I at that time stated the reason why I was then forced to object to the consideration of the bill. For those same reasons, which I consider it unnecessary now to restate, I propose at this time to again object to the consideration of the bill, and I do object.

The SPEAKER. It now requires two other objectors. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I also object.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I also object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen withhold their objections for a moment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement again to the House about this matter, and I trust that the House will bear with me while I undertake to give the history of this transaction. I can understand why my friend from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] proposes to object, from a statement made to me by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD], and I honor the gentleman's ideas. The gentleman from Georgia stated to me—and I presume his statement is true—that the gentleman from Texas had advised him that he would notify him and give him a hearing before the committee. That is correct, as I do not doubt. I do not blame the gentleman from Texas, but I want to say this—and the gentleman from Texas, as a member of the committee, I think will bear me out—that I never appeared before the committee and urged the report upon this bill, although I would have done so had I the opportunity. The fact is that I was in Florida at the time the bill was reported, and the committee itself, without my personal urging, reported the bill.

I want to say that I am convinced—and I am not charging the gentleman from Georgia with any connection with it—that this is simply a holdup upon the part of these people who claim to be the "Kingsland Bridge Co." in Georgia. The original bill incorporating the "Kingsland Bridge Co.," or rather granting them this franchise, came through this House without my knowledge. I never had a breath of suspicion that it was even pending. Three men in the district of the gentleman from Georgia, who I am reliably informed had never been engaged in the bridge-building business in their lives, saw fit to have a bill introduced in Congress and have it go through without any public notoriety of it, to be sure, giving them the right to build a toll bridge over the St. Marys River, dividing the sovereign States of Georgia and Florida, and giving them the right to charge tolls on that bridge. That bill itself carried upon its face the reservation of the right by Congress to repeal it, to amend it, or to alter it at any time that Congress saw fit. These men now claim that they have gone forward and have expended money in the prosecution of the building of that bridge.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In just a moment. Two weeks ago yesterday when this matter was under consideration, coming up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and after it was stricken from the calendar on the objection of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD], I went to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD], as I had been to him more than a year ago, and asked him to furnish me with a verified itemized statement of what these gentlemen had expended. I have never gotten a word from that gentleman yet. Two weeks ago yesterday, after it was stricken from the calendar on his objection and I put it back on the calendar, as I had a right to do under the rules, I again went to the gentleman from Georgia and said, "Mr. LANKFORD, why are you not able to get me an itemized statement of these charges? I will stand with you to make the States of Georgia and Florida pay up every cent that these gentlemen have honestly paid out in this work, provided they furnish us with an honest statement of their expenditures," and up to this good hour I have not had a word from the gentleman from Georgia with any statement of these accounts. Therefore I took it upon myself to write to find out the facts, and here is a letter from Mr. J. H. Gross, vice president of the State Bank of Kingsland, Ga., where this corporation claims to have its residence:

STATE BANK OF KINGSLAND,
Kingsland, Ga., March 14, 1924.

HON. FRANK CLARK,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Fred Ward, of the Brunswick Board of Trade, has written me by request of Judge H. B. Phillips, of the Florida State Highway Department, and asked for some information as to the present status of the Kingsland Bridge Co. and as to the actual construction work done on a bridge at Wilds Landing on the St. Marys River.

The Kingsland Bridge Co. is not a live concern that has been in the building business, but was organized solely for the purpose of building a bridge at Wilds Landing on the St. Marys River. The principal incorporators were citizens of this community, and those interested in the Kingsland Bridge Co. now are W. N. Casey, a merchant of this place; Emmett McElreath, a lawyer of this place; Thomas Casey, a farmer; and B. Beasley, a bridgeman, of Savannah, Ga. I do not believe that these people wish to build this bridge for the benefit of the public or for the coastal highway, but solely for the purpose of the tolls they might derive from the project.

As to the actual construction work, some 12 or 18 months ago these people drove a few piling at the proposed bridge site, and I believe that $500 would cover cost of work done there.

If there is anything that I can do toward helping you pass the proposed bill for the bridging of this stream I would be glad to render any assistance in my power, as I consider it of vital importance to our section and the adjoining county of Nassau.

Yours respectfully,

J. H. GROSS.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. As I understand it, the Georgia State Highway Commission has indorsed the passage of this bill. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that some 12 or 18 months ago, when the former bill was up for consideration before the committee, it developed at the hearings, as the gentleman may recall, that this Kingsland Bridge Co. did not begin work until after a bill repealing their bill had been introduced, and that only a few piling had been driven.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; that is what I understand to be true—just as my colleague states it.

Mr. Speaker, I say to this House, and I beg my colleagues to bear with me for a moment or two while I do it, that this is nothing in God Almighty's world but graft, pure and simple. It is just a matter of a little bunch of banditti trying to hold up two great States to drag a few dollars out of their public treasuries. That is the truth, and that is all there is to it. I am not blaming my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD], but I had an interview with him to-day in this House in the presence of his colleague [Mr. LARSEN] and his colleague [Mr. LEE]. I said to him then, "You have had over two weeks, but I am willing to let it stand until next Monday, March 24, if you will get the facts here. If you will now wire your people and let them furnish an itemized verified statement of honest and legitimate expenditures which they have undergone in good faith, I will join you in seeing that they are reimbursed, and I am sure we can trust the traditional honor of our great States that justice will be done to these people." I said further, "that if we could then agree we would settle, and if not, he should agree that the Speaker, without objection from him, might recognize me to move to suspend the rules which would take the vote of two-thirds of our colleagues to even admit me to be heard." This, in substance, is what I proposed to my friend from Georgia, and he declined it.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I put in the RECORD the proof, showing the standing of the Georgia Highway Commission, from his own State. I put in the RECORD evidence showing the position of the highway commission of my State. This, as I said before, is the greatest highway leading from the North into the State of Florida. His people are interested as much as mine, and I can not understand why the gentleman wants to continue to delay this great public improvement. The roads are being built both by Georgia and by Florida; the contract has been about let for $160,000 to be expended upon this bridge, making a concrete-steel bridge as good as any in the country, and I want to ask, Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen who have proposed to object if they intend to stand in the way of this great public improvement by these two great States of Georgia and Florida? I do not believe they will when they know the facts. I do not believe my friend from Texas who out of his goodness of heart made his kindly response to the appeals of the gentleman from Georgia, who said he had not been heard, will persist in his objection now that he has heard the facts. What could he have said if he had been heard by the committee, more than he has said here? He has said nothing here to disprove that this banditti down there in his county are ready to hold up two great States and to get money they have not spent. If they have spent it, why do they not furnish the proof?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to call the attention of my colleague and also of my other colleagues of the House to the fact that under the laws of the State of Florida we can not spend money on any road where there is a toll bridge, and unless this bill passes you have to pay $2, or whatever fee is charged for crossing over on the ferry. Get this bill passed and these people of Georgia and the other States can go to Florida without paying tolls.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; my colleague is absolutely correct. Now, gentlemen, remember—and I am appealing particularly to my two colleagues from other States who have objected—

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will yield. The appeal of the gentleman from Florida to me, of course, under ordinary circumstances would be conclusive; but I have promised the gentleman from Georgia I will object for the simple reason the gentleman from Georgia came to me and asked me to notify him when this bill came up for consideration in the committee. A new rule in reference to bridge bills was adopted, and that was to refer them to a subcommittee. The bill slipped through the committee without my taking note of it—

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And without mine.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am certain of that. The gentleman from Georgia came to me and I explained it was simply a matter which slipped my attention. He said to me, also, there might be an accommodation of this matter if it could go over a little while; but, regardless of that fact, out of these considerations I would object, and, of course, I must continue my objection for to-day. Now, probably if this bill passes over, there might be an accommodation and then objection would not have to be made; but if the question comes up to-day, of course I must continue to object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say this to my friend from Texas: The gentleman from Georgia, I do not believe, can claim that he has not had ample opportunity to furnish the proof for which I have asked. He has had ample opportunity to do that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield. I ask this in the interest of those who have bills pending on the calendar—has the gentleman any reasonable expectation of being able to induce those who have objected to withdraw their objections?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope so.

Mr. CRAMTON. If not, it seems to me we ought to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope so, if the gentleman will permit. I have taken up very little time of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. I simply ask the gentleman if he has hopes of making converts of these gentlemen who have objected?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think so. I do not believe the gentleman from Arkansas is in the same position as the gentleman from Texas, and surely, after this explanation of the situation where two States are being held up in a great public improvement just because a few men on the St. Marys River imagine they ought to have something for which they have not furnished the proof, I do not believe the gentleman from Arkansas will—

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will yield, does not the gentleman believe it is possible for the gentleman from Florida and the gentleman from Georgia to get together with the War Department Engineer, General Beach, and adjust this matter because—

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that I said to the gentleman from Georgia to-day in this House that he could offer his amendment and submit it to the House, and what was done I would stand by.

Mr. BEGG. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that would be absolutely equitable?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think that Congress could not pass a bill specifically reserving the right to amend, alter, or repeal if it saw fit? Does the gentleman believe that Congress ought to be a place where these things are thrashed out. I do not.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has the gentleman any reasonable expectation of being able to finish his remarks to-day?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If I had taken up as much time as the gentleman from North Dakota has in the last week or two I would not say anything about the time any other Member was using.

Mr. CRAMTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. BURTNESS. I simply asked the question. I thought the gentleman asked for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the Speaker recognize me to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say to the gentleman in public what he has said privately, that he does not feel like doing that without hearing the case of the two gentlemen, the gentleman from Florida and the gentleman from Georgia, together.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the regular order being demanded, I make the point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Well, I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, since gentlemen seem to be so anxious to get the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving further the right to object, I do not wish to take up much time in the discussion of this proposition.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman going to object?

Mr. LANKFORD. I am going to object. I do not wish to take up much time, but this is a proposition which I believe will solve itself absolutely. I went to the gentleman from Florida before this matter came up and asked him to let it be passed over without prejudice, to see if we could not get together. He said he could not agree to that. He said it should be taken up to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did offer to let it go over until Monday, and in the meantime wire your people for the facts.

Mr. LANKFORD. I could not agree to take it up on Monday, but I would agree to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BEGG. Why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to pass it over without prejudice?

Mr. LANKFORD. I am willing to do that. I will ask that it be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hold that the rules of the House should stand. When they come here under the rules of this House and make objections, they ought to stand on them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be passed over and take its place on the calendar.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not like now to take up your time on this particular matter. I am as anxious for a free bridge to be built across the St. Marys River near Kingsland as the gentleman from Florida or any other person. I think it is unnecessary for any bitterness to arise at this juncture. I am absolutely sure that the Kingsland Bridge Co. and everyone connected with it will gladly do what is right in this matter. In fact I have every assurance that this company is willing to do absolute justice. If I for a moment thought otherwise I would not intercede for them.

The gentleman from Florida now assures me—in fact, he has just so stated on this floor in the presence of this House—that he will stand with me to make the States of Georgia and Florida pay up every cent that the Kingsland Bridge Co. honestly paid out in this work, provided they will furnish an honest statement of the expenditures. I can assure the gentleman that such a statement will be forthcoming in the next few days. I can further assure the gentleman that it will not be necessary to help the Kingsland Bridge Co. collect every cent it has spent in this connection, for the gentlemen composing the Kingsland Bridge Co. are willing to sacrifice a large percentage of what has been spent by the company, but do not want to sacrifice all which the company has spent in this connection.

I am truly glad that the gentleman from Florida is now willing to help these gentlemen who put their money in this enterprise to get their money back. There is no reason why the entire matter can not be adjusted, and that speedily. I know it can be adjusted if the gentleman from Florida will stand with me in an effort to see that the rights of the people who constitute the Kingsland Bridge Co. are protected. The rights of the Kingsland Bridge Co., though, can not be protected after the passage of the pending bill. No one would expect the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to pay back to the Kingsland Bridge Co. all the money spent by it, and it matters not how much he and I stood together after the passage of the bill, there will be no way to force payment to be made to the Kingsland Bridge Co. The Kingsland Bridge Co., it is true, could protect its rights to some extent in the courts. The right of way owned by the company would have to be condemned, and other litigation might arise. The time for the gentleman from Florida and myself to stand together to protect the rights of the Kingsland Bridge Co. is now.

Mention has been made of the States reimbursing the Kingsland Bridge Co. The States could afford to pay a reasonable price for the right of way owned by the Kingsland Bridge Co. and which is necessary for the construction of the bridge by the States.

The plan has been for the chambers of commerce of Savannah, Brunswick, and Jacksonville to make up enough money to pay the Kingsland Bridge people part of the money spent by that company and save the States from spending any money in this connection. I understand from reliable sources that these chambers of commerce induced the Kingsland Bridge Co. to undertake the construction of a toll bridge at this point. There was no way of crossing the river except by a ferry, which was dangerous, troublesome, and expensive. At that time there was no hope of a free bridge in the immediate future, and these people—the Kingsland Bridge Co.—were induced to undertake the building of this bridge. It was discussed fully and understood that if the States decided to provide for a free bridge later the toll bridge could be purchased for a reasonable consideration.

Now, it seems only fair to me that, this enterprise having been begun by these chambers of commerce indorsing it and urging it, then that these chambers of commerce and the people whom they represent should bear part of the loss of money spent by the Kingsland Bridge Co. and not let a few men who are trying to help in the construction of a bridge for the use of the public lose all. It has been charged that these men started to build a bridge for the purpose of making money. It may be that they really intended to make a little money while they were rendering a real service to the people to be served. It is certainly not wrong to attempt to make a little money honestly by rendering a real service to the public.

A few days ago I received a most excellent letter from Hon. F. E. Twitty, of Brunswick, Ga., which is self-explanatory and which throws much light upon the present controversy. The letter is dated March 7, 1924, and is as follows:

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LANKFORD: I have yours of the 4th but have not yet received the copy of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 8. When it comes I will read with care what you had to say.

As you know, I was instrumental in calling the meeting of representatives of the commercial organizations of Jacksonville, Savannah, and Brunswick, which was held the first part of last year. We also had representatives of the Kingsland Bridge Co. and of the Beasley Construction Co. We spent considerable time in going into details of this matter. Everyone present seemed to recognize that the Kingsland people were entitled to some fair consideration. They named a price of $6,500 for all their rights. After the meeting I had considerable correspondence with representatives of the different organizations, including Judge Phillips, chairman of the Florida Highway Department.

Notwithstanding what was said at the meeting, the Florida representatives took the position after they returned home that the Kingsland people and the contractor had been put on notice at the hearing of the application as to location of the bridge before the War Department and by representatives of the Government that no Federal aid could be allotted to roads leading to a toll bridge. Of course, this has reference to relatively immediate approaches. I have always taken the position that the Brunswick Board of Trade could not afford to take any part in any congressional or other action looking to the complete deprivation of the rights of the Kingsland people without some compensation, because of the fact that our board of trade cooperated in securing the passage of the legislation which granted the Kingsland Bridge Co. the permit to construct the bridge. However, I went on record at the very beginning of the consideration of this question as favoring the construction of a bridge under specifications that would be satisfactory to the Federal and State highway departments, and with option to the adjoining counties or States to purchase at a fair price and at figures that should be satisfactory to the Federal and State engineers. The officials of the highway department said this was not practicable, but I did not then agree with them and do not now agree with them.

It was then considered that it would be some years before sufficient money could be provided for the construction of this bridge by joint action of the Federal, State, and county governments, and, while this was a private enterprise, the toll bridge would have been an improvement over the toll ferry. The parties interested actually paid out, as reported to us, $2,650 for rights of way, and they are needed, as I understand it. They also, of course, spend considerable other money. I have never committed myself as favoring any particular amount to be paid them. Some amount ought to be agreed upon, and I am sure that all the stockholders in the company would be willing to contribute largely of their investment because of the benefit that will accrue to them and the public by the construction of a free bridge. As Brunswick gave aid and comfort to these gentlemen in its inception, I do not propose to be a party to trying to ride roughshod over them. Even if they are only few in number, they are our citizens and human beings like the rest of us and are entitled to proper treatment.

In my official capacity as chairman of the committee on roads of the Young Men's Club and as a member of the road committee of the board of trade I devoted considerable time and attention to trying to solve the problem, and did this at a time when I was in bad health and entirely too unwell to try to handle the matter. I got no cooperation in my efforts and am inclined to think that most of the officials and representatives who were at the meeting held, and who afterwards participated in the discussion, disagreed with me as to the treatment that should be accorded to the Kingsland people. For this reason I long since decided that I would not take the initiative in any further proceedings connected with this matter.

With kind regards,

Yours very truly,

F. E. TWITTY.

Let me say just here to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that he will find, if he has not already done so, that the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Jacksonville, his State, are not willing to pay these gentlemen who constitute the Kingsland Bridge Co. any amount. In fact, this chamber of commerce had a representative at Brunswick when an adjustment of this entire matter was practically agreed upon; and later this chamber of commerce, I am advised, refused to help in any way defray the losses about to be suffered by the Kingsland Bridge Co., but began to vigorously insist upon the immediate passage of a bill which would prevent the Kingsland Bridge Co. from collecting any amount.

My recollection is that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] told me last year that the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce was not willing to help in this matter in any way.

That is that it was not willing to help pay any amount to the Kingsland Bridge Co., and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] when this matter was up two weeks ago made no offer to help the Kingsland Bridge Co. collect any amount and he never has stated that the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce or the State of Florida or anyone living in the State of Florida had ever offered to bear one penny of this expense with the Kingsland Bridge Co., although over $2,000 of the expenses of the Kingsland Bridge Co. was for right of way in the State of Florida through the lands of the Wilds estate, which estate for a long time had maintained a ferry at this point and did not desire a bridge of any kind.

The real truth is there is absolutely no necessity for the passage of the present bill, if the Kingsland Bridge Co. are to be treated fairly. This bridge company in order to settle this matter and in order to get a free bridge is willing to accept much less than it actually spent and less than it offered to settle for at first. I will state just here that I have always urged that the Kingsland Bridge Co. could afford to make a special sacrifice and lose a considerable amount of money in order to get a free bridge. I have never thought that these people ought to lose all. It is true that they are very few in number, but that does not prevent them having rights which should be protected. I repeat that if the Kingsland Bridge Co. is to be treated fairly then there is no reason for the passage of the present bill. The right of the Kingsland Bridge Co. to construct a bridge at this point can be transferred. This has been held by the War Department and by no less person than the present Chief Justice of the United States, the Hon. William Howard Taft.

He made this decision while he was Secretary of War. Why all of this argument and trouble about the present bill, if the Kingsland Bridge Co. are to be treated fairly? Why not pay them a third or a half of what they have spent and let them, as they are willing to do, transfer to the States the right to build this bridge? This can be done now. It could have been done at any time during the last year and a half that this matter has been up. Why was not it done? Simply because some of the people who got the Kingsland Bridge Co. to spend this money are not willing now to help them bear the sacrifice necessary in order to obtain a free bridge. Why is it necessary to pass the present bill? It is certainly not necessary in order to get a free bridge. The only purpose, and I am not charging the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], nor any other Representative, with being a party to this purpose; but the fact remains that the real purpose is to get this bill through so as to make the Kingsland Bridge Co. lose all.

The Kingsland Bridge Co. and the men constituting it have been accused of attempting to hold up the States. I deny this. They are willing to make a great sacrifice in order to get a free bridge, but they are not willing to sacrifice all. They feel like that others, who caused them to begin the enterprise, should bear part of the loss. Just here let me say that it is my understanding that the chambers of commerce of Savannah and Brunswick are willing to do their part. The real trouble comes from the city of Jacksonville and from the gentleman's own State.

Speaking of holdups, if this bill passes without the Kingsland Bridge Co. being treated squarely before its passage, then the Chamber of Commerce of Jacksonville will be in position to and, judging from its past course in this matter, will hold up the very people whom it was willing should undertake the construction of this toll bridge before a free bridge was hoped for.

The letter which I have just read into the Record of the Hon. F. E. Twitty shows how the Brunswick people feel about taking care of and treating properly the Kingsland Bridge Co. As further evidence of the good faith of Brunswick in connection with this matter I wish to read from a letter from the Brunswick Board of Trade, dated February 6, 1923, wherein the Brunswick Board of Trade in speaking about the question of raising the money to pay the Kingsland Bridge Co. used this language:

Speaking for the Brunswick Board of Trade and local civic bodies we have no hesitation in saying that we will find a way to contribute our proper proportion to this fund.

It will be remembered that Brunswick is the smallest one of the three cities in connection with this matter. As showing further the good faith of the city of Brunswick in connection with this matter and for the purpose of showing that the Kingsland bridge people are not working a holdup game, I wish to submit a letter from the Brunswick Board of Trade, dated January 12, 1924, and in the following language:

BRUNSWICK, GA.,
January 12, 1924.

Hon. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANKFORD: Referring to the attached letter to yourself and to a copy of the bill providing for the States of Georgia and Florida building jointly a bridge across the St. Marys River at or near Wilds Landing, I am sure that you are conversant with the facts relative to the Kingsland Bridge Co.'s endeavor to build such a bridge at one time, and that company's expenditures in perfecting their plans, buying the rights of way, engineers' costs, etc., and, of course, you will recognize the fact just as well as we do that some provisions ought to be made by which the Kingsland Bridge Co. can be reimbursed for what will naturally be a complete loss in dollars and cents to that company for the initial work that they did toward the construction of the St. Marys River bridge.

I simply draw this to your attention to assure you that whatever we can do to adjust this matter to the satisfaction of the Kingsland Bridge Co. will be done.

Yours most respectfully,

BRUNSWICK BOARD OF TRADE,
By FRED G. WARDE, Managing Secretary.

The good faith of the Kingsland Bridge Co. and the gentlemen constituting it has been attacked. For the purpose of showing that these gentlemen are proposing to act fairly I submit a letter from the Hon. Emmett McElreath, one of the gentlemen constituting the Kingsland Bridge Co. and attorney for the company, which letter is as follows:

KINGSLAND, GA., January 17, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANKFORD: I notice from newspaper articles that Congressman SEARS of Florida will at an early date introduce a bill in Congress authorizing the building of a bridge at Wilds Landing by the Highway Departments of Florida and Georgia.

I hope you will oppose this legislation until the rights of the Kingsland Bridge Co. has been properly taken care of. As you know, we have offered to transfer our rights, which includes right of way on both sides of the river and permit of War Department, to these highway departments for a sum of $1,000 less than we have actually expended in promoting this bridge enterprise for the purpose of getting a free bridge. There could be nothing fairer than this offer, as it shows our willingness to get out of the way so that a free bridge can be built without even getting back all that we have expended. You know the merits of our contentions and it is unnecessary for us to rehearse them to you. However, I will add that a large part of the money expended by us was done after consulting with the chairman of the Florida Highway Board, who personally and by letter encouraged us to proceed with our bridge project.

I hope you will use your good offices in getting this matter adjusted, as we are just as anxious to see a free bridge at Wilds Landing as any member of either highway board or anyone else and have contributed much more of time, energy, and money to make one possible than they have done, and in making the offer we have made we prove this assertion. I would be very sorry to see this project delayed for any cause, and no one would regret more than I the necessity for going into courts to adjudicate our very fair and substantial rights in the premises. I hope this can be avoided.

With very kind personal regards, I am

Yours very truly,

EMMETT MCELREATH.

Also the following letter from the Hon. Emmett McElreath, which also shows his attitude and the willingness of the Kingsland Bridge Co. to deal more than fairly in this matter:

KINGSLAND, GA., February 8, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANKFORD: I should have answered your recent letter earlier, but have been wrestling with a slight case of la grippe, and in addition to this Mrs. Casey, who is secretary and treasurer of Kingsland Bridge Co., has been away at the bedside of her father, who is seriously ill, and I have had no opportunity to get an additional statement for your use.

I know of my own knowledge that the said bridge company has paid the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars for right of way on the Florida side of the river, and that they paid one hundred and twenty-five for right of way on the Georgia side. It owns this land in fee simple and it is impossible for a bridge to be built at this point without using this right of way. I know nothing personally of the other expenditures of money, except that I have been paid $200 as attorney's fees, and I am willing to waive any further fees in order to get an adjustment. I certainly think that the very least that could be done for the Kingsland Bridge Co. would be to pay in full for the right of way, and I believe if an offer of this kind is made that I can get it accepted.

If this offer is not accepted by the highway department it will be necessary for them to take their chances in the Federal courts fighting an injunction before they build a bridge of any kind at Wilds Landing.

I feel sure that you are doing and will do all in your power to get amicable adjustment of our rights, and I appreciate your efforts.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

EMMETT MCELREATH.

It has been urged that the Kingsland Bridge Co. attempted to slip in and have constructed a toll bridge so as to prevent the building of a free bridge and so as to give the Kingsland Bridge Co. a monopoly. This contention is absolutely refuted by the letters which I have just submitted, which show that the Kingsland Bridge Co. was organized and began its work at the instance and request of the chambers of commerce and other civic bodies and people generally who preferred some bridge, even though it be a toll bridge, to no bridge. The Kingsland Bridge Co. has at all times been ready to step aside and allow the building of a free bridge. In substantiation of this I wish to quote from a letter written on August 9, 1922, by the Kingsland Bridge Co. to Judge H. B. Phillips, chairman of Florida road department, Tallahassee, Fla., and also the Hon. John N. Holder, chairman Georgia highway department, copies of which letter were sent to Senator Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, W. J. HARRIS, of Georgia, and DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, of Florida, and to myself, as follows:

We have just received from the War Department a permit to build a bridge at Wilds Landing. In view of the fact that there has been some opposition to the construction of a toll bridge at this point we desire to submit to the highway departments of the two States the following proposition:

If there is any bona fide intention on their part to build a free bridge at this point we will entertain a proposition to surrender and transfer to either or both of them our right and permit, and let a free bridge be built. The manner in which this proposition is received will be a test of the bona fides of the State departments with reference to this project. We will wait only a reasonable time for a reply to this letter as we expect to begin construction at a very early date.

I wish to state nothing was done of a definite nature to secure the transfer of the rights of the Kingsland Bridge Co. at that time and the Kingsland Bridge Co. went forward with the purchase of right of way and with the construction of approaches, and so forth, preparatory to the construction of a bridge.

A little later the chambers of commerce, of which mention was made a little while ago, took up the proposition of reimbursing in part the Kingsland Bridge Co. for the money spent by that company. It became quite evident that a free bridge could be secured, and, in fact, both States offered to cooperate in the construction of such a bridge. These negotiations have never terminated in an adjustment, as is indicated by what has just been said by me.

I wish to say that as soon as I found out that there were prospects of securing a free bridge I at once requested the Kingsland Bridge Co. to spend no more money on the toll bridge and informed these gentlemen that I would be fair with them and endeavor to help get back at least a small percentage of what they had spent. I told them they could not afford to put more money in the project when there was a possibility of their losing certainly a large part of it, and that it would not be fair to the chambers of commerce offering to settle with them for the Kingsland Bridge Co. to continue to increase the item in controversy. They have been criticized for stopping work on the bridge quite as much as they have been criticized for starting. It seems to me they have been fair and more than fair.

It has been urged that the Kingsland Bridge Co.—

saw fit to have a bill introduced in Congress and have it go through without any public notoriety of it, to be sure, giving them the right to build a toll bridge over the St. Marys River.

I wish to state in this connection that at the request of several people in my district I introduced in the House the bill to provide for the construction of a bridge by the Kingsland Bridge Co. I understood that the chambers of commerce of the cities of Savannah, Brunswick, and Jacksonville favored it. I was also informed that it was generally known in southern Georgia and northern Florida by people who were interested in the building of a road across the St. Marys River at Wilds Landing that such a bill was to be introduced in the House of Representatives and also in the Senate. This was done. Senator HARRIS introduced a similar bill in the Senate. Both these bills were introduced in the usual and ordinary way. The usual number of copies for use by the Members were printed; the usual notice of the pending of the bills by entries on calendars was made.

The usual and parliamentary procedure was carried out. The matter was taken up with the War Department and passed on by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. After the bill which I had introduced was recommended by the committee, I had it placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and before it came up for consideration on this calendar a similar bill introduced in the Senate passed the Senate, came over to the House, and was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. When my bill came up in the House, following the usual and ordinary procedure in similar matters, I asked unanimous consent that inasmuch as the Senate had passed a bill identical to mine, which had been referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which bill was then on the Speaker's table by my request, that the Senate bill be substituted for mine and be put on its passage and that my bill, the Senate bill having passed and the purpose of my bill having been accomplished, be laid on the table. In this way, the bill was passed by unanimous consent, there being no one present objecting to the passage of it. I gave the notice and publicity to the bill which is required by law. I do not remember whether the newspapers mentioned the passage of the bill or its pendency, but I am inclined to think that some of the dailies carried the item. The bill was not slipped through Congress. They can not be slipped through Congress, for they must be passed by well-defined rules of order and parliamentary procedure. I am sure that my people whom I represent should not be accused of getting this bill through without publicity. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] gave me no notice when he went to introduce the present bill. I do not blame him for this. I probably did not tell him that I was going to introduce my bill. I had no purpose to conceal what I was doing. I quite naturally inferred that he knew about the matter, as he had a right to infer that I would find out about his bill. I do not see why there should be any controversy about this matter.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] insists that he has called upon me for itemized statements of the expenditures of the Kingsland Bridge Co. He has on two or three occasions asked me about the amount of money spent by these folks. He has never at any time, though, told me that anyone whom he represents, either individual, chamber of commerce, or State, has agreed to reimburse the Kingsland Bridge people in whole or in part; neither has he ever told me that he would not insist on the passage of his bill until they were treated fairly. The matter of getting up a list of the expenditures is an easy matter and it will be forthcoming at once, and would have been furnished long ago had we ever had any bona fide offer to settle, made by the people whom the gentleman from Florida represents. I promise here and now in the presence of these witnesses that if the gentleman from Florida will have the Chamber of Commerce of Jacksonville or his State or anybody in his State to pay back to Kingsland Bridge Co. the money actually spent by the Kingsland Bridge Co. for right of way in the State of Florida alone, I will see that the people in Georgia do what is necessary to satisfy the Kingsland Bridge Co. for all other expenditures, and we will pass this bill by unanimous consent.

I will go even further and agree with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that if the people of the State of Florida will pay back to the Kingsland Bridge Co. one-half of the money spent by this company for right of way in the State of Florida that I will assume the responsibility of the other half being paid by the people of Georgia, and that the people of Georgia will also settle with the Kingsland Bridge Co. for all other money whatsoever spent by this company in this matter.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish again to repeat that I favor very much the building of a free bridge at Wilds Landing across the St. Marys River; by opposing the present bill I am not opposing a free bridge. I am only standing by promises which I made that if the Kingsland Bridge people would act fairly with all concerned that I would endeavor to see that they received just treatment. A free bridge will be built at this point regardless of whether the present bill passes or not. If the present bill does not pass, the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, other civic bodies in Jacksonville, and other people in Florida will pay their just part of the expenses incurred by the Kingsland Bridge Co. The people of Georgia will pay their just part, as they are willing to do, and the Kingsland Bridge Co. will suffer its loss, as it has from time to time so justly offered to do. Without the present bill passing the parties concerned can treat each other fairly, and the Kingsland Bridge Co. can and will transfer to the States the right to build a bridge under the present law, and all will be well. The present bill can serve no purpose except to enable some people who are not willing to bear their just portion of the loss which must be suffered to avoid any and all loss. In fact, the passage of the present bill and the throwing of the entire controversy as to the rights of the Kingsland Bridge Co., including the question of ownership of the right of way, into the courts for settlement will not help the matter, but will only bring about litigation and needless delay. The Kingsland Bridge Co. has its rights, which should be recognized and preserved. All parties concerned want a free bridge. The States are willing to build it. The National Government is willing to help in the enterprise. The matter in controversy is trivial, but, nevertheless, no one group of individuals should make too great a sacrifice. The enterprise is a great one and much needed. Let us treat everybody fairly, settle all seeming differences, and build a free bridge to be enjoyed by the people of both States and by the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this subject, without taking up the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOMESTEAD ALLOTMENTS, BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2879) to provide for the disposal of homestead allotments of deceased allottees within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the allotments of Blackfeet Indians designated as homesteads under section 10 of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 16), imposing restrictions on alienation, shall after the death of the original allottee be subject to partition, sale, issuance of patents in fee, or any other disposition authorized by existing law relating to Indian allotments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROADS, TRAILS, AND BRIDGES IN NATIONAL PARKS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3682) authorizing the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is rather a large order, it seems to me, and it seems we should have some suitable explanation of it before allowing it to pass the objection stage.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides for an authorization of an expenditure between now and June 30, 1927, at the rate of $2,500,000 for each fiscal year. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations will pass upon the estimates from year to year, and the park service will have to justify the estimates. It will also have to go through the Budget Bureau.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior transmitted this bill to me with the request for its introduction. It is really a departmental measure, and his position is well explained in his letter to me of December 10, in which he speaks of the very urgent demand for this legislation and dwells, as did Mr. Mather and Mr. Albright, representing the park service before the committee, upon the necessity for this legislation. He states that the roads in the various national parks, most of them built mainly for wagon-drawn vehicular travel—

Mr. TILSON. It does authorize the expenditure of $7,500,000, does it not?

Mr. SINNOTT. Over the three years between now and June 30, 1927.

Mr. TILSON. What has been going on heretofore? Have there been any improvements or any roads built?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, since 1872, the date of the creation of the Yellowstone National Park, the total expenditure by the Government has been only $3,504,100, and the States in which these parks are situated since 1915 have spent $23,828,800, and the State of Washington alone has spent $4,000,000 in making approaches to Rainier National Park. The Government has 20 miles of narrow, steep road in that park, without any parapet protection; a road so steep and narrow that they have to route automobiles up one hour and down another hour.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Eight million dollars on roads leading to the border line of the park.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The State of California has already spent nearly $2,000,000, and they now have under way an expenditure of $2,000,000 more for approach roads to these parks.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. The roads leading into the Rainier National Park, built by the State of Washington, are as fine roads as you will find anywhere in the United States, but the minute you cross the line into the park you will find as poor roads as you will find anywhere in the world.

Mr. SINNOTT. You get into the park and you wonder who constructed the park roads.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Can the gentleman give us an idea as to the amount of money collected from automobiles which go into the parks year by year, as compared with the amount of money that has been spent on the roads?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman will find that information on page 4 of my report on the bill. Page 3 shows the appropriation, $1,448,600, since 1916, and there has been collected in that same period from automobile licenses $1,511,233.55. The charge in some places is as high as $7.50 for a car to go on a road that is not surfaced, a road that is dangerous, a road that is dusty, and many of them traveled at the risk of their lives.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I would like to answer the question as to the $8,000,000 worth of roads built by the State of Washington and completed up to the border line of Rainier National Park. It costs nothing to travel on those roads, while just as soon as you pass into the park you travel over 18 miles of the rottenest road imaginable, and you must pay $2 for every vehicle.

Mr. BURTNESS. I understand that situation, but the point I was trying to bring out, if I am advised correctly as to the facts, was that even with the authorization provided for in this bill the likelihood is that with the increased traffic in the parks the automobiles themselves will pay for all the money authorized.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think interest will be paid at the rate of 10 per cent per annum on the total expenditures. Just consider this, gentlemen: In 1914, 10,000 automobiles went into our national parks and monuments, while in 1923 there were 271,482 automobiles; the number of visitors during the same time has increased from 235,193 in 1914 to nearly 1,500,000 in 1923. That represents the number of visitors to our national parks and monuments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I simply want to suggest the great importance of this matter of roads to accommodate automobiles, and that it applies to all the country as a whole and not necessarily just to the section immediately adjacent to the parks. In my visits to the parks I have been especially interested to see how people of moderate and small means from all over the country are coming to visit our national parks by automobile—people who could not afford to go otherwise. They get their car, fix up their camp equipment, and they go from Michigan or from Minnesota or from the South and make a round of the parks. I have a farmer friend at home who, with his wife, has taken a year in a trip of that kind, through the West, camping on the way. Now, they are the people of small means who want to see something of their country, and it is for them you are opening up the country and opening up the parks, when the States build such roads as they have, and when the National Government goes ahead and improves the roads in the parks.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this the Watkins' bill providing for the expenditure of $7,500,000 on these roads?

Mr. SINNOTT. The bill was introduced by myself at the request of the Department of the Interior. This merely relates to our national parks and monuments.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this the bill in behalf of which Mr. Watkins appeared before the committee and testified?

Mr. SINNOTT. He appeared before the committee and made a very able and eloquent argument in favor of the bill. He was very helpful with his able argument before the committee, as he has been on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason I call it the Watkins bill is that I was under the impression that he was the only man who testified in behalf of the bill before the committee.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there were several others who testified.

Mr. BLANTON. But he was the only Member of Congress, was he not?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there were other Members of Congress who testified.

Mr. WATKINS. I will say to the gentleman that I was one Member from Oregon who appeared in behalf of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It occurs to me the bill calls for the expenditure of a whole lot of money out there and a great deal of it will probably be wasted. I hate to vote against anything that is to be spent out in the Northwest.

Mr. SINNOTT. This is merely an authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. Especially when it is sponsored by such a distinguished gentleman as my friend from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Texas in response to his statement about the money being wasted. I do not believe there is any department of the Government where expenditures are more carefully scrutinized and where more of a return is secured for every dollar expended than under the park service in its road-building construction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman how this money is to be spent. What parks are to get the money?

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will turn to page 5 of my report, he will see a tentative allotment, which is the tentative allotments of the park service.

Mr. CRAMTON. Including $42,000 for Platt National Park.

Mr. SINNOTT. And this allotment will be reviewed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it contemplated this amount will be fixed in the appropriation bill? What arrangement will we have so that a Member will be assured that all of it does not go to one park?

Mr. SINNOTT. It goes before the Budget Board, in the first instance, and then before the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman will have his opportunity on the floor of the House.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have had a few opportunities of that kind before.

Mr. SINNOTT. And the gentleman can offer an amendment, and I am sure I will be glad to cooperate with the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will be glad to have somebody's cooperation. I have not had any before.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his administration of the National Park Service, is hereby authorized to construct, reconstruct, and improve roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That for such purposes, including the making of necessary surveys and plans, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, to be available until expended: The sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1924, and June 30, 1925; the sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926; and the sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to reserve from distribution to the several States, in addition to the 10 per cent authorized by section 5 of the act of November 10, 1921 (42 Stat. L., p. 213), not exceeding 5 per cent of the material, equipment, and supplies hereafter received from the Secretary of War, and to transfer said material, equipment, and supplies to the Secretary of the Interior for use in constructing, reconstructing, improving, and maintaining roads and trails in the national parks and monuments: Provided, That no charge shall be made for such transfer except such sums as may be agreed upon as being reasonable charges for freight, handling, and conditioning for efficient use.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize a program of road and trail construction, including bridges, within the national parks and national monuments extending over a period of three years, ending June 30, 1927, and involving a total expenditure of $7,500,000. This work is necessary in order to make these natural wonders accessible to the American people. The demand for it is demonstrated by the fact that the total number of visitors to the parks under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service has increased from 356,007 in 1916, the year after that service was created, to 1,280,866 in 1923. No record of visitors to the national monuments was kept prior to 1919, but that year there were 54,337 as compared to 221,826 last year.

A large part of this increase is due to the automobile. The latest estimate is that there are now about 13,250,000 passenger-carrying automobiles in the United States, an increase of over 1,000 per cent in less than 15 years. It is safe to say that there is not a single person in America who owns an automobile who has not somewhere in the back of his head the idea that he would like to take a trip and see the country. And every American will agree that the national parks provide the highest form of outdoor enjoyment. When it is made known that good roads have been provided so that the automobile tourist can go and return with comfort, increasing thousands will take advantage of the opportunities to visit the national parks.

As a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, I assisted in drafting the act to create the National Park Service. The wisdom of that law has been fully justified. Franklin K. Lane, the greatest Secretary of the Interior this country has had in a generation, was fortunate in securing the services of a man of vision and ability as the first director of the park service. The present administration is to be congratulated for retaining Stephen T. Mather in that office. He has sensed and carried out the almost universal desire that the national parks shall be not only preserved from desecration but actually made to serve the purpose to which they are dedicated, the enjoyment of the American people.

I can speak advisedly on this question because within the State of Arizona is to be found the most stupendous natural wonder in the world, a portion of which has been set aside as the Grand Canyon National Park. The people of my State want this park opened up by roads and trails so that all others may share its beauties and its glories with them. The Nation having reserved the Grand Canyon Park from exploitation is in duty bound to take the next step and make it accessible. From the funds authorized for expenditure by this bill $800,000 will be devoted to that purpose.

The details of the road projects within the Grand Canyon National Park, as stated in the hearings before the Committee on the Public Lands on this bill, are as follows:

I also aided in securing the enactment of the law creating the Grand Canyon National Park, a carefully prepared measure, which not only had the approval of the State and local authorities but of the people of Arizona generally. At the time the act was passed every vested right within the park was protected. That was particularly true of the Bright Angel Trail belonging to Coconino County. It was fully realized, however, that no matter how excellent the intentions of all parties concerned might be there was sure to be some friction between the Park Service and county authorities so long as the title to that trail remained in the county. The prime object of the law was to see that the public be properly served and, knowing that divided authority could not attain that end, the act authorized the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the purchase of the Bright Angel Trail.

I am happy to say that the solution of the difficulty over the Bright Angel Trail has been greatly advanced during the past year. The people of Coconino County fully realize the immense advantages that will follow from the construction of roads and trails to open the Grand Canyon National Park to the world. I venture to say that no citizen of that county, or of the entire State of Arizona, can be found who would seriously oppose appropriations by Congress for that purpose. Furthermore, I am sure that on reflection the vast majority of them will be more than willing for the county of Coconino to part with its title to the Bright Angel Trail as an aid to bringing about such development. They can be depended upon to meet the Federal Government in a spirit of fairness in this and all other matters.

It has been urged that the county of Coconino is without legal authority to sell the Bright Angel Trail. Anyone who will read the following provision of section 2418 of the Revised Statutes of Arizona can not fail to reach the conclusion that such an assertion is mere buncombe which will deceive nobody. The board of supervisors have jurisdiction and power—

To sell at public auction at the courthouse door, after 30 days' previous notice given by publication in a newspaper of the county, and convey to the highest bidder for cash any property, real or personal, belonging to the county, paying the proceeds into the county treasury for the use of the county.

Under the terms of that law of the State of Arizona the board of supervisors of Coconino County can make known its desire to sell by proper advertisement and the Secretary of the Interior can purchase the trail if he is the highest bidder for cash.

I am sure that no one will dispute the right of the board of supervisors to enter into contracts for the construction of roads within the county and to pay for the same with money from the county treasury. Therefore the board of supervisors can agree that the $100,000 paid into the county treasury by the United States for the Bright Angel Trail shall be expended in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior on the approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the Grand Canyon National Park. It may be that some one will be unwise enough to take this question into court, but the case will not stay in court very long because no judge will deny to the members of the board of supervisors the right to exercise the usual and customary powers which have long been conferred upon them by law.

The facts regarding the status of the Bright Angel Trail, the desirability of purchasing it by the Federal Government, rates being charged for trips over the trail, administration of the park, and similar data are not hard to obtain. The Interior Department publishes a booklet on the Grand Canyon National Park, describes its natural features, tells people how to reach it, and quotes rates for accommodations in the park. I have here the rates that were in effect in 1923, and these rates, so far as I know, are in effect to-day. They are practically the same as they were when the park was created five years ago. There have been some slight increases due to increased cost of operations, higher wages, higher food costs, perhaps higher taxes, because the State of Arizona and Coconino County can and do assess and collect taxes on property in the park. But these increases have been few in number and small in amount.

The Bright Angel Trail is not the approach to the rim of the Grand Canyon. It is the trail that leads from the south rim near the end of the railroad and the El Tovar Hotel down into the canyon to the Colorado River. The approach to the rim is by railroad, a branch of the Santa Fe system from Williams, a station on the main line of the Santa Fe, or by automobile road from the National Old Trails Highway, as it is usually called. This automobile-road approach is about 60 miles long. However, the county has no funds with which to build such a road. The county of Coconino is the second largest county in the United States, having an area of 18,498 square miles, less than 11 per cent of which is taxable, the remainder belonging to the United States. The following are the percentages of Government-owned lands divided as to types of reservations:

	Per cent.
Indian reservations.....	35.3
Forest reserves.....	31.2
Unreserved public lands.....	17.4
National park.....	5.0
Total Federal lands.....	89.9

The people of Coconino County feel that the United States, in view of its ownership of so much of the county, should build more of the roads that are needed and ought to maintain more of the highways across the public domain. This was brought to the attention of visiting members of the Appropriations Committee of the House last spring at the Grand Canyon. In a conference with the county officials a plan was approved to submit to Congress the proposal that if Congress would appropriate the sum of $100,000 and the county would sell the Bright Angel Trail to the Government for that amount, this fund would be used in the construction of an approach road which the county can not build because of lack of funds.

It was well understood that this fund of $100,000 would not complete this road and that other funds would have to be made available later. Perhaps $400,000 or more will be needed to make the approach road what it should be, and the amended provision that is now before the Senate contains unmistakable language to the effect that the United States is to take over and construct such a road to the park. The Federal Government will not only take it over and rebuild it as a good automobile highway but it will have the duty to subsequently maintain it as it does certain approach roads to the Yellowstone Park which the United States built at a cost of $517,000 and which it still maintains through the National Park Service.

No better thing could be done for the county than to authorize the construction of this approach road to the Grand Canyon National Park by the United States Government, because the park is a great economic asset to the county and to the State in that it attracts heavy travel from all sections of the country. Many tourists are potential settlers and investors, and we want more of them in Arizona. The people of Arizona want this approach road built. The county of Coconino and its citizens have, through commercial and social organizations, approved the plan to sell the Bright Angel Trail in order to obtain Federal cooperation on the road plan that is so vital to the welfare of the county. The county only receives a net income of $4,000 to $5,000 per year from the operation of the trail, not enough to maintain properly one-third of the approach road to the Grand Canyon National Park.

The Bright Angel Trail is owned by Coconino County. There can be no doubt of this ownership, and the county can give a good title to the trail. The case of Duffield v. Ashurst (100 Pac. Rep., p. 821) established this ownership. In the following provision in the organic act creating the Grand Canyon National Park (40 Stat. 1175) the rights of the county were recognized and protected:

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land, and nothing herein contained shall affect, diminish, or impair the right and authority of the county of Coconino, in the State of Arizona, to levy and collect tolls for the passage of livestock over and upon the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate with the said county of Coconino for the purchase of said Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail and all rights therein, and report to Congress at as early a date as possible the terms upon which the property can be procured.

The Secretary of the Interior, therefore, in endeavoring to acquire this trail has been acting under the directions of Congress as expressed in the law creating the park. Congress did not want this trail to continue in county ownership. This was a proper view to take, as it is the only toll trail in the entire national park system. The Bright Angel Trail should be in national ownership, but the county should be adequately compensated therefor.

In my opinion the proposition covered by the amendment placed in the Interior Department appropriation bill on the floor of the House would adequately compensate the county for its rights in the trail. The provision as amended in the House on March 11, and as it is now before the Senate, is even more advantageous to the county, in that it specifically authorizes the United States Government to build the road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of the park, and if accepted by the Senate will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to submit to the Budget Bureau each year until finished estimates for appropriations to construct this important highway.

As the situation now stands the county owns the Bright Angel Trail and can collect tolls for its use. It can not fix rates to be charged for use of saddle horses. It can collect as much as it thinks reasonable per horse for every animal taken over the trail, but it can not say to the owner of the horse what he shall charge a tourist to use the horse on the trail. The rates for the use of horses by visitors are fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and are published by him for the information of the traveling public.

The county has preferred to collect its tolls through the owner of the horses, Fred Harvey, so the average visitor to the park does not know that he is paying toll to the county, but, nevertheless, every visitor that uses the trail indirectly pays to the county $1. Therefore, if the United States should acquire the trail the rate per horse would be $1 less for the Bright Angel Trail trip than it is to-day. It would be $5 per day, including guide, instead of $6 per day. The county is not keeping the rates for this trip down. The rates could be raised now with the ownership of the trail still in the county if the Secretary of the Interior deemed a raise in these rates to be reasonable.

The concessionaire in the park which has the right to rent saddle horses for use on the Bright Angel Trail is Fred Harvey, the operator of the dining cars on the Santa Fe Railroad System and the eating houses along the route. This concern had saddle horses in the Grand Canyon region and on the Bright Angel Trail long before the national park was created. It now has the privilege of conducting saddle-horse parties on the park trails under a franchise which it obtained by virtue of being the "best and most responsible bidder," as provided in section 2 of the act creating the Grand Canyon National Park, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Grand Canyon National Park shall be exercised, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes": Provided, That all concessions for hotels, camps, transportation, and other privileges of every kind and nature for the accommodation or entertainment of visitors shall be let at public bidding to the best and most responsible bidder.

After the park was created the National Park Service advertised for bids for concessions under the above provision, and as a result of public bidding Fred Harvey received a franchise to operate hotels, transportation lines, saddle horses, and certain other services. The Babbitt Trading Co., of Flagstaff, a very well known firm, has received through such bidding the right to establish and operate a general store in the park, and other franchises along these general lines were granted under the authority of Congress as contained in the act establishing the park.

The National Park Service act mentioned in section 2 of the Grand Canyon Park act gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to grant such privileges for a period not exceeding 20 years.

This is the language used:

SEC. 3 (act of August 25, 1916, 39 Stat. 535). * * *. He may also grant privileges, leases, and permits for the use of land for the accommodation of visitors in the various parks, monuments, or other reservations herein provided for, but for periods not exceeding 20 years; and no natural curiosities, wonders, or objects of interest shall be leased, rented, or granted to anyone on such terms as to interfere with free access to them by the public.

The Secretary of the Interior, and his representative, the Director of the National Park Service, have been operating the Grand Canyon National Park under these provisions of law since 1919. The services provided for under franchise, regularly granted after advertisement and public bidding, have been adequate, and the rates have been reasonable considering the cost of bringing in materials and supplies which at the Grand Canyon include water for drinking and all other purposes. These rates are available to every visitor, and for parties of one or a hundred.

The enactment of the bill that is before the House to-day will ultimately make available for expenditure within the Grand Canyon National Park, in Coconino County, Ariz., the sum of $800,000 for roads and trails. The provision contained in the Interior Department Appropriation bill makes available $100,000 which Coconino County can use for the construction of an approach road to the park, or a total from the Federal Treasury of $900,000. In addition to that sum, such further expenditures as may be necessary to complete the approach road are authorized to be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

In exchange for these benefits the county is asked to transfer its title to the Bright Angel Trail to the United States. For the loss of an income from the trail of $4,000 or $5,000 a year the county obtains all these advantages and yet it is said that Congress is trying to "browbeat" Coconino County. I am confident that the citizens of that county will be delighted to submit to the same kind of considerate coercion for many years to come.

The bill that is now under consideration by the House should be promptly passed. I have every confidence that it will be enacted into law in ample time to allow the necessary estimates for the construction program beginning with the next fiscal year to be submitted to Congress next December by the Budget Bureau. The sum of $7,500,000 is a reasonable amount to authorize for this purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman from Arizona yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman think this sum will be sufficient for this purpose?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think the plan of road and trail construction as outlined by the National Park Service will make most of the parks and monuments accessible to the public. Of course, considering the tremendous increase in the number of automobiles in this country, the national park road system must be expanded from time to time, and the limitation in this bill does not necessarily mean that there will never be another dollar asked for this purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Would the gentleman have any objection to my offering an amendment to increase the amount to $15,000,000?

Mr. HAYDEN. The amount carried in this bill is all that the National Park Service has asked for and all that can be wisely used under the program as outlined by that service. When that program is completed I have not the slightest doubt but that Congress can and will make whatever additional appropriations may be required.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Would the gentleman have any objection to my offering such an amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Frequently I have been accused of securing appropriations of money out of the Treasury, but on this occasion I can see no necessity of making the authorization in excess of the amount asked for by the Park Service, which has the duty of expending the funds when made available by Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House: I know nothing about the specifics of this bill and I am not prepared to argue anything as to the accuracy of the proposed appropriation, but I have an idea or two in reference to the proposition as a whole. I believe that the Government of the United States can do more to attract to this country visitors from foreign countries by developing our system of national parks than by any other one move it can make. [Applause.] But that is not the most desirable feature of all. Some here have talked about representing some part of the country far away from most of the national parks. I think I can fairly make claim of living about as far away as any Member, and yet I would say to fellow Members of this House that in the miscellaneous correspondence which I have had since I have been here, on matters aside from such leading subjects as ways and means, and so forth and so on, no subject has been so much written of, no appeal has been so universally made from people in my part of the country, as a general support of these movements to develop national parks.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the Rocky Mountain National Park, located in my State, last year there were 51,800 automobiles coming in from all parts of the country.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not at all surprised, and you do not need to convert me. I had the pleasure last year of going through four or five parks, including the Rocky Mountain National Park, and I must say that I had a higher opinion of the resources of this great country after that trip than I ever had before, and if there is any one particular thing I want the members of my family, my children, and my friends to see, it is the system of national parks throughout the United States and Alaska.

I merely wish to add my word of approval for whatever it is worth, in a general way and along a broad line, and I do not care where the parks are situated. If the Interior Department continues to work, as it is working now, and will keep on developing our national parks, I do not care where they are located. They are directing national parks and are exercising splendid judgment and are opening fields for recreation, for fine health and a general enlightenment of what the country provides more effectively than any other department of the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Could not the gentleman tell us of the need for better roads in that section? I know that the gentleman was over some of those roads that are under improvement, and I would like to hear from him on that point.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, as I am appealed to as an authority on this subject, I shall go ahead. The gentleman is quite right. I have been over a good many hundreds of miles of those roads within a year. As to some of them, I might say that I was over them and then again that I was not. I was in some instances in places where the wheels went over the road but where my seat was over a precipice some two or three thousand feet deep. There are places where if we could widen those roads in many instances we would be sure of being able to keep the people in vehicles on them and over the roadbed all the time. If the project is worthy at all, it is worthy of being done well. At present the Interior Department is running the parks with a view to reasonable economy. The parks department has been constrained to make paths and roads where and as they could—not always as they wanted to but as they must. There are many places on those roads which are mighty narrow, and which, if it were not for the fine quality of direction of the parks and the splendid lot of young fellows whom they have there from the universities of the West and Northwest to operate public omnibuses, would be impossible for purposes of general, systematic transportation.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in the Yosemite National Park roads were built for private use at a cost of about a million and a half dollars. When the park was taken over those roads did not cost the Government anything. The approach roads have cost about two and a half million dollars. The same thing may be said with reference to the Lassen Volcanic National Park as to approach roads, as well as the other national parks. From testimony presented, as well as from observations of my own and of many others of us who have visited practically all of the parks, the amount of money—over $23,000,000—that has been spent by the various States alone, to say nothing about the enormous sums spent by the counties, for the purpose of building up these roads will make it so that people may enter the park with the greatest facility. When the parks are entered to-day, in most of them the roads are found to be in very bad condition for travel. Wherever people come from they appeal for the development of those roads in the parks. More people are turned toward these parks, and are therefore not going to foreign countries by virtue of having an opportunity of seeing the parks and their wonders.

There are some 18 parks, besides the numerous monuments, and the States and counties cooperating, as well as organizations expending their own private funds, are preparing right along and within a year you will have highways over which you may go from one park to another through the entire circle of the 18 parks, and in addition become familiar with the country lying between them.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would it not be wise to start the circle, we will say, from Hot Springs National Park?

Mr. RAKER. We have a road running from Hot Springs that will meet up with the circle when you get west about 1,500 miles. The amount of money spent in this work as compared with the amount of money expended generally on post roads, $540,000,000, and $43,000,000 for national forests, is very small. It is being expended by the Federal Government to protect this property, which is the grandest in the world. The Federal Government, in behalf of its citizens—not of any particular locality, but for every man, woman, and child in the United States—is doing a wonderful work. That property will be protected for the people of the United States and for their descendants, so that all may have some benefit from it. Congress could not spend money any more wisely than in the development of this property, which belongs to the Federal Government. This is appropriate legislation along the right lines. It had my best efforts before the Committee on the Public Lands. It was my pleasure to help bring it before the House, and I feel confident the Congress will, by its affirmative action, give its approval.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add my word of approval to this measure. We have listened to one gentleman from the East who says he is located about as far from a national park as it is possible for a man to be. I want to corroborate what he has said so much better than I could possibly say it. About four years ago, as some of the Members of the House know, we made an investigation of Indian affairs, and during that investigation we visited several of the parks and drove about 1,000 miles, by automobile and otherwise, over some of the roads which this bill proposes to improve. Certainly, as has been said here so many times, no money can be spent anywhere that will give more universal satisfaction to many people than by expending it in improving the roads through our national parks. Therefore I heartily favor this measure.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I want to add just a word about the national character of this question. I have been very much gratified by the testimony given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW]. For too long this has been considered merely a question of the West. These national parks are the most valuable possessions in the form of public lands still remaining to the United States. They contain within their area more scenery of the first order than is found elsewhere in all the world, and because of that fact these parks are being visited by rapidly increasing numbers of people.

I want, therefore, to present just one additional idea as to the need of this road system. Because of the road work that has been done by the States and because of the fact that these approach roads going into the national parks from every direction are bringing into the national parks, not merely tens of thousands, but hundreds of thousands of people in their automobiles every year, these roads within the parks have become entirely inadequate. More than that, they are becoming dangerous because of congestion. The Nation is inviting the people of the Nation and of the world to these parks, and it is the duty of the Nation to make the roads as safe for them as it is possible to do. That requires a development of the park-road systems to make them commensurate with the roads outside. I am glad to see that no objection to this bill has arisen upon the floor of the House, and that it is recognized to be a national question, and that these parks have come to be considered of such great national value. [Applause.]

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to thank the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from Texas for their magnanimity on this question, and while I am on my feet I want to say to the House that I do not believe that a man is really a good and thorough American citizen until he has seen the beauties of these great parks, especially in the far West. There are 19 of them. Now I simply want to submit a suggestion for the benefit of Members, and that is that during the coming summer instead of going into their own bailiwicks and playing politics that they come out and get an inspiration from these parks, which will make them not only better politicians, but better Americans.

Crater Lake was created, I believe, in 1902. It is located in the southwest part of Oregon and occupies the summit of the Cascade Range. It is ninth in size of all the parks and contains 249 square miles; Crater Lake itself is 6 miles in diameter. It is something that every citizen of the United States should see.

Since 1915 the State of Oregon has expended over $3,000,000 on roads leading to Crater Lake Park. Since 1915 the United States Government has expended about $300,000 within the park. During that time the annual revenue has increased from $1,359 in 1915 to $18,139 in 1923; and it is estimated that the revenue for 1924 will be between $32,000 and $35,000. The Government, of course, benefits by this increase.

During the last season, 52,117 people visited Crater Lake Park.

The annual revenues credited to Crater Lake National Park from 1915 to 1923 are as follows:

1918	5,595
1919	5,958
1920	8,327
1921	9,784
1923	18,139

So you can see from the standpoint of revenue it is a good investment, and from the standpoint of having a country which will instill in us a better Americanism it is likewise a good investment.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will yield, is it not a fact that over half of the membership which visit these parks are from the Eastern States?

Mr. MADDEN. And the Eastern States pay the money to build the roads.

Mr. RAKER. I am sorry my friend interrupted me in the splendid statement I was about to make—and they get the benefit of the use of these parks.

Mr. WATKINS. Exactly.

Mr. MADDEN. And the people of the Eastern States pay the bills.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would not expect Congressmen to go to parks outside this year except they—

Mr. WATKINS. I hope they will go, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will be one of them. Now I want to challenge the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the eastern people pay the bills.

Mr. MADDEN. They do.

Mr. WATKINS. The people of Oregon have paid their bills.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. WATKINS. Not only that, but they have furnished hotels in the parks and given free parking grounds, and if the gentleman does not believe that he can come out next summer and I will pay his own bill so that he can not go back and say that we do not pay our bills.

Mr. BLANTON. If they play poker out there with the gentleman they will pay the bill.

Mr. WATKINS. I do not play poker.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say a word on this bill, and I was perfectly willing to see it became a law; but I can not let the statement get by that these people out there are furnishing facilities in order that the people of the United States may see the beauties of the parks. The people of the United States themselves are furnishing the facilities, and 90 per cent of all the money paid for the construction of these roads is paid by Indiana, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois.

Mr. BLANTON. Northeast of Chicago.

Mr. MADDEN. And it is not paid by the territory through which the roads are constructed. I just wanted that to go in the Record. I am not opposing the construction of these roads or the appropriation, but I can not afford to let you people from the park regions run away with the statement and have it published in the Record that you are furnishing facilities which will furnish opportunity for the people of the rest of the United States to see the beauties of the national parks, and the hotels for the accommodation of the people who go there. Who built them? The Federal Government built them.

Mr. WINSLOW. Would the gentleman take any exception to going a step further and say that in addition to whatever these Eastern States do pay, with the few returns that come to them, they are very glad they can have these improvements?

Mr. MADDEN. We are glad to help, but we ought to get credit for what we do. I do not desire it shall go unchallenged on the floor of the House that they are furnishing all these facilities, building hotels, giving hotels free to the people of America, say, at $10 a day, or some such matter.

Mr. WATKINS. In view of the fact the gentleman has visited the great West—

Mr. MADDEN. Many times.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman say that he gets value received?

Mr. MADDEN. I think every place in America where an American goes he gets value received. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to reserve from distribution to the several States, in addition to the 10 per cent authorized by section 5 of the act of November 10, 1921 (42 Stat. L. p. 213), not exceeding 5 per cent of the material, equipment, and supplies hereafter received from the Secretary of War, and to transfer said material, equipment, and supplies to the Secretary of the Interior for use in constructing, reconstructing, improving, and maintaining roads and trails in the national parks and monuments: Provided, That no charge shall be made for such transfer except such sums as may be agreed upon as being reasonable charges for freight, handling, and conditioning for efficient use.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "the several States."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement just made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN] it is absolutely necessary now to pass this amendment because the several States, exclusive of New England, seem to have had nothing in the world to do with the $7,500,000 that is to be expended. It all comes from New England. It does not come from any of the several States, exclusive of New England.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a few minutes I will. There was a time when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] felt honored in being called a western man, hailing from a splendid western city, from a splendid Western State of splendid western people, because Chicago claims to be western. But since the distinguished gentleman from the West has been here a number of years and associated with the men from New England and has hobnobbed with them day and night and has eaten his meals with them in New England style and has played both the game of golf and politics with them, here and elsewhere, he has forgotten the western land of his nativity; he has forgotten his place of residence; he has forgotten the western people who sent him to Congress, and now it seems that it is all New England with him.

Mr. MADDEN. You come out there and try to find out whether they think I have forgotten them or not, and you will see.

Mr. BLANTON. He has only temporarily gotten off his reservation. He is western, and I am not going to let him get away from it.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is too valuable an asset to be from the West.

Mr. BLANTON. We of the West have got the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations from the West, and we are going to keep him from and of the West.

Mr. MADDEN. You are perfectly right, that we should give you everything we have got; but you are not allowing us to take anything away from you.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and where the West gets a dollar out of the Treasury the gentleman's New England friends get a million. It comes out West to us in little dribblets, but to New England it goes out in great big gobs.

Mr. TAGUE. What does that mean?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois understood me, even if my friend from New England did not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Last spring, when I was in the West, a western Member—very much western—and he is present now, gave his explanation of why the American dollar is round. He said it was made round so that it would roll from the Treasury toward the setting sun. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that silver dollar does roll there once in a while, but while it rolls West a thousand greenbacks are blown to the East, where the sun rises, not where it sets. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Did not a little of it roll toward New Mexico some time ago?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but all of the great West was ashamed of it. We do not claim that kind of western people. They are allens in our West.

Mr. VAILE. That was western money.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it did go West, but it was eastern money.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INVESTIGATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 181) creating a joint committee of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House to investigate the administration of Indian affairs in the State of Oklahoma.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if the facts he has set forth in his report would not warrant a bill being introduced right now to correct the same instead of appointing a committee of three Members from each body and spending $25,000 to find out the things he sets forth in his report?

Mr. CARTER. I hope the gentleman will not object. I hope he will reserve his objection. Of course, we can play the same game if he wants us to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], I will simply say that there has been a bill introduced which would correct many of these difficulties, but here is a proposition where the Government is the trustee of the estates of these Indians. In 1908 the supervision of probating the estates of these Indians was taken from the bureau and put into the Oklahoma courts. The Government retained only the right to have the probate attorney appear in the court without any authority.

Now, it is claimed by these people who made this investigation, and who make these charges, that the Government is not doing its duty, and it is claimed also that the courts of Oklahoma are not only not doing their duty but are actually defrauding these Indians. It is claimed also that the Indian is the common prey of everyone, so that the Government is attacked, and the Congress is attacked, and the courts of Oklahoma are attacked. What we are proposing to do here is to ascertain whether or not these statements are true.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. In a moment. If it is true that the probate courts of Oklahoma are handling these probate matters and of guardianship cases in the way it is claimed, the law should be changed at once, so that the Indians can be looked after as they should be. I am not responsible for these conditions, and—

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The last time the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] investigated the Indians he investigated all the Indians, not merely the Indians of Oklahoma, and his committee with nine members cost the Government $6,000. Now he is asking for $25,000 to go only to Oklahoma with his committee at a cost of about four times as much.

Mr. CRAMTON. Three of them belong to another body.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that is no excuse for spending four times as much.

Mr. SNYDER. Things have changed in the four years. We have now gotten where investigations cost money. Neither the gentleman from Texas nor anybody would be satisfied with an investigation unless it was a good one.

Mr. BLANTON. You do not need expensive attorneys and stenographers, and so forth.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman and then I desire to make an observation.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman's question of the chairman, that the so-called report he has made on the bill he has drawn only applies to one nation, but there has been no investigation made of the Five Civilized Tribes, where all but one of these charges are made.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to make the observation that we have had countless investigations made by various committees on various subjects and to my direct knowledge not very many of them have produced concrete results. I will vote any appropriation the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] wants for his committee to make a special investigation, but unless some argument can be offered that has not been offered I will be constrained to object.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think I can give him some light on the subject.

Mr. BEGG. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. I will go with the gentleman from Ohio, with the gentleman from New York, or with any other gentleman in the House as far as anyone to protect the rights of the Indians, but I want to know, and I think I have a right to know, what I am about when I undertake such a proposition. What is the situation here? Certain persons representing certain so-called philanthropic institutions claim to have made an investigation of probate conditions in the State of Oklahoma. No one in this House knows with what thoroughness, or even fairness, this investigation was made. A reading of the report warrants the assumption that it was a purely ex parte investigation. What I want to get at is the facts, and this resolution clothes the joint committee with full power to do that very thing.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that this report charges every crime from rape down.

Mr. CARTER. I think so.

Mr. BEGG. It seems to me that is an indictment of the officials of Oklahoma.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. And also of Congress.

Mr. BEGG. No; not of Congress. I believe everything can be rectified if the law will be changed so as to take away the administration of Indian affairs from local communities.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. BEGG. I do want to be fair. If the gentleman and his committee chairman can not find out whether these things are accurate without an expenditure of $25,000 through a new committee, then it seems to me we are in a bad state.

Mr. CARTER. Let me say this to the gentleman: This is an indictment not only of the courts of Oklahoma, but of the Indian Bureau itself and an indictment of Congress itself.

Listen to this:

The act of May 27, 1908, also provided:

"That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottee's lands: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee."

Then the report goes on to tell how that worked out. The act he referred to there was passed by the Congress of the United States. He calls it the "crime of 1908." The bill was drafted by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, and sent to Congress for passage. Now, it is an indictment not only of the State of Oklahoma—although he claims not—but it is an indictment of the Indian Bureau itself, an indictment of Congress itself, and an indictment of every gentleman who was here at that time.

Mr. BEGG. May I ask the gentleman whether the Indian Bureau has no facilities whatsoever for ascertaining the correctness of these statements?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; they can ascertain them to a certain extent.

Mr. BEGG. And if they are as stated in this report, can they not draft another bill without sending out a special committee?

Mr. CARTER. They might to a certain extent; but any investigation they might make must certainly be considered ex parte, for they could not otherwise investigate themselves. Mr. Speaker, when serious charges like these are filed against our Government, against Congress, and against a sovereign State of this Nation, there is but one thing to be done, and that is to bring those who make the charges before some responsible tribunal qualified to swear witnesses, bring in the accused, and then, in true American fashion, make them testify face to face, giving each the right to look the other squarely in the eye. [Applause.]

Only one case is cited from the district which I have the honor to represent and that is the case of Ledcie Stechl. Let me call my friend's attention to some of the statements in the report with reference to this case. At page 11 of the report is cited what is called the "Crime of 1908" as follows:

That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottees lands: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee.

This removed all Federal supervision of the sale of inherited lands by full-blood (and, of course, incompetent) heirs and gave jurisdiction in the premises to the local county probate courts.

The conclusions with reference to the Ledcie Stechl case at page 28, makes the following complaint:

The court has already appointed a guardian for the grandmother against her vehement protest. She, too, will go the way of her grandchild, as sheep for slaughter by ravenous wolves, etc.

Now, my friend from Ohio is a lawyer. I want him to take due notice of the language on page 11 which recites that this act referred to as the "Crime of 1908" removed all Federal supervision from the sale of inherited lands by full-blood heirs and gave jurisdiction in the premises to the local county probate courts. I would like to know what better procedure a probate court could take for the protection of an incompetent than the appointment of a guardian. Certainly, if a guardian had not been appointed, this poor incompetent woman would have been permitted to dispose of her valuable possessions at any paltry sum that might be accepted. I am reliably informed that a representative of the Indian Bureau recommended the appointment of a guardian. The report further says the guardian was appointed against her vehement protest. Certainly, if an incompetent person wants to squander his property, he will protest vehemently against any character of restraint and that is what the guardianship certainly was in this case. But there was another and just as potential reason for the appointment of this guardian which information our friends who make this report for some reason refused to give to the public. Various and sundry people had undertaken to get large contracts amounting to 50 per cent of the entire estate for representing this incompetent in different capacities. One of these contracts, it is reported, was held by a brother of a certain lady operating an Indian school to which the child had been spirited away without the consent of the guardian. I do not know whether our friends who make this report purposely concealed this information from the public or not, but it is certainly not given in any portion of their treatment of the question.

Now this is the only case reported on from the district which I represent and is therefore the only case on which I have any information. The guardian referred to is Jordan Whiteman, president of the First National Bank at Idabel, a respected citizen in that community. The county judge who appointed this guardian over the vehement protest of the incompetent is Thomas G. Carr of Idabel. I have known him for years and this is the first word of reproach I have ever heard against his good name. Not a man who ever knew Tom Carr would attempt to bring any charge of dishonesty against his character. He is honesty personified and intensified. I would trust his honesty as far as I would the honesty of any man I know. He has made a clear, fair, and impartial statement of this matter, and with the permission of the House I will place it in the Record at this point:

IDABEL, OKLA., February 13, 1924.

HON. C. D. CARTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In re Ledcie Stechl, Indian rights committee, etc.:

There has been considerable talk and newspaper report concerning the Ledcie Stechl case, and I have kept quiet and tried to attend to my own business and let the Republicans scrap the matter out among themselves, but since the Indian rights committee has commenced a series of articles in the newspapers and I notice have had the matter up with you I feel that it is my duty to speak and advise you as to what I know about the matter.

Ledcie Stechl's mother, who was a full-blood Indian living in this county up near Smithville, died, owning some land in Carter County, and left two small children. Later one of these children died. A few years ago oil was discovered on 20 acres of the land in Carter County, 10 acres of same being homestead, and 10 acres being surplus, as I understand the matter.

An uncle of Ledcie was appointed her guardian by Judge Parks, my predecessor, and a department oil lease was given on the land in Carter County, and same proved to be very valuable.

For some reason about three years ago the uncle either resigned or was removed as guardian and Mr. W. J. Whiteman, of Goodwater, was appointed. Before the uncle was removed, however, he had sold some of the lands in this county, receiving a few hundred dollars for same, and had loaned out most of the money.

After Mr. Whiteman was appointed guardian he allowed the ward to remain at Smithville with its grandmother, Nellie Stechl, and informs me that he had no funds with which to support them except as he could collect of the money that had been loaned out by the former guardian. He states further, as I remember it, that he went to Muskogee and took up with the superintendent the question of support of this minor—the oil lands at this time having become very productive and the income to the minor being about $100 a day and something like $30,000 having been accumulated and being under the supervision of the superintendent—and he states that the superintendent advised him that the application would have to come in the regular way; that is, make application and get the county judge and the probate attorney to recommend the same. He states that he came home and took the matter up with the county judge and made the application, and the county judge approved the same, and he forwarded the same to the probate attorney and never did hear anything more from it; that he waited quite a while on the application, and not hearing anything from it that he then made application to sell the 10 acres of surplus oil land in Carter County, and then the department came in and agreed to advance him the sum of $200 a month for the support of the minor if he would abandon the sale, which he did. This I think was in the latter part of the year 1922.

I think the evidence will show that the old grandmother, who had the ward, did not want to move away from Smithville, and had no means of support, and Mr. Whiteman did not want to separate them, so he let them remain at Smithville, renting her a house in Smithville and advising her to let him know when she needed anything; also advising Mr. Kleckler, the banker there, by whom she lived, to see after her, and also advising the field clerk to visit her when in that community and see if she was in need, and if so to notify him.

I went in office as county judge on the 8th of January, 1923, and I heard nothing of the matter until along about March, when the guard-

Ian took up with me the advisability of taking the ward and her grandmother to Paris, Tex., to have them examined to ascertain the condition of their health, and especially as to tuberculosis, as the mother of this ward had died with that disease, and the grandmother had diseased eyes and was nearly blind. I advised the action, so they were brought down here, and Mr. Whiteman and an interpreter went with them, to Paris and had them examined, and I understand that the examination showed that the child was undernourished. They came back to Idabel, and I was informed that a representative from the Muskogee office wanted them to remain here until he could come down and see them. The old lady came to see me and wanted to go back to Smithville, but I advised her that it would be best to wait a day or two longer until the representative came.

A day or two after that I saw a stranger around about town and learned upon inquiry that it was a Mr. Farver, from the superintendent's office at Muskogee.

A day or two later Mr. Whiteman came to me and advised me that some one without his knowledge or consent had taken the ward away from the place that he had her here in Idabel and he was not sure where she had been taken, but thought that she had been carried to the Wheelock School, and I advised him that he was her guardian and was responsible for her and he had better see after her. That afternoon he informed me that he had been out to Wheelock and found the child there and had taken her and had sent her back to Smithville to the home of Mr. Cleckler.

A day or two after this Mr. Farver in company with Mr. Q. Herndon came out to my home at noon to see me. Mr. Farver stated that he had not consulted with Mr. Whiteman in regard to placing the girl at Wheelock; that he was with Mr. Whiteman nearly all the morning of the day that he, Farver, took her to Wheelock, and he kept thinking that Mr. Whiteman would mention the matter to him but that Mr. Whiteman did not and he never mentioned it to Mr. Whiteman. I suggested that inasmuch as Mr. Whiteman was the guardian it was his duty if he wanted to make a change to mention the matter to Mr. Whiteman. He stated that when he left Muskogee that he was led to believe that everybody was willing for the child to go to Wheelock except the old grandmother, and that his mission was to get her to agree and that when he got her consent he carried the child to Wheelock. He wanted to know if I had any objection to the child being placed in Wheelock if it was all right with Mr. Whiteman. I told him that this child was amply able to pay her way and have the best of attention, and should be in some good private home where she could get even better training than she would get at Wheelock, and that her being at Wheelock would crowd out some orphan child that had no home and no one to see after them, as the school was crowded, but that it would be all right with me to place her there temporarily. I heard no more of the matter until about 30 days later Mr. Whiteman told me that he was going to get the child and take her to his home until he could find a satisfactory place for her, so I told him that would be all right with me, but to get a good private home for her as soon as he could.

Some time after that Mr. Whiteman informed me that the child was sick and asked my advice on sending to Paris for Doctor McQuestion; in fact, said that he had put in a call for him but that he could not come.

I advised him to get a nurse for her. Two days later I learned that she was dead. The next day Mr. Drake, United States probate attorney, called me up over the phone and said that he had heard that she was dead and had instructions to investigate her death, and asked me what doctors had attended upon her and I told him and he asked me to see them.

I went immediately to see Doctor Williams, and learned from him that she had congestion, I think it was, caused from malaria; that he and Doctor McBrayer, of Haworth, had attended upon her and that everything was done to save her life that could be done.

A few days later I learned that Ledaie had left a half-sister, a minor, and that the half-sister was claiming the estate and that grandmother, Nellie Stechl, was also claiming it. I also learned that Mrs. Breeding, superintendent of Wheelock School, had taken the old grandmother, Nellie, and the half-sister and her mother and her guardian to Muskogee.

About a week later Mr. R. B. Drake, United States probate attorney, and Mr. E. O. Clark, Choctaw national attorney, came in and took up with me the matter of the appointment of a guardian for the old lady Nellie Stechl, stating that she had been up to Muskogee and they had decided that she should be protected. I informed them that I had just recently read an article purporting to come from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in which he was opposed to appointing a guardian for incompetents, and suggested to them that if she should prove up to be the heir that the estate was restricted and that they could protect her. They informed me that the superintendent could protect the funds which he had, which was something over $100,000, but that if she should execute a deed to the real estate and the court should approve the same that there would be no appeal, and that she had or was liable to sign several contracts employing attorneys to represent her, and that she was in fact incompetent. I had them to bring her in before the petition was filed and she indicated that she wanted a guardian.

On this same day the guardian of the minor half-sister presented to me a contract employing a Mr. Hancock to represent her in protecting her interest, which contract provided for 50 per cent of the amount recovered.

I had never heard of Mr. Hancock and made inquiry and learned that he was a brother to Mrs. Breeding who took them to Muskogee, and did not pass on the contract that day but told them that I would not approve a 50 per cent contract with anyone to represent the minor.

A few days later Mr. Hancock appeared in person and asked me to pass upon his contract and either approve or disapprove the same, so I disapproved the contract and handed same back to him.

When the application for the appointment of a guardian for Nellie Stechl was filed by Mr. Drake, United States probate attorney, I then began to cast about in my mind for some one who would be suitable to act as guardian, and whose honesty and integrity could not be questioned in the event I found that she needed a guardian. I finally decided upon Mr. Q. Herndon and went to see him and asked him if he would act, and he informed me that he would. I then informed Mr. Drake that I had decided to appoint Mr. Herndon in the event I appointed a guardian. Immediately after this the Indians were taken again to Muskogee, but returned on the day for hearing the petition. At this hearing Mr. T. W. Hunter appeared for the old lady and resisted the appointment of a guardian, and it developed at the hearing that while they were at Muskogee the first time Mr. Hunter was also there, and she had made a contract with him agreeing to give him 50 per cent of the amount recovered to represent her, and it also developed that she had also given Robert E. Lee a contract before she left Smithville for Muskogee. In fact the proof showed that she had signed every paper that had been presented to her, and I found her incompetent and appointed Mr. Herndon guardian for her, and Mr. Hunter, for her, appealed from my decision to the district court.

It also came to me that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had been informed that I was going to put one of the old ring in as guardian, and he decided it was best to not have a guardian. I do not know how true this is, but you can get that information from him, and if he received such information you can ascertain from whom he received it.

As soon as I had appointed the guardian Mr. Hunter immediately filed suit in Carter County for Nellie Stechl for the possession of the land, and I understand that the suit is now pending.

When the guardianship matter came up for hearing on appeal in the district court, Roscoe Drake, a brother of R. B. Drake, the United States probate attorney, who filed the petition for guardianship, appeared in the case with Mr. Hunter resisting the appointment. Mr. R. B. Drake stated to the court that the department felt that she should have a guardian, but felt like giving her the privilege of selecting her guardian and took very little part in the hearing, leaving the matter to Mr. Herndon and his attorney, and the district court found her competent and reversed the lower court, and that is how the matter stands at this time.

This, I think, will give you some idea of the matter, and I think if a fair, impartial investigation is made the facts will develop about that way.

Yours truly,

T. G. CARR.

Yes, Carr insisted on the appointment of a guardian. Why? He wanted a guardian appointed so this poor incompetent woman might not be defrauded of her birthright for a mess of pottage. He wanted a guardian appointed so that the 50 per cent contract of this Mr. Hancock, brother of the lady operating the Indian school, might not be approved. He has done everything he could to protect this helpless person and he deserves the praise rather than the condemnation and denunciation of those who have undertaken to defile his good character.

I am sure the gentleman from Ohio will not dispute my statement of the facts, and after this statement of the case I do not believe the gentleman from Ohio himself would favor taking jurisdiction away from such helpless people as the courts might afford.

Let me ask the gentleman's attention to that part of page 11 of the report which is denominated as the "crime of 1909." The "crime of 1909" refers to the passage of the act of May 27, 1908. In making this report they undertake to indict the then serving Members of Congress for what they call the "crime of 1909." This is the removal of restrictions act, which after a conference between all members of the Oklahoma delegation and the Secretary of the Interior, was drafted by the Solicitor of the Interior Department and sent to the House Committee on Indian Affairs for introduction by the then chairman of that committee, James Sherman. As the one House Member of the Oklahoma delegation still left in Congress I willingly assume my share of responsibility, but the point is that the bill represented the best judgment not only of the Interior Department but of President Roosevelt himself. As a matter of fact, President Roosevelt's recommendation was that Congress go a good deal further than they did in the way of removal of restrictions.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two. This problem is very similar, is it not, to the problem which was before the Committee on Indian Affairs and on which the committee held hearings for a couple of weeks last winter, at least in so far as it pertains to the Osages?

Mr. SNYDER. Not exactly; no. It is quite different. The Osages have legislation that applies to the Osage Tribe alone and does not affect other Indians in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. BURTNESS. I realize that.

Mr. SNYDER. It happens that in 1908 the Congress took from the Indian Bureau the authority that it gave to the probate court. Now, here is what happened—

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not care particularly about what happened; but this is the situation, is it not, that in the last session of Congress hearings were held by the Indian Affairs Committee for a couple of weeks with reference to this situation among the Osages, and the committee recommended legislation, which was included in the omnibus bill, and this House passed legislation which was regarded by the Committee on Indian Affairs and by the House as sufficient to remedy such evils as might exist down there, which are doubtless exaggerated?

Mr. SNYDER. We have on the calendar now about four bills below this one, a bill modifying that act, in which we have restricted to a much greater extent than we attempted to do when we passed the act of 1921, or at the time the gentleman refers to—

Mr. BURTNESS. In other words, there is now upon the calendar legislation reported favorably by the committee with a view to correcting evils which are existing. Why, then, just because some people—

Mr. SNYDER. So far as the Osages are concerned.

Mr. BURTNESS. Why, just because some people think they should be the guardians of all the public and come in and make some loose charges which they are not ready to substantiate—why turn around and spend the public money for such a purpose?

Mr. SNYDER. The legislation we are talking about which is on the calendar applies to the Osages only.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] has perhaps forgotten that the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osages both are the subjects of special legislation by Congress. The Five Civilized Tribes are dealt with in a different manner from the Osages, and the Osages are dealt with in a different manner from other tribes. It was necessary to pass this legislation that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has spoken of with reference to the Osages—

Mr. BEGG. Would the gentleman be willing to pass this over?

Mr. CARTER. Let me finish this sentence, please. To pass this legislation on account of the large property interests of the Osages, they having an income of $12,000 per annum per capita, man, woman, and child. Other tribes have no such interests that have to be protected, and therefore it is necessary to have different legislation for the different tribes.

Mr. BURTNESS. And that is all within the jurisdiction of the committee?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. Let me just say a word. This legislation will not correct the difficulty that is referred to by these investigators. It will simply provide that these Indians shall go back again under the jurisdiction of the bureau and will not correct the robbing and thieving and the destroying of the estates which has taken place since 1908.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman is of opinion, then, that there is a great deal of warrant for these objections?

Mr. SNYDER. I think there is every warrant for them, and I think it will be shown that the matters of these guardians and wards have been handled very badly, indeed. If the gentleman will look into the matter, he will see that it is a common thing to spend $10,000 of a ward's money for a funeral.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If the court has fixed the attorney's fee at $10,000 on account of the estate of some dead Indian two years ago, how is your investigating committee going to get back that $10,000 from the estate? I would like to ask somebody that question.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know of any way you can get it back.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. You can not get it back. You can only make such corrections as are necessary so that it will not happen in the future.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman yields to me, that not only is this investigation necessary by reason of the report made by the Indian Rights Association, which slanders Congress and the citizenship of Oklahoma, but I want to say that I am prepared to prove before that committee that in the last three years there has been dissipated through the mismanagement of the Indian Bureau of the department down here many times more money than has been spent on guardianships in Oklahoma, and for the protection of the Indians from the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Interior Department, this investigation is necessary, if from no other standpoint, and as a citizen of Oklahoma, the State that has been slandered by this report, I ask an opportunity to prove this charge.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman realizes that this same investigating committee recommends that the Indians be put back under that bureau.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will not the gentleman from Ohio yield to me before he objects?

Mr. BEGG. I do not object to doing that.

Mr. CLARK of New York. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes. I want to discuss the resolution that has just been passed over.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made.

Mr. HASTINGS. I understand that; but I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that any objection has been made to the present consideration of this joint resolution. I assure the Members of the House that I not only reflect my own sentiments but the sentiment of the entire Oklahoma delegation when I say that we are willing here and in Oklahoma to correct any alleged irregularities that may be practiced against the Indians. Some two or three weeks ago a pamphlet was published and circulated throughout the country, and the facts therein stated were supposed to have been obtained in an ex-parte investigation by certain representatives who went quietly and secretly around in Oklahoma. We did not know anything about it until the pamphlet was published. What did the Oklahoma delegation do? We wanted to show to this House and to the Congress, we wanted to show to the country, that we did not approve of any such irregularities as were outlined in this ex-parte report. At once, through Mr. CARTER, the dean of our delegation, we introduced this resolution in order that these ex-parte statements might be fully and honestly investigated.

In addition to that, the delegation telegraphed to the governor of our State and in brief told him of the charges that had been made reflecting upon the courts and the citizenship of Oklahoma, and at once the governor wired back to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the attorney general of the State of Oklahoma was at his command, that if he would turn over any specific proof to the attorney general, showing any irregularities on behalf of any present county judge, he would instruct the attorney general to cooperate and see that ouster proceedings were brought. The attorney general came to Washington and offered the services of his office to the Indian Office.

There is a vastly different situation between an investigation in Osage County and this investigation. The Osage Indians occupy but one county in Oklahoma. Therefore, it is a comparatively easy thing to investigate alleged irregularities there, but the Five Civilized Tribes occupied what is now divided into 40 counties in eastern Oklahoma. Hence, you can not investigate charges in so large an area so quickly and so easily and at long range. Again, this resolution contemplates an investigation of a large number of cases not specified in certain counties, without stating what counties, and we say that the report is a reflection upon our State.

In addition to that, let me say there has been a bill introduced which has for its purpose the changing of the probate law in Oklahoma. The Oklahoma delegation says that it is necessary to definitely fix the responsibility for these alleged irregularities. They are made here upon ex parte statements by people who went there quietly and secretly throughout eastern Oklahoma, and we challenge the truth of these statements and ask for an investigation. You could not expect the members of the Oklahoma delegation to stand on this floor and support legislation that radically changes the probate law of our State without having some opportunity to make an investigation. We insist on a fair, full, and impartial investigation. Let it be public. Let us examine the records. They can not be brought here. Let us give everyone a chance to be heard. We want nothing concealed. We condone no wrong. This investigation will also disclose whether the representatives of the department are alert, competent, and efficient. Why not get the facts? We can get them if this resolution is passed. The delegation does not approve of an investigation 1,500 miles away upon an ex parte hearing and without giving the people of Oklahoma an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue with the call of the Consent Calendar.

SAGINAW, SWAN CREEK, AND BLACK RIVER BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 694) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River Band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes," be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any suit or suits under this act shall be begun within three years after passage hereof by the filing of a petition to be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the claimant Indians under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in accordance with existing law. The compensation to be paid such attorney or attorneys shall be determined by the Court of Claims and shall not exceed the sum of 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall such fee or fees exceed the sum of $25,000, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due the Indians."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TUITION OF INDIAN CHILDREN IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4835) to pay tuition of Indian children in public schools.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object, although I shall be very glad to withhold if the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], whom I see on his feet, desires to make an explanation.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some explanation. The situation is this. Two hundred thousand dollars annually have been appropriated for the pay of tuition of Indian children in public schools. The necessity for increasing that amount is recognized in the appropriation bill of this year, and it is increased to $350,000, because of the increased number of Indian children requiring tuition. Back in 1921, 1922, and 1923, the choice rested on a number of school districts in which there were Indian children, of allowing these children to enter the schools and be educated at the expense of the districts, with the expectation that the cost was going to be provided for, or denying the Indian children schooling.

As a result of that the expenses were run up in the case of a number of school districts, to the amount back in 1921 of $11,164.80, and in 1922 to $4,198.50. In 1923 the Indian Bureau estimates it to amount to about $20,000. There were appropriated in the bills for 1921, 1922, and 1923, certain funds for the education of these children in Indian schools on the reservations. All that is being asked in this bill in regard to the years 1922 and 1923 is that the unexpended portions of those appropriations already made may be expended to pay for the tuition of those same children in the public schools, where they were educated instead of in the Indian schools as expected by the bill. There is left of the appropriation of 1922 and still available over $55,000. For that year the total estimated expense under this measure will be only $4,198.50. There are ample funds, and there will be no new appropriation whatever. In 1923 the estimate of the bureau is that there will be required about $20,000, whereas there is left unexpended at the present time $64,722.37 that was appropriated for the education of these children. It would require a reappropriation of something over $11,000 out of the appropriation of 1921. This bill authorizes that, but does not make the appropriation, and you will find that the report of the Indian Bureau is to the effect that although no contracts were entered into during this year there is a moral obligation resting on the Government to pay these amounts.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent from the statement of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], as well as from the bill and the report, that the passage of this bill would not give one dollar's additional schooling to one additional Indian child.

It is, in fact, a deficiency appropriation bill. There is a proper way for the consideration of a deficiency appropriation bill. Furthermore, in regard to deficiencies, generally speaking, there has been a great tendency of late by the Congress to guard against them. If granted at all, they should only be granted upon careful examination of exact figures. The language in the bill gives the department sled-length authority with reference to unexpended balances appropriated for other purposes. The gentleman from Montana speaks about these unexpended balances as if taking money from these unexpended balances did not cost us anything. As a matter of fact, that money is in the Treasury and will not be expended except by authority of this bill or in some proper deficiency appropriation bill. I sympathize with the idea of educating Indian children in the public schools, and I was glad this year it was possible for the fund for that purpose to be increased, but I am not so enthusiastic about running back one, two, and three years to make donation to some white school districts for what is over and gone.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will.

Mr. CARTER. How much would this cost?

Mr. LEAVITT. I have given the figures, but I have the figures from the Indian Bureau to the effect that the exact figures for 1921 would be $11,164.80, and for 1922 they would be $4,198.50. Now they can only make a rough estimate about 1923 and that is because of the fact that some contracts perhaps have not yet been reported, but their estimate is $20,000 for that year.

Mr. CARTER. That makes a total of some $35,000, I think?

Mr. LEAVITT. Approximately that. Let us not forget this in connection with the amount spoken of as having been appropriated for the education of these children not in the public schools; $200,000 is appropriated for the education of those children in the public schools this year. That was not sufficient and therefore they could not enter into contracts in some of these districts, and the only question open then for the education of those children was for school districts to admit them to the public schools with the understanding and expectation that funds would be available. Then under the contract for education in the public schools the funds were exhausted, but there was a remainder left in the fund that had been appropriated to educate them in the Indian schools and this is to permit the tuition of these children in the public schools out of funds already authorized but unexpended for their education in the schools on the reservation.

Mr. CARTER. Would the gentleman object to an amendment limiting the amount to the amount stated?

Mr. LEAVITT. No; none at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. As the bill stands it provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay any claims which are held to be "just and proper," and under that language he could pay what he considers is proper and just whether it is covered by contracts or not, and it makes available for that purpose all unexpended balances, which total approximately $150,000. Now, anything in which there is justice that would appeal to the Congress sufficiently can be reached through a deficiency bill, and I am obliged to enter an objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

QUARTERLY MONEY ORDER ACCOUNT TO BE RENDERED BY DISTRICT POSTMASTERS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4441) to provide for quarterly instead of monthly money-order accounts to be rendered by district postmasters at third and fourth class offices.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, is this the same bill that was called up before?

The SPEAKER. It requires three objections.

Mr. KENDALL. It is the same bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to improve the methods of accounting in the Post Office Department, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"It shall be the duty of postmasters at post offices authorized to issue money orders to render quarterly, monthly, semi-monthly, weekly, semi-weekly, or daily accounts of all money orders issued and paid, of all fees received for issuing them, of all transfers and payments made from money-order funds, and of all moneys received to be used for the payment of money orders or on account of money-order business."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KENDALL. I offer an amendment to perfect the title.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title: Strike out the words "instead of monthly," so it will read as follows: "To provide for quarterly money-order accounts to be rendered by district postmasters at third and fourth class post offices."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

DIVISION OF LANDS AND FUNDS OF OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business in order on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5726) to amend the act of Congress of March 3, 1921, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act of Congress for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.'"

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as the property involved in this bill and practically all of these Indians are in my district and as I realize I could object and hold this legislation up for at least a couple of weeks, I want to ask the chairman what arrangement I can make in regard to getting time to discuss this matter?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not understand under the rules what I would have to do with the time.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I was informed by the Speaker the gentleman would have an hour's time.

The SPEAKER. That would be in the case of a bill on the House Calendar, but it is not with reference to a bill on the Union Calendar. The gentleman under the rule would have five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I object.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection just a moment?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNYDER. I would just like to say this to the gentleman from Oklahoma, that he told me within two hours that he would not object.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I did not tell the gentleman within two hours. I told him the other day I would not object, but under the condition of the refusal of the House to investigate all the affairs in Oklahoma relative to Indian affairs I have the right to object.

Mr. SNYDER. Does he now object, or does he permit me to make another statement?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I will permit you to make another statement.

Mr. SNYDER. I will state that within two hours, under arrangement with the gentleman and another gentleman, it was agreed that he would not object.

Mr. CARTER. Would it not be allowable to let the gentleman from Oklahoma make his statement?

Mr. SNYDER. This is a very important piece of legislation. Six weeks of hard work have been put upon it.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 25 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] that my agreement was frank with the gentleman, that if no objection was made to the consideration of this bill I would not object. But in view of the fact that this objection is made, I think the gentleman would not hold me as acting in bad faith.

Mr. SNYDER. Not by any means. But the gentleman who is about to speak is a member of the committee. It is true that he voted against the bill; he voted against reporting the bill, but made no reservation of being against it and offered no resolution against it.

Mr. KELLER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that without the unanimous consent of the House. That should be understood.

Mr. SNYDER. I object to the 25 minutes that the gentleman has asked for.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Then I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Then we are all off.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6623) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railway Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Easleton, in the county of Mahoning, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, are there any committee amendments?

The SPEAKER. There are no committee amendments, as the Chair understands. Evidently the gentleman has a different copy. Has he a copy with amendments?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the first print of the bill that came over from the Public Printer did not include the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Then we are reading the wrong print. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out, after the words "granted to," the word "the" and insert the same word with a capital "T."

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Youngstown," strike out the word "and" and insert the character "&." Page 2, amend the title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MINNESOTA RIVER, MINN.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6724) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Sibley and Scott, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Sibley and Scott of the State of Minnesota, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Minnesota River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Blakely, Minn., more particularly described as in section 8, township No. 113 north, of range 25 west, of the fifth principal meridian, in the counties of Sibley and Scott, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW TOWN-SITE FUND.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4462) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw town-site fund, and for other purposes."

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill has not been on the calendar a sufficiently long time for consideration to-day.

The SPEAKER. From the 14th would be four days.

Mr. CRAMTON. Including Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Three days without Sunday.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, it only involves the distribution of $25.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act approved April 28, 1904, entitled "An act authorizing the payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw town-site fund, and for other purposes," be and is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That if any person whose name appears upon the rolls as herein provided shall have died subsequent to the 25th day of September, 1902, and before receiving his pro rata share of the accumulated town-site fund, the money to which such person would have been entitled, if living, shall be distributed and paid to his heirs, according to the laws of descent and distribution, as provided in chapter 49 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, said heirs to be ascertained and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules as said Secretary may prescribe, and his decision thereon, so far as distribution of tribal funds is concerned, shall be final and conclusive."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "paid," insert the word "direct."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will not do that.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

CLAIMS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any and all claims arising under or growing out of any treaty stipulation or agreement of the United States with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations or Tribes, or any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs, which said Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations or Tribes may have against the United States and which claims have not heretofore been determined or adjudicated: Provided, That said Court of Claims shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian nations: Provided further, That the suits be instituted within two years from date of approval of this act: Provided also, That from decisions of the Court of Claims in said suits appeals may be taken as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suits any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

The claim or claims of each of said Indian nations shall be presented separately or jointly by petition in the Court of Claims, and such action shall make the petitioner party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant. Such petition on the part of any such nation or tribe shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract or contracts with the principal chief or governor of the nation or tribe interested and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

A copy of the petition shall in each case be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he or some attorney from the Department of Justice, to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in said cases.

Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed in the Court of Claims within two years from the date of approval of this act as provided herein. Upon the final determination of any suit or action instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it shall find reasonable to pay the attorney or attorneys employed therein by any of the above-named Indian nations for their services and expenses, and in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount of recovery against the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, after the enacting clause 93, strike out all of 93 and down to and including line 9; all of page 2 and all of page 3 from line 1 to line 16, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations or Tribes, or either of them, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs which said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Sec. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of approval of this act. The claim or claims of each of said Indian nations shall be presented separately or jointly by petition in the Court of Claims, and such action shall make the petitioner party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and said contract with such Indian tribe shall be executed in behalf of the tribe by the governor or principal chief thereof, or, if there be no governor or principal chief, by a committee chosen by the tribe under the direction and approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of the above-named Indian nations to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nations.

"Sec. 3. In said suit the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian nations, but any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim against the United States shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

"SEC. 4. That from the decision of the Court of Claims in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by said Indian nations for the services and expenses of said attorneys rendered or incurred prior or subsequent to the date of approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims for fees be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount of recovery against the United States.

"SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

"SEC. 7. A copy of the petition shall in such case be served upon the Attorney General of the United States and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read as follows: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes."

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to transfer House Joint Resolution No. 171 from the Private Calendar to the Union Calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is it about? Is it to get it in shape so that it may be placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes. It is a resolution which was written largely on the suggestion of the Secretary of War to authorize him to lease to the New Orleans Association of Commerce a base unit on the Mississippi River for exposition purposes. A similar resolution has passed the Senate and is on the Speaker's desk. My resolution, introduced in the House, is in identical terms with the Senate resolution, was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, and was necessarily sent to the Private Calendar. A bill on the Private Calendar, of course, is not eligible for a place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. For that reason I am obligated to move to transfer the resolution in order to meet the parliamentary situation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have been in that same situation in the past and there are many others in that position to-day. A bill on the Private Calendar is not eligible for a place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Now, if the House wants to establish the precedent of permitting the transfer of bills from the Private Calendar to the Union Calendar so as to head them for the Unanimous Consent Calendar I shall not make objection, but I can see that that precedent means the loading of the Unanimous Consent Calendar with bills which have no place there under the rules of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I may say to the gentleman that while this is considered a private resolution as the result of the interpretation and construction of the rules, yet, according to my view, it is a public resolution for all intents and purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I dare say a similar argument can be made for any number of bills on the Private Calendar. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this is, in fact, a private bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I do not think so, but the Speaker holds that the destination of a bill controls, and as its destination is the New Orleans Association of Commerce, the Speaker holds it is a private resolution. This resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to lease a base unit on the Mississippi River to the New Orleans Association of Commerce for the purpose of holding an exposition at which the Central American States, the South American States, and our own States will make exhibits. I thought it was of such a public character that it would go on the Union Calendar, but the Speaker, because of his larger parliamentary knowledge, holds to the contrary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, perhaps, should state the line which the Chair has drawn. It is rather difficult to tell what bills belong on the Union and Private Calendars. The Chair has relaxed the rule so as to hold that bills like this, if they concern cities, counties, or States, are public bills and should properly go on the Union Calendar. But this resolution refers to the chamber of commerce of a city, and therefore the Chair put it on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, I very much hope the gentleman will not press that request. The gentleman knows, I am sure, how reluctant I am to interfere with private bills and with these bills that are on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is very, very seldom that I ever make an objection, but I wish to call my friend's attention to the possible dangerous precedent that this might establish. If this be in fact a private bill, if we once set a precedent by unanimous consent, and if we yield to the request of the gentleman out of friendship, we can not very well refuse to yield to similar requests of other gentlemen out of friendship and we will soon have our Consent Calendar in very bad shape.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I would not want to establish a bad precedent as a result of any friendship that might be felt for me upon the floor of this House, of which I am very proud, indeed. I realize the force of the suggestion made by the gentleman, but inasmuch as it was such a close question and, after all, for the purpose of permitting the use of governmental property in a way that would redound to its benefit, I thought that probably the argument would not be pressed too strenuously against it.

As I have said before, I have no desire to do anything other than to exhaust the parliamentary situation and show the people of New Orleans that I have been diligent in their behalf. I never feel offended at any parliamentary objection urged to any position I may assume, because I understand that it is parliamentary and not personal.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, it was my impression that the line of distinction was that a bill with reference even to a city or a county was ruled as a private bill rather than a public bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. No; the Speaker ruled those were public bills.

Mr. CRAMTON. My experience came in connection with a proposed sale of public land by the United States to a county, which was held to be a private bill, and that was even a stronger case than the gentleman refers to. This is clearly the establishment of an undesirable precedent.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. If I have made the situation entirely clear to the gentleman from Michigan and to the gentleman from Tennessee and they wish to object, I have no desire to embarrass either of them by making any personal appeal to which either one or both might reluctantly yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, just after the reading of the Journal, I may be allowed to address the House for 25 minutes on the subject of Indian legislation for Oklahoma.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to object. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday, and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has several important bills, I am advised. If they can not finish those bills to-morrow, that is the last day they will have during the session.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I want to state to the gentleman that I have been called home and will be gone for about a month. There is one piece of legislation on the calendar that pertains to no other part of the State except mine. The other pertains to the entire State, and I think I have some information relative to the matter that would be beneficial to the House; at least I would like to lay the information before the House and I shall be satisfied if I can get time at any time during this week.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman that he proceed this evening after finishing the Consent Calendar? I think no one would object to that.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. And probably nobody would stay here either; but this afternoon will be satisfactory; yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the completion of the Consent Calendar the gentleman may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes, with the understanding that thereafter the House shall adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The calendar has already been completed.

Mr. WILLIAMSON and Mr. KELLER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KELLER. I have a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I have a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] refers to the exhaustion of the calendar. I want to present at that time the report of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I then ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the business of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MacGregor] and of such unanimous-consent requests as may be submitted, after the conclusion of the business of to-day, the gentleman from Oklahoma may be permitted to proceed for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RAILROAD ACROSS FORT SNELLING MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill H. R. 5274, to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct and operate a line of railroad across Fort Snelling Military Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman when that bill was put on the calendar?

Mr. KELLER. Yesterday; and I am asking unanimous consent. This is a very important bill for the people of my city.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5274. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we would like to have it reported.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not think I shall object—I want to ask a question. This is a military reservation that belongs to the Government?

Mr. KELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In the gentleman's State?

Mr. KELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And the railroad company is seeking to get a right of way through it?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. To what length will that right of way extend?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have not the exact number of feet.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know whether the reservation runs for a half mile, a mile, or 2 miles?

Mr. KELLER. It is not a mile. This piece goes across one corner. It is not in the reservation proper. The reservation is high up, and this is a piece of property of about 40 acres in extent, down below.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should not the railway pay for the right of way?

Mr. KELLER. The department will take care of that. They have agreed to go through the regular form and charge so much.

Mr. BLANTON. The department will not charge them for it unless we provide for it in the resolution.

Mr. KELLER. This is the regular resolution that is always passed. It is all provided for by the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is a lawyer, is he not?

Mr. KELLER. I am not.

Mr. BLANTON. If he were he would know that the department would not require a dollar to be paid unless we specify it in the resolution.

Mr. KELLER. But the Committee on Military Affairs has gone into this and they have recommended it.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to object to the gentleman's bill. If he would properly safeguard the Government's rights—if he will amend it to provide that the railroad company shall pay the reasonable value of the use of this land, which the Government had to pay for when it acquired it—I would have no objection to it, but I do not think it ought to be passed in this form, because if it is so passed the lawyers of the House know that the railroad will not ever pay a single cent for it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, this is a lease that may be taken up at any time the Government sees fit.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will not press this this afternoon. I would not object to it if he would properly amend it so as to safeguard it. Will he not hold it over until later and safeguard it by amendment?

Mr. KELLER. This has been up for a whole month, and it is a very important matter, because the leasing of this right of way affects a certain part of our city, where they want an outlet to provide for industries, and it also provides a new right of way out of the city of St. Paul, which will reduce the grade of this outlet.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment to the bill in the form of a proviso that the department shall require the railway company to pay a reasonable, fair remuneration for the use of the right of way when granting such use to the railroad?

Mr. KELLER. I have no objection if the gentleman desires to offer that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it does not provide for a conveyance in fee. This is merely a permit to the railroad company, and the resolution provides that the permit is to be under such conditions as the Secretary of War may approve. We have the gentleman's assurance that those conditions involve a proper compensation for the permit—the easement.

Mr. BLANTON. But there can be an easement which will grow out of a permit such as this that is equal to a fee in the years to come, and the gentleman knows that this railroad could get that right of way and hold it there for a few years until you could not oust them. The Government may have no right to oust them after they have used it a certain length of time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is contemplated that the railway company will pay for this easement.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not so provided. We ought to provide that in the bill. There ought to be an instruction to this department under what circumstances we grant this easement. I have not had the time to draw a proper amendment, but there ought to be an amendment to this bill that will require proper compensation for this easement, and I submit that to the gentleman from Iowa, and he knows that. Under ordinary circumstances he would not agree to a bill like this going through.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no question but that the War Department intends to collect the proper fee for the easement.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because in their letter to us they told us that was contemplated.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, such provision should have been placed in the bill. I hope the gentleman will let this go over until the next consent day two weeks from to-day. There is plenty of time.

Mr. KELLER. I do not feel so, because this is important.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will let it go over until that time, we can properly safeguard it by an amendment.

Mr. KELLER. The company has offered $500 per acre for it, and it seems to me that that is a reasonable offer for the land. The company has been perfectly fair from their side of it, and the Government ought to meet them, and we ought not to quibble about it. They are going to pay a reasonable amount for the land they are to take.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The railroad offered to buy the land, but we did not want to sell the land. We want the land held intact, so that if we ever want to use it again we can get it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this. The Government has paid great big sums of money during the war for these various camps and cantonments and reservations, and now in peace time we are frittering them away for nothing; and when we need them again we are going to have to pay dearly for them again.

Mr. KELLER. That is not the fact in this particular case. This piece of land will never be used by the reservation, because it is low. The reservation is up a hundred feet above this piece of property, and it will never be used by the War Department at any time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is the same as several others that have been granted in different parts of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will assure us that he will agree that a proper amendment will be put on this bill, which

I think our colleagues all want, requiring the department to have this railroad company pay for this easement a reasonable, fair compensation, I will not interpose an objection.

Mr. KELLER. That was practically agreed upon, the amount, and it is understood they are willing to pay a fair amount for the property.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman have that amendment put in the bill?

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will prepare the amendment, I shall have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I have already suggested an amendment that would properly safeguard the Government.

Mr. KELLER. The Committee on Military Affairs had the matter up and recommended it unanimously.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman from Texas feel that this would meet the situation, especially in view of the fact that negotiations have gone so far that the price is pretty well agreed upon by the department? At the end of the resolution—if the gentleman from Minnesota is agreeable—it speaks of the permit of a certain location under such regulations and conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and then I suggest adding "including proper compensation for the use of the land covered by the permit."

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will accept that amendment, I will not interpose an objection.

Mr. KELLER. I have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman want compensation for the land?

Mr. BLANTON. For the easement. The railroad should pay for using this land for its right of way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For the easement; for the use of the land covered by the permit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair understands the gentleman wishes to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill?

Mr. KELLER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1982) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., its successors and assigns, of a line of railroad across the northeasterly portion of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, its successors and assigns, a permit to locate, construct, maintain, and operate a line of railroad across the northeasterly portion of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation in the State of Minnesota upon such location and under such regulations and conditions as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "war," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "including proper compensation for the use of the land covered by the permit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER BETWEEN POTTER COUNTY AND DEWEY COUNTY, S. DAK.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 6955, a bridge bill, and to substitute the Senate bill which passed on March 14, S. 2420.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to call up House bill 6955 and substitute the Senate bill in lieu thereof. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2420) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

RETENTION OF BILL ON CALENDAR.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the retention of the bill H. R. 5726 upon the Consent Calendar. That is the bill on which there was some little disagreement and objection was made by my colleague, which he afterwards withdrew.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill retaining its place upon the calendar? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INQUIRY INTO THE AFFAIRS OF THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD, ETC.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House Resolution 212.

Resolved, That the select committee, appointed under the provisions of H. Res. 186, adopted March 4, 1924, to make inquiry into the affairs of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any agency, branch, or subsidiary of either, is hereby authorized to employ such stenographic, legal, and clerical assistance, including accountants and statisticians, as it may deem necessary, and is further authorized to have such printing and binding done as it may require.

Resolved further, That all expenses incurred by said committee under the provisions of H. Res. 186, including the expenses of such committee or any subcommittee thereof when sitting outside of the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers, ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman of said select committee, or by the chairman of a subcommittee where such expenses are incurred by such subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the words "District of Columbia," insert the words and figures "not exceeding $25,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman—I have not a copy of the resolution before me—but as I caught the reading it seemed to provide that the expenditures contracted in a sitting outside the District of Columbia should be paid a certain way.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It reads—

The expenses of such committee or any subcommittee thereof when sitting outside the District of Columbia—shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

That is the clause—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How are they paid when they are sitting in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MACGREGOR (reading)—

That all expenses incurred by said committee under the provisions of H. Res. 186, including the expenses of such committee or any subcommittee thereof when sitting outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I get the connection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition on this matter.

Mr. MACGREGOR. How much time?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have a minute and a half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for a minute and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there ought to be a stop to such wasteful appropriations. Almost every day we are called upon to vote $25,000, $30,000, $40,000, or more for this and that wasteful purpose.

Mr. MACGREGOR. In this case we have fixed the limit.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has fixed the ante pretty high—$25,000 for this committee. There is no necessity for the committee going out of Washington. The committee could make a proper investigation here. There is plenty of money improperly spent by the Shipping Board right here in Washington without going outside of it to investigate; and if this committee finds all about what it has misspent here, it has done quite a good job for the Government. I do not believe we should expend public money in this way; and if the gentleman is going to take up this matter now, I am going to ask for a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that, after all, progress will not be made by delaying a vote upon this proposition.

The House by an overwhelming vote determined upon this investigation. The committee has to be supplied with funds in order to conduct the investigation. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that we can not possibly gain time in this way.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee knows that some of the ablest lawyers in this country are Members of this House, and yet every time we appoint a committee of investigation it is for some reason or other found necessary to have an outside lawyer employed at a huge salary to assist the committee. You could hardly appoint a committee of Members of this House without having some good lawyers on it, and yet every time we appoint a committee we have to hire for it some special legal pet and pay him $10,000 or $15,000 or $25,000 as a law fee for aiding the committee, when it is wholly unnecessary. I think that practice ought to stop.

I think the lawyers of this House owe it to the people of this country to contribute their legal talent to their committee and represent the people with all their abilities, and not pay big sums to outside lawyers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as this resolution is concerned, it makes no mention of a retainer.

Mr. BLANTON. But a high-priced lawyer will likely be employed. If you employ a lawyer he will get a big fee, and a large part of this $25,000 will likely go to the lawyer.

Mr. MacGREGOR. The members of the committee tell me they will not employ a lawyer.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will withdraw my point of no quorum. That is the first time we have had such a committee without lawyers being employed at big fees. As the gentleman from Tennessee intimated, I realize that it would only be a waste of time to fight this resolution.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I understand the resolution includes the payment of legal services.

Mr. MacGREGOR. If they so desire. The resolution was passed by the House. If you will agree to appoint this committee to investigate I do not think we should hamstring the committee if they need a lawyer, but they tell me they have no intention of hiring a lawyer.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Then I understand. It is all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHAMTON). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 221.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 221.

Resolved, That the select committee appointed under the provisions of H. Res. 217, adopted March 12, 1924, to investigate the allegations of a grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, southern division, that certain evidence has been submitted to them involving the payment of money to two Members of Congress, is hereby authorized to employ such stenographic, legal, and clerical assistance as it may deem necessary, and is further authorized to have such printing and binding done as it may require.

Resolved further, That all expenses incurred by said committee under the provisions of H. Res. 217, including expenses of such committee or any subcommittee thereof, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered.

by said committee, signed by the chairman of said select committee, or by the chairman of a subcommittee where such expenses are incurred by such committee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

With a committee amendment—

Page 2, line 1, insert before the word "shall" "not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the House resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SUSQUEHANNA RIVER NEAR CLARKS FERRY, PA.

Mr. SITES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 6487, No. 116 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 6487, No. 116 on the House Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SITES. And I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that Senate bill 2446, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A BILL (S. 2446) granting the consent of Congress to the Clarks Ferry Bridge Co., and its successors, to construct a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the railroad station of Clarks Ferry, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Clarks Ferry Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the railroad station of Clarks Ferry, located about 15 miles north of the city of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin, in the State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SITES] that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill?

Mr. BEGG. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. This bridge is not a toll bridge?

Mr. SITES. It is a toll bridge. There has been a covered bridge there for many years. It is the purpose of the people who own the bridge, owing to the inadequacy of the present bridge, to take care of the traffic with a new bridge.

Mr. BEGG. Is it on the main highway?

Mr. SITES. It is on the main highway. It was originally an old Pennsylvania Canal bridge.

Mr. BEGG. Has the road been improved under the Federal highway system?

Mr. SITES. The road on either side of it has been improved.

Mr. BEGG. Who are these men that make up this ferry bridge company? I do not care about knowing the names. That is not the point. Are they just a crowd of local fellows who see a chance of a great number of people coming along there and a chance of making some money? Is it a toll bridge?

Mr. SITES. It has been a toll bridge for many years. They will be glad to see it taken over by the State, but until such time as the State of Pennsylvania takes it over this will be a very necessary structure.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Does not the Federal highway act provide that no money can be appropriated for a toll highway?

Mr. SITES. I am not in position to answer that question.

Mr. BEGG. I would be glad to have some one answer it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not sure that it was in the act, but there is discretion. If it be not in the act itself, then there is lodged in the highway department a discretion, which they invariably exercise, of not allotting any Federal funds to a tollgate road.

Mr. BEGG. The clerk to the committee advises me that it is in the law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was uncertain about that, but I know it is the policy of the department, invariably exercised. But let me say this: There may be a difference between a toll bridge and what we commonly know as a tollgate road.

Mr. BEGG. I concede that, but it would not make a lot of difference to the fellow who has to pay the toll to go through that bridge.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean as regards the law.

Mr. BEGG. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not press his request to-night, because I do not want to handicap the bill by objecting.

Mr. SITES. The bridge has been there a long time, and these people have their plans perfected to replace it, and they are anxious to have this bill enacted.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SITES. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Is it not the idea of the State of Pennsylvania to appropriate sufficient money to buy all the toll bridges?

Mr. SITES. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Recently the State has appropriated many thousands of dollars and has purchased, in conjunction with the State of New Jersey, all the bridges from Philadelphia nearly to Easton, but it is not possible for Pennsylvania to appropriate at one or two terms of its legislature sufficient money to buy all the bridges. I want to state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] that it is the idea of Pennsylvania to buy all of the bridges.

Mr. BEGG. I quite agree with that, and I believe if they would not go ahead and spend this money it might save the State of Pennsylvania a great deal of money.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit a statement?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This, I understand, is not a Federal-aid road, nor is it at this time seeking Federal aid. I may venture to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that perhaps men who have taken the view of this Federal-aid question that he and I have taken might very well give consent to the passage of this bill, even though it be a toll bridge, because it will probably prevent any request for Federal aid on this particular highway.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. The Committee on Roads has been holding hearings on another road bill and that committee hopes to report a bill providing $100,000,000 for good roads. The engineer representing the State of Ohio appeared at those hearings, and while I do not attempt to quote his exact words he made the statement that Ohio was going to make all of her roads practically Federal-aid roads and get Federal assistance.

Mr. BEGG. I know the gentleman to whom reference is made and he probably will not have much to do with what the roads are.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is: Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SEARS] that the Senate bill be substituted for the identical House bill?

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the matter has gone beyond the question of the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; that point has been passed.

Mr. BEGG. I will not object to the consideration of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SITES, a similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we have finished the calendar, and under the order of the House the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] has 25 minutes in which to address the House. We could keep on with this all night.

JURISDICTION IN INDIAN MATTERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] is recognized for 25 minutes under the order of the House.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to hold the House for 25 minutes. Before proceeding I will ask permission to revise and extend my remarks, and state that, in order to occupy as little time of the House as possible, I will not yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's remarks are about the Indian proposition, are they?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not on the subject of the bonus?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 25 minutes, and requests that he be not interrupted in the course of his remarks.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a bill—H. R. 5726—before the House and another pending in the Congress seeks to take away from the courts of Oklahoma and places in the Interior Department all jurisdiction as to restricted Indian matters. In discussing these bills I predicate my remarks on the prediction and charge that if the Congress will make a full and fair investigation before passing any further legislation relative to Indian matters in Oklahoma that it will be found that since 1921 through the miserable mismanagement of the affairs of the Indians in Oklahoma by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and its agents in the field they have permitted to be wasted and dissipated more of the money of the restricted Indians of Oklahoma than the guardianships of the Osage Indians, sought to be discontinued in this bill, have cost the Indians.

This bill is one for which there is no crying demand, no justification except a created prejudice by the proponents of the bill connected with the agency at Pawhuska and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which is constantly seeking new powers and new fields in which to employ more people and perpetuate and further its bureaucratic and oligarchic power.

The bill remedies no serious situation, further hampers the Indian by placing him where he was 25 years ago, makes no provision for him to enjoy that which is his by reason of the thought and foresight of his fathers, insults the judiciary of the great State of Oklahoma, and works great injury to the people of the county and State in which live these Osage Indians, who have been recognized by it as sovereign citizens. The Indian affected is against this bill; it deprives him of rights to which he is entitled as a human being, puts him at the mercy of a Secretary of the Interior appointed for political purposes, 1,500 miles away from him and his property, much of which business will be transacted by clerks or political appointees who never saw an Indian with the exception of the kind that used to be so common in front of cigar shops, and in the end will result, by reason of the rights given therein to the Secretary of the Interior, to the building up of another horde of governmental employees to live off of the Government and the Osage Indian.

The proponents of the measure come to you with great sobbs of their interest in the Indians. They tell you sob stories of how his money has been squandered through the courts of Oklahoma and the guardians created thereunder. But they do not tell you anything of what would have been the actual results if all the bills of the Indians that are not under guardianship but were under departmental supervision had been paid, as were the bills of those under guardianship. They make much of a few cases, where with only figures, and by ignoring the actual necessities and conditions, that the estates of some of these Indians have been depleted. They do not tell you what this depletion was for. They do not tell you that if a full and fair analysis were made that it would be found that in many of these estates where this depletion is found that the money was spent for actual necessities of these human beings, who are entitled to just as much consideration as any other human; spent in paying their just debts which an oligarchic bureau had repudiated; spent in caring for them when they were sick; spent in extending to them encouragement and efforts to advance their welfare and good, instead of giving to them the cold, business, administrative treatment that must necessarily come from a department that, in many instances, looks upon him as being still in his savage state and a commodity through which it is to hold its power and perpetuate its tenure in office.

They have not told you that since March, 1921, the Indians under the supervision of the department, and that are still under departmental control, have contracted debts of over $260,000, and that if these debts were paid that no doubt most of the estates of these Indians would show just as great, if not greater, depletion than many of those who have been under guardianship; and when I asked at the time the committee was considering this bill that the Bureau of Indian Affairs make to the committee and the Congress a full report, in the same manner as they had made a report upon the guardianship cases, they very quietly sidestepped that request and to this day no one, not even the Indian, knows what the value of his estate is nor where it is invested.

But they come to the Congress with sobs of fear for the Indian. According to them, his fortune is being dissipated, and they are the only ones that can save him. They set themselves up as safer than the courts, and when requested to report as to their guardianship in the matter of wills, administrators, investments, contracts with attorneys, and so forth, they ignore the request of a Member of this House, cry "Wolf," and try to ram this bill down the throats of the Congress upon evidence produced by the bureau and its employees without giving to the committee or the House any record evidence. A reading of the record will disclose to anyone who desires to examine it that every bit of the evidence produced in favor of this bill was produced by some one in the employ of or connected either directly or indirectly with the Department of the Interior.

And let me say right here that if a committee of the Congress will make a proper investigation of conditions, as is provided for in a resolution now pending before this Congress, that you will not only not pass this bill, but you will pass legislation to protect the Indians of Oklahoma—not only the Osage, but all others—from the practices of abuse and neglect that have grown up in the department and through its operatives in the field.

You say that is a startling statement. Yes; it is. But I call your attention to the fact that to-day you are called upon, in the face of the demand and necessity for a thorough investigation of all things pertaining to Indian matters in Oklahoma, to pass this bill. You are asked to turn all the supervision of these Indian affairs over to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, notwithstanding that just now all who have knowledge are wondering how this bureau is going to justify itself in paying out of the funds of Exie Fife, a restricted Indian, under the supervision and direction of this bureau, the sum of $50,000 in a divorce case, $34,500 of which is reported to have, with the knowledge of the representative of the bureau, gone to different parties for attorneys' fees in the case.

They are rushing this bill through the Congress in the face of the fact that in the divorce case of a party named Starr, a restricted Indian, whose moneys and properties were all under the jurisdiction of the bureau, another $25,000 was disbursed, the most of which was paid out to attorneys in the case.

They ask you to turn over to them all jurisdiction and supervision of the wealth of these Indians, notwithstanding their miserable record in handling the funds of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. They pretend to Congress, and approve of scandalous reports concerning Oklahoma courts and citizenship, that they and they alone are the only ones that can be depended upon to protect the funds of the Indians in face of the fact that in hundreds of cases, if an investigation is ever made, it will be found that the funds of the Indians were dissipated by and with the consent of the representative of the Indian department. That seems startling, does not it? But let us see what the real conditions are: Under the rules of probate of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, a reference to which you will find in the record of the hearings on this bill, the probate courts are required to recognize all national or probate attorneys, and in another rule it is provided—

Guardians shall not expend for or on account of their wards any sum unless first authorized by the court, except for sickness, in which event immediate notice must be given the court.

So, gentlemen, I submit to you that if all the extravagance as has been enumerated to you here is true, that it is the Bureau of Indian Affairs that is jointly responsible, for if the department through the probate attorneys provided by the Congress did its duty it would be difficult for a probate judge or guardian to dissipate restricted funds under the present system except through the carelessness of these probate attorneys and the Indian agency. And the evidence in the records of this hearing show that at the present time not a case relating to one of these Indians is considered by the probate court of Osage County unless the probate attorney of the department is present.

They ask you to give them this supervision over this great wealth and rush this bill to final passage before you have any real knowledge of what the real facts are, and in face of the charge which a prominent Oklahoma citizen filed with me in writing a few days ago and in which he said:

I think if you will review the manner in which money has been paid out of the royalty department to drunken and incompetent Indians you will find that the waste is probably as appalling and in the aggregate exceeds all the waste permitted by a few of the many probate judges in this State.

You are asked to pass without consideration, except for the hour allotted at this time for debate, a bill conferring great powers upon a department that may in the future, as it has on at least one occasion in the past, prove its weakness or unfitness, as described to me in a letter received this week from one cognizant of Indian affairs, when he said:

I am calling your attention to the weakness of the department when presided over by such men as Secretary Fall and the subofficers, some of whom in the past and many in the future may be as weak and as disqualified as the probate judges who have gone wrong.

They are asking you to pass a bill here that makes the Secretary of the Interior the guardian and at the same time constituting him as a tribunal to pass upon his own acts. You are, therefore, asked in this bill to strike a blow at the very foundation corner stone of our Government—its judiciary and the rights of every citizen to a tribunal in which to redress his or her wrongs.

You are asked to turn over all this power to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which has wasted hundreds and hundreds of thousands of the money of the Indians in such cases as those already enumerated and one which I now desire to direct to your attention. Would you as a business man intrust your business without appeal to a bureau that would pay out of your moneys illegal bills and then make contracts with private attorneys to re-collect that money and pay these favored attorneys out of your own funds? You certainly would not under any circumstances, but most certainly not when during all this time you had furnished your representative with all the legal talent needed and probably with a surplus. Yet this is just what has been done to the poor, helpless, restricted Indian in Oklahoma by the Department of the Interior, the department which this and another bill before the Congress seeks to give more power to. I refer to the fact that from 1913 to 1921, when Fall, of Teapot Dome fame, became Secretary of the Interior, the Indian Bureau had paid the Federal income tax of the restricted Indian.

Then it was that some friends of the powers that be discovered that this payment, which had been made by the department to another department without the consent or advice of the Indian in which they are displaying so much interest to-day, was illegal and that the Indian was not subject to this taxation. What did the Department of the Interior do? Did it do its duty and call upon the great array of attorneys provided for it by the Congress to re-collect this money it had illegally paid out of the funds of these Indians for whom they are weeping briny tears to-day? Oh, no. Instead they permitted private attorneys to secure contracts to serve the Indian. Men with political pull appeared at the department with contracts given by the Indians and their guardians. Did they turn these contracts down? Did they cry out in their anguish at the great injustice being done these Indians as they are to-day when they seek more power? Oh, no. They did not do anything of the kind, but they approved the contracts of these private attorneys. The work to be performed was most laborious. It was necessary for these private political pets and others who were so favored to establish in court, without the necessity of a witness or practically the preparing of a brief, that these Indians, as wards of the Government, were exempt. An injunction was secured against the payment of a current year's tax and an opinion sought from the Treasury Department. It was held that they were not taxable, and it is rumored that in a few days these private attorneys will pull down fees out of the money of these Indians ranging from $120,000 to $450,000. And this is the department that says that the judiciary in a great State must be torn down, the rights given to these people by the Constitution must be trampled under foot, and that they are holier than all others, and Congress must take from the courts all powers and place these powers in them without restraint.

They are asking you to rush this bill through with practically no consideration, without debate, and under suspension of the rules when, in fact, it is one of the most important and far-reaching measures that is or will be before this Congress, involves the handling of millions of dollars, and throws no extra safeguards around the handling of it by the department.

But what of the bill itself? There is not one paragraph of relief for the Indian except to further hamper him. It denies him his rights in court. It denies to any American citizen who might, without knowledge of the law, have dealings with him any recourse to the courts. Under it any of you might receive the greatest of injury at his hands. In the case of an automobile accident, the life of yourself, your wife, or your child might be crushed out by the acts of one of them, and under this bill the only redress you would have would be to throw yourself upon the mercy of the Secretary of the Interior. Think of asking you to support a measure that would prohibit you and yours from redress in the courts, a right for which your fathers fought, and yet that is just what this bill, attempted to be whipped through by an autocratic bureau, does. What would those who wrote the fundamentals of our laws have done with an act of this kind? They would have discovered that it was contrary to every American principle of freedom and not have dignified it with consideration. Is it not about time that we get back to the study of legislation from the standpoint of those who built such a firm foundation for this country?

But what of the Indian himself? He was brought up here by the bureau, believing that legislation was to be passed that would bring to him relief from the bureaucracy of the department; believing that he would be allowed to spend a little more of his own fortune for his comfort and happiness. He was allowed to travel on a special train, treated royally until he had indorsed the bill, and then he was handed a lemon. Instead of giving him relief, he is further restrained, while it is arranged to pile up for him a great fortune that he can never enjoy and one for which no provision is made for the future, except that it is to lay in the banks or be invested in Government bonds, and do the great community from which the wealth comes and in which the Indian lives no good at all, while leaving upon that community and the land of these Indians in the future added burdens of taxation.

But they say the Indian is not capable of handling his own property. That is probably true in many instances; but I venture the assertion that he is just as capable, in many instances, of handling his own estate as are some of those who will in the future by reason of political appointment handle the Indian's affairs.

They say he dissipates and spends his money wastefully. That is no doubt true in many cases, but I submit that everywhere in this broad land, and too numerous, are those who with less incomes than the Indian spend theirs just as recklessly. I do not favor letting the Indian spend all his income, or anything like it, but I do argue that the Indian with an income is entitled to live and enjoy life in the same manner and to the same extent as is the white man. But this bill will not allow him to do that. He must be entirely subservient to some one else. And for whom are we laying up this great fortune. Every one of these Indians is restricted. If they have any heirs they are also members of the tribe and have incomes equal to the others. The heirs to come, or living now, are just as well safeguarded as are the principals. And yet in many instances these Indians are so hampered, notwithstanding their great wealth, that they can not be properly cared for even in sickness.

Recently an Osage Indian, named Wah-shah-she, appeared in Washington begging for just a little bit more of his money. He had a great fortune piled up in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. He was feeble and sick. He could not secure from his own fortune enough money to go to a health resort and there fight the ravages of old age and disease. He was, however, able to be brought here by the department in a special train through an appropriation of this Congress when the department wanted to use him to obtain more power. But he could not stay long. He was old and sick. He fell by the wayside. He went home, and since that time answered the last great call, and has gone to "the happy hunting ground" and left behind him not an heir of direct descent to enjoy his fortune; but as he went down to the valley of death he was crying out for the relief that a safe and sane and not a bureaucratic spending of his own money would have given to him in the last days of his old age.

Gentlemen, I beg of you not to pass this bill, which tramples down the courts, creates a bureaucracy, denies the right of both the Indian and other citizens to their rights in the courts, brings no relief to the Indian, and benefits no one except the Bureau of Indian Affairs, until you have passed the resolution pending, made a thorough investigation as to the real legislation needed, and placed the Congress in a position to know for itself and not from hearsay evidence of department officials who are interested just what kind of legislation is needed.

As the only man in this Congress who directly represents the Osage Indians in it, for the reason that the entire estate of the tribe and the residence of most of them is in my district, I beg of you this consideration at your hands.

And in conclusion let me make this prediction, that when all of the facts are fully revealed and the whole truth can be brought out where witnesses are not afraid of the power of the bureaucratic Indian Department it will be found that responsibility for irregularities complained of rests in the final analysis upon Federal appointees, the agents of the very department to which it is now proposed to completely turn over jurisdiction and control. I also know and predict that you will find that the citizenship of Osage County on all matters relating to the Osage Indians and the citizens of that part of the State occupied by the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes are just as honest, just as patriotic, and just as zealous in their desires for honest enforcement of laws pertaining to Indian matters and of all other laws as the people of any part of the world.

Should my prediction prove correct, and I know it will, the proposed legislation, both as to Osage and the Five Civilized Tribes, to deprive Oklahoma courts of jurisdiction will have to be denounced as an unwarranted insult to the integrity and high character of the judiciary of my State and just another effort to concentrate all power and governmental control at Washington, fifteen hundred miles away from the people to be affected.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am getting very sorry for the distinguished majority leader, whose party has quit him and left him alone on the floor, so I think we ought to stop.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OLDFIELD, for five days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. STEAGALL (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), on account of serious illness in family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 19, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou art always considerate of us, though we may frequently forget Thee and our duties toward Thee. We thank Thee for the passing days, giving to us added evidence of Thy care. Help us to realize our obligations to Thee. Grant that we may follow truth in its leadings, knowing that it is only as we are made free by the truth that we move along the line of Thine ordination for us. May we love Him who is the truth and life. We ask in His gracious name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION TO WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. SMOOT. I introduce a bill to adjust the compensation and protect the dependents of veterans of the World War by means of paid-up Government life insurance.

In connection with the bill, I ask to have printed as part of my remarks a statement showing the cost to the Government of issuing nontransferable certificates to all veterans, including those whose bonus is $50 or less, no loans on certificates, payable only at the death of the veteran. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 2867) to adjust the compensation and protect the dependents of veterans of the World War by means of paid-up Government life insurance was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the Record.

The statement is as follows:

H. R. 6483. An act amending an act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on the 17th instant the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

S. 634. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun; and

S. J. Res. 91. Joint Resolution to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

FEDERAL DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I present a letter from Bishop Collins Denny, addressed to Hon. HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, on the subject of the so-called Sterling-Towner bill, creating a Federal department of education, which I ask may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

BISHOP'S ROOM, PUBLISHING HOUSE

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH,

Richmond, Va., February 13, 1924.

HON. HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Permit me as a friend of many years to offer a few objections to the pending bill known by the name of "the Sterling-Towner bill." I am strongly opposed to the passage of that bill, and regret that I can not set forth my objections at some length. Let me slightly touch two objections:

First, Congress to assume the constitutional power to pass the bill must interpret the general-welfare clause of the Constitution as a blanket power to take any action believed to be for the benefit of the people of this country. Such an interpretation would make meaningless the fact that Congress is limited to enumerated powers granted in the Constitution. Such action would be contrary to the understanding of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1787 as shown by the debates and votes in that convention, and that interpretation of the clause is specifically denied by the most prominent members of that convention in discussing the clause, is also denied by many of the ablest writers on the Constitution, and has not been accepted by the courts.

Second, Not only does the Constitution stand in the way of the rightful passage of that bill, but on the ground of expediency it is condemned. What greater damage could be wrought than to put the education of our people into politics? Of all the vital interests of the people from which politics should be wholly excluded religion and education are the most important. It is not denied that more true education and far better education is needed. More and better religion is also needed, but neither religion nor education needs to be nationalized. An attempt to nationalize either is not likely to be an improvement. Are we to learn nothing from the disasters of others? Germany adopted a system of standardized education. In addition to many other calamities of that system, it is also to be noted how willing was its effect on the independence of its ablest and best-trained scholars and teachers—the "Intellectuals." The finer, the more delicate traits of mind and character must have been atrophied before those men, at the command of the German Government, could have signed their abhorrent document. Standardized education tends to produce such results even in those of greatest gifts and highest training, and did produce them in the action cited.

Solid objections to this bill are so numerous and so strong that public opinion once fully informed will probably make its defeat inevitable. I am, my dear Mr. TUCKER,

Most truly yours,

COLLINS DENNY.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 5073, the Interior Department appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
March 13, 1925.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 36, and 58 to the bill H. R. 5078, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes," and concurs therein;

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 47, and concurs therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert:

"For the construction of trails within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That said sum may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase from the county of Coconino, Ariz., of the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail within said park under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct an approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of said park."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 60, and concurs therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert: "$365,000."

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 38, and 39, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. CARTER be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the action of the House was before the Senate a few days ago I moved to agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 47 and 60. Amendment numbered 47 is what is known as the Bright Angel Trail amendment and amendment numbered 60 is what is known as the Howard University amendment. Amendment 47 was discussed by both the Senators from Arizona, but there was no time given to act upon it. I again move to agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47.

Nothing can be done with the appropriation bill until the two amendments to which I have referred are agreed to or disagreed to, as the case may be. If the Senate disagrees to the House amendment, which is the original House provision as amended by the House, then the matter reported will go back to the House and we will hold another conference on it. If the Senate agrees to the House amendments to amendments numbered 47 and 60, then I shall move to insist on the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 38, and 39. When we dispose of the two amendments to which I have referred and which I have already moved that the Senate agree to, I shall explain the other amendments just named, so the Senate will know in what position the appropriation bill stands to-day.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah a question. In the statement which he made I did not clearly get the trend of his thought. Is he going to ask for an agreement upon those matters on which the conferees have agreed and then explain the items still in disagreement?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate has already agreed to the conference report on the amendments agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses. It was only a partial report, I will say to the Senator. The Senate has not agreed to the amendments of the House to amendments numbered 47 and 60.

I will state now to the Senator, because other Senators may also wish to know, just what are the amendments still in disagreement. Amendment No. 15 is with reference to the reclamation project on the Flathead Indian Reservation and No. 16 is the same; amendment No. 17 is the reclamation project at Fort Peck Indian Reservation; No. 18 is the reclamation project on the Blackfeet Reservation; and amendment No. 19 is only a change in the total with reference to the reclamation project on the Blackfeet Reservation. Amendment No. 38 has reference to the so-called Newlands project and amendment No. 39 has to do with the total for all the reclamation provisions.

Mr. McNARY. In his statement the Senator did not mention the Bright Angel Trail.

Mr. SMOOT. The item affecting Bright Angel Trail is embraced in amendment No. 47, which is now before the Senate. As to Bright Angel Trail, I will say to the Senator—probably he did not hear me—the original provision of the bill as it came from the House was disagreed to by the Senate. The amendment went back to the House for a vote, as the conferees on the part of the House would not yield. The House amended their original provision affecting Bright Angel Trail, and they now ask the Senate to agree to the amended amendment which is now before the Senate and is to be decided.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator from Utah explain the difference between the original provision and that now proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will read the language of the provision.

Mr. CURTIS. Before the Senator reads that I desire to say that, as I understand the Senator, he has asked for a separate vote on the two items that are now pending before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The vote will come just as soon as this discussion shall have been concluded.

In answer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], I desire to say that the original provision as it passed the other House read as follows:

For the purchase of the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail within the Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz., as contemplated by the "act to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona," approved February 26, 1919, $100,000, to be available until expended for payment to the county of Coconino, State of Arizona, for the construction, under supervision of the National Park Service, of a road from Maine, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park: Provided, That no part of such sum shall be expended until after the delivery of a good and sufficient deed by the proper authorities of said county conveying to the United States full and complete title to the said Bright Angel toll road and trail, and acceptance thereof by the Secretary of the Interior.

To that provision the Senate disagreed and adopted a somewhat different provision. When the bill was returned to the House of Representatives the House adopted an amendment in lieu of the Senate amendment, which is known as amendment numbered 47, which is now before the Senate, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert:

"For the construction of trails within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, provided that said sum may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase from the county of Coconino, Ariz., of the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail within said park under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct an approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of said park."

In other words, Mr. President, the amendment proposes to make a direct appropriation of $100,000 for building trails or purchasing the present trail, providing it can be obtained through the commissioners of Coconino County.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. Can the Senator enlighten the Senate as to why there should be a need for another trail?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] made that very clear to the Senate the other day. The junior Senator from Arizona stated that there is no need for another trail, as there are already three trails. I know nothing about it personally; I only know what was stated here by the junior Senator from Arizona in his speech the other day.

Mr. BURSUM. Is it the purpose of the Senate to cram down the throats of the people of Coconino County, against their wishes, this appropriation, and to use it as an instrument to browbeat them into turning over to the Government the trail which belongs to Coconino County in the national park? Is not that the meaning of the proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment, in my opinion, simply means that if Coconino County does not desire to sell the trail to the Government, then the Secretary of the Interior can build a new trail, and $100,000 is appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. BURSUM. That is, the Government will then go in and build another trail for $100,000 and destroy the value of the trail which now belongs to Coconino County? Is that the proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. I have stated just what the amendment provides.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the esteemed Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] has considerable solicitude lest, as I caught his phrase, something be rammed down the throats of the people of Coconino County. Of course, the people of that county will be grateful for this valiant effort on his part to prevent any such action. There is no intention to ram something down anybody's throat. It is an attempt to get an idea into somebody's head.

My colleague and I are in disagreement upon this item of the bill. He takes one view of this question and I take another view.

I need not waste time trying to describe the Grand Canyon. I have neither the time nor the talent requisite to such a task. Some years ago I dipped my pen deep enough into the ink of temerity to attempt to describe the Grand Canyon, and I shall not do so again. Sufficient it is to say that its temple depths, its towers and minarets, its glowing colors and vastness, are not matched anywhere.

In 1886 Benjamin Harrison, then a Senator of the United States and subsequently President of the United States, introduced a bill to make the Grand Canyon a national park. The bill failed to become a law. In the latter part of 1913 I introduced a bill to make the Grand Canyon a national park. My bill became a law. I employed extraordinary care to see to it that all the rights that any person or persons acquired in the Grand Canyon National Park prior to its establishment should be fully preserved.

The question now is, as the Senator from Utah indicated by reading the amendment, Shall we to-day grant to the Government of the United States, which owns the Grand Canyon National Park, the right, power, and authority to buy the Bright Angel Toll Trail, and, being unable to buy the trail, may the Federal Government use the said sum of $100,000 to build a trail? That is the issue here. The county owns one of the trails; there are other trails.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. McNARY. As a matter of personal information, I should like to inquire is it true that there are two Government-owned trails at this time running from the brink down into the canyon?

Mr. ASHURST. The Federal Government may own a trail, but the Bright Angel Trail is the only one upon which tolls may legally be collected. There are other trails there.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the Senator said a little while ago there are three trails leading into the canyon.

Mr. ASHURST. I think there are three.

Mr. McNARY. But the one in question, as I understand, is owned by the county?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is true.

Mr. McNARY. And the other two are free trails owned by the national park.

Mr. ASHURST. That is my understanding.

Mr. McNARY. That leads to this inquiry: If $100,000 should be appropriated for the construction of a new trail, making a fourth trail, a free one owned by the Government, what effect would that have financially on the trail owned by the county?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Federal Government owns a trail upon which tolls are not collected, those persons who could get access to the free trail would do so.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to his colleague?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CAMERON. I should like to say to the senior Senator from Arizona that under the present law of the State of Arizona the trail can not be sold unless it is condemned, and I never knew a county to condemn an asset from which an income was derived by way of toll or otherwise. I say that the trail, under the present law, can not be sold at all until the legislature changes the present toll road law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, for the purpose of the present argument, I am willing to concede that my colleague is correct. I do not assert that I agree with him as to his statement; but, for the purposes of this present argument, I will assume that he is correct. The Federal Government, nevertheless, can not buy unless and until all the requirements which the Senator mentions are complied with and the necessary legislation is enacted. The question is, Shall we grant to the Federal Government the right to buy the Bright Angel Trail if the county desires to sell the same, or to build a trail if the county does not desire to sell?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I did not know until this morning that there was a difference of view between the Senators from Arizona in regard to this matter; but I want to ask the Senator this question: I understand that there are now three trails, two of them owned by the Government and one owned by the county?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Has the county indicated its desire to sell its trail?

Mr. ASHURST. I say "yes" to that question, but it would require a more elaborate answer if the Senator will permit me to give it. Does the Senator wish that?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. Last April three Representatives in Congress—to wit, Representative HAYDEN, of Arizona; Representative CRAMTON, of Michigan; and Representative CARTER, of Oklahoma—together with a representative of the national park service, met at the Grand Canyon. I was not present. It was there agreed that these Representatives should attempt to secure appropriate legislation looking toward the purchase of Bright Angel Toll Trail. Two of the three county supervisors were present, and they agreed, for and on behalf of the board of supervisors, that they would later legally attempt to transfer this trail to the Federal Government if the Federal Government would spend the purchase price in building an approach road to the canyon.

I received telegrams from the Chamber of Commerce of Flagstaff, one of the towns in the county in which the trail is located, and from citizens of the county, indorsing the sale of the trail. Fairness requires me to say that I have letters and telegrams from other citizens of equal repute opposing the sale. The supervisors apparently are willing to sell the trail if they may do so according to law, in order that persons visiting the breathing places of our country, the lungs of our Nation, the national parks, may not be met with a tollgate keeper.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator has made it perfectly plain. There is only one point I wish to inquire about. If this amendment is agreed to, the Federal Government would not necessarily spend the $100,000 in building a trail right alongside the Bright Angel Trail. The language is, "For the construction of trails within the Grand Canyon National Park." If they could not buy this trail, they could use the $100,000 in building trails anywhere in the park. They would not be obliged to build it parallel with this trail, or from the same point to the same point that this trail is built.

Mr. ASHURST. Precisely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the Government would not use this money to build another trail?

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation is in the alternative. It authorizes the United States to buy the trail, and if the supervisors do not care to sell the trail then this $100,000 may be spent in building a trail.

Mr. FLETCHER. Trails.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. One of the serious objections to the amendment that is now offered is this: Of course if they build a trail a hundred feet away from this trail, they destroy the value of the county's trail.

Mr. ASHURST. Assume that to be true.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. CAMERON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in just a moment. In Arizona we have a large view of affairs. Many citizens there think of the general, the common good. They are proud of the Grand Canyon. They regard it as a heritage of their county and their State. They are pleased to invite the American people to come and see these beauties which the Creator, for the delectation of His children, has spread before them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator correctly, there are two trails already, aside from this trail.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then why is it necessary to pay a toll of a dollar over this trail?

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. BURSUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I yield. I promised to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I only want to make one observation, in view of the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho. I understand that there is a prohibition in the road laws of Arizona against the construction of a competitive trail within 1 mile of an existing trail.

Mr. ASHURST. I will discuss that later.

I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not I understand the situation exactly. Of course, I have been out to the Grand Canyon. The railroad that connects with the Grand Canyon comes to a certain basin, where the hotels are established. There is a natural place for a trail running from the end of this railroad, which is connected with the main line railroad. It is a basin by which they can get down to the bottom of the Grand Canyon with a trail. I know of no other trail anywhere near that trail—

Mr. ASHURST. It is some miles to the other trail.

Mr. PITTMAN. Nor do I know of any place where it is possible to make a good trail anywhere near there. You can see trails all over the canyon, but they are down below the rim. As far as I can see, there are very few places where you can get down from the rim. Where this railroad goes and where the hotels are built is a natural point for a trail, and that is monopolized, I might say, as far as I could see, by the trail in question, the Bright Angel Trail.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is just a question as to whether that trail shall be owned by the county or whether it shall be owned by the Government, as I see it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the county is willing to sell, I am certainly in favor of buying the trail, but I am not in favor of adopting an amendment here which would enable the Government practically to destroy the value of the trail and force the county to sell at a figure at which it does not desire to sell. If the county has signified or will signify its desire to sell, and in a way which it is authorized by law to do, of course I think we should own the trail; but I understand that about 80 per cent of this county is withdrawn from public entry.

Mr. ASHURST. A large percentage is withdrawn.

Mr. BORAH. And it is a pretty serious thing for a county not to have some kind of an income under those circumstances.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would not cut much of a figure were I to try to talk legal propositions to the Senator from Idaho, because he is one of the most excellent lawyers not only in the Senate but in the United States, but he talks about legislation compelling the county to sell.

Mr. BORAH. No; I did not say "compelling"; I said authorizing the county to sell.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say, first, this case is unique. Not only has the title of Coconino County to this trail been recognized by Congress by legislative construction, but it has been recognized by the Supreme Court of Arizona. No power known to Anglo-Saxon law, no power known to Congress, to the President, or to the Marine Corps, can deprive Coconino County of the Bright Angel Trail without the county's consent in the manner directed by the statutes of Arizona.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator had better withdraw that statement about the Marine Corps.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I will let the statement about the Marine Corps stand. They use it nowadays to dispossess citizens. Now, at the risk of tiring Senators I am going to recount the main facts regarding this trail.

Before the Grand Canyon was established as a national park, or a national monument, indeed, when it was public land of the United States, citizens established rights there—to wit, mining claims, and so forth. On the 31st day of January, 1891, a gentleman named Peter D. Berry, whom I know quite well, marked out a map of definite location, verified the same, and filed it in the county recorder's office of the appropriate county, claiming the right to collect tolls on such trail. Ten years passed. He collected no tolls, but he built the trail. The franchise expired. The owners appeared before the Board of Supervisors of the County of Coconino for an extension of the franchise. The board of supervisors granted the extension of the franchise. The board of supervisors attempted to extend the franchise for 10 years, but they had the power to extend it for only 5 years. Still the owners did not collect tolls for a year or two, and it was only about the year 1902 when the owners began to collect tolls. Their right to collect tolls was challenged by various lawsuits, instituted in some instances by the Santa Fe Railroad Co. The trail meanwhile had been alienated to my colleague. The court held that such a trail could not be alienated. The title reverted then to the original owners, and they collected tolls until 1903, when the franchise again expired. The county of Coconino began to collect tolls, and collected tolls one year.

In 1907 the legislature of the Territory passed an act, retroactive in character, plainly expressed in its terms to be retroactive, not ex post facto, and reinstated the original owners, my colleague and his companions, in the ownership of the Bright Angel Toll Trail.

That act was challenged in court. I was the district attorney of the county. Notice was served upon me demanding that I institute a writ of quo warranto to compel these owners to show by what authority they were collecting tolls. I refused to institute the writ. Suit was brought against me. I went to the Supreme Court of Arizona, and I had the unique distinction of having the Supreme Court of Arizona say, in so many words, that my discretion in refusing to bring the suit was sound.

It has therefore been officially decided that my discretion in refusing to oust the owners was sound. The unsuccessful litigants appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. Their appeal was dismissed. The owners of the Bright Angel Trail collected tolls five years more. A large portion of the people of that country are willing to transfer the trail to the Government. Two supervisors are willing. The trail can not be alienated unless and until the board of supervisors sells it according to law. Am I to stand here now to paralyze the arm of the Federal Government and say, "No; you shall not even have the authority to buy the trail, even if Coconino County desires to sell?" All that this amendment does is to provide that if Coconino County, in the manner prescribed by the law of Arizona, wishes to sell the trail, the Government may buy the same, or, if the county does not want to sell it, the Government may build another trail.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it contemplated that the $100,000 would be used to build another trail down into the canyon?

Mr. ASHURST. If the supervisors do not wish to sell this Bright Angel Toll Trail, then the money thus appropriated may be used for building another trail, where the National Park Service may wish to build. My colleague [Mr. CAMERON], or some other Senator, made the observation that, under the law, they could not build a trail within a mile of the present trail. That may be so, although I do not want to be committed to that as a certainty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the provision that the Government may build another trail could be eliminated, I think I would vote for this proposition. But it is perfectly clear to me why that is put in.

Mr. ASHURST. I will say that I would do almost anything reasonable to get the support of the able Senator from Idaho, because I think he generally wants to do right.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite a believer in national parks, but when I came to the Senate my State had 70 per cent of its public land withdrawn from public entry. I have been through that hades, and I do not want to impose it upon anybody else without his consent. If that portion of the measure enabling the Government to build another trail is stricken out and a provision inserted authorizing them to buy when the county gets ready to sell, I will be favorable to it; but there is only one object in making that other provision, and that is to build another trail, or to threaten to do so, and compel the county to sell whether it wants to or not.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me strip that proposition of its verbiage—

Mr. BORAH. We know how the National Government deals with us little fellows.

Mr. ASHURST. This is a case where, I repeat, by no means known to American law can the Federal Government oust the county of Coconino from that trail.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. I certainly yield to my friend.

Mr. HOWELL. A few moments ago I understood the Senator to say that the Santa Fe Railroad brought suit to prevent the collection of tolls down the Bright Angel Trail. That was about 1903, I believe.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I stated that, because that is part of the record.

Mr. HOWELL. And that the Santa Fe at that time was interested in the trail being a free trail.

Mr. ASHURST. The Santa Fe Railroad at that time had the concessions for the terminus at the railroad, and, together with other interests, furnished horses to those who wished to go up and down the trail.

Mr. HOWELL. Have they any interest in such concessions now?

Mr. ASHURST. They may have the concessions there now. That is my opinion.

Mr. HOWELL. In other words, this is a 20-year-old fight to make a free trail down into the canyon, and the Santa Fe has led it?

Mr. ASHURST. Is the Senator asking me the question?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I said that in 1903 litigation, which was prompted by the officials of the Santa Fe, was instituted to prevent the collection of tolls. I said that.

Mr. HOWELL. And I say that it has been a 20-year fight to secure a free trail down into the canyon by the Bright Angel Trail.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator can draw the inferences he pleases. I stated the facts. I hold no brief for the Santa Fe Co.

Mr. HOWELL. I did not wish to infer at all that the Senator was representing the Santa Fe in any way whatever.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure the Senator would not do that here.

Mr. HOWELL. No; absolutely not.

Mr. ASHURST. No; because he would not get away with it.

Mr. HOWELL. It was simply suggested to my mind that if the sale of this Bright Angel Trail were in the hands of the county commissioners, and if the Santa Fe officials have as much influence with county commissioners in the Senator's State as they have in mine, I would be fearful to leave the question to the county commissioners. If it could be provided that this trail should not be sold without a vote of the people of the county, I would say "Amen"; but I should hesitate very much to leave it to the county commissioners, with the Santa Fe behind the proposition.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for his championship of the rights of the people of Coconino County. They will thank him appropriately for his interest.

I do not worry about the supervisors of Coconino County. I do not worry about the people of that county. They are near nature's heart, and they know exactly what they want.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. When this matter was up before, on the passage of the bill, I voted for the committee amendment to strike out the provision, but stated at the time that I thought the Government ought to own this trail. As I understand it, it comes back now with a proposal from the House that if the Government can not buy this trail from the county, $100,000 will be appropriated to put a trail down into the canyon.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That looks to me as if it were intended as a coercive measure, to compel the county to sell, whether it wants to or not. I do not like the principle involved in that proposition, and I wanted to ask the Senator a question in regard to it. I had the pleasure of going up that trail last summer, and I do not know whether the county has a right of way of a certain width or not. Will the Senator advise me as to that?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the width is ample.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is what struck me before: That if the county does not see fit to sell, this procedure will be followed, if this provision is adopted—the Government will construct a trail parallel with the trail which now exists.

Mr. ASHURST. And what harm will come to the general public?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, that will compel the county either to sell or abandon its trail. While, as I said, I would like to see the Government own this trail, yet I do not like the principle involved of just holding them up, as a highwayman would hold some one up, and say, "If you do not sell, we will build a trail of our own." A small county can not stand up against the Government of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Government, with its money, can put in a parallel trail and thus practically destroy the value of the trail of the county. I am just seeking to get the Senator's view about it.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me ask the Senator from Washington, for whose judgment I have a high opinion, what harm would come to the people of the United States if the Government should build another trail there? We are not legislating today for a county. We are legislating for the United States and for posterity. Tell me what harm would come to the American people if the Government of the United States should build a trail in there upon which citizens could travel without the payment of toll?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No harm would come, of course, to the people of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. For whom we are legislating.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In doing that, Mr. President, it seems to me we want to do justice to the very weakest organization with which we are dealing; and while we want to benefit the people of the United States, we do not want to use our power to coerce a small organization to do what it does not want to do. I would rather see this provide an appropriation of $100,000 for the purchase of this trail, and then leave it for the future. If the Federal authorities find that they can not make a deal with the county, then we can consider the question as an independent proposition. But I do not like the principle involved in saying in the bill, "Here, gentlemen, if you do not want to sell, we will parallel your trail and destroy its value."

Mr. ASHURST. I have no power to accept the amendment, because the provision came over from the House. I am defending the House provision, or attempting to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if this $100,000 proposition originated with Congress? I take it that was considered a fair value for this trail.

Mr. ASHURST. It originated at the conference in 1923 with the supervisors of Coconino County.

Mr. FLETCHER. The county itself proposed to do that, consequently they are not being taken advantage of in this connection. Their wishes are being complied with, so far as we know. We may take the other view of it, too, that if we make an appropriation to buy the trail, without specifying any amount, then it would be in the power of the county to hold up the Government and to state that they would not sell the trail for less than $200,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand it, from statements made here, the supervisors have not authority to bind the county. They expressed that sentiment as their personal view.

Mr. ASHURST. They could not bind the county except in a manner prescribed by law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Evidently, then, we are justified in inferring that $100,000 is the fair valuation for this trail. I take it that it is pretty well understood out there and everywhere else that that is a fair value, and if it is, it should go through on that basis.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It seems to me that the county will probably be able to take care of itself. The thing in which I am interested is the name of the trail, the Bright Angel Trail. I want to be sure we are going to get that. If that comes into the bargain I am quite content to vote $100,000 of the people's money away to get a name like that.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to my brilliant friend, I will say that the name is more precious than the trail, and I am not astounded that my poetical friend is attracted by bright angels. I am myself.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply want to ask a question.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that the board of supervisors of the county offered to sell the trail to the Government for $100,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Two of the three members offered to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. And that is considered a fair price?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The House of Representatives, with the concurrence of the Congressman who represents that State and district, has passed a proposition to pay the county what two of the members of the board of supervisors thought was a fair price, $100,000, and if they refuse to accept that then the Government shall be permitted to build a trail—

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. So the people will not be subjected to the domination of a minority of the people in that county who want to charge a high price.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, after listening to my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I must admit that he intended to make all of his statements correctly, but I am inclined to think he did not do so. I did not expect to occupy the time of the Senate in talking further on the amendment, but I shall have to do so in order to enlighten the Senate once more as to the real circumstances surrounding the Bright Angel Trail and some history and facts thereon.

In 1890 and 1891 the Bright Angel Trail was built by myself and associates. The trail we built is 73 miles north and a little west of the town of Flagstaff, which at that time was the only inlet into the canyon. We had built a portion of the trail down as far as what is known as Indian Gardens—we were then a part of Yavapai County; Coconino County had not yet been created—when a partner of mine, who never did any work on the trail, and who lived on the Grand Canyon at a place called Grand View, came up one day. We wanted to send a party down the trail, so we asked him to take the party in for us. His name was Peter B. Burrett. He had no connection with the construction of Bright Angel Trail, had not a dollar in it at that time, and never has had; but this was, in a sense, the beginning of the real use of the trail.

The trail was built a great many years before the Grand Canyon was ever known to the public other than by those who might have read at some time Powell's Exploration of the Grand Canyon. The first trip into the Grand Canyon was made, I think, in 1869. I may not be correct about the year. My associate and I laid out the first wagon road that was ever laid out from Flagstaff to the Grand Canyon. We also laid out most all the wagon roads around the rim that are in use to-day. As stated before, we built Bright Angel Trail. We also built, later on, in 1902 and 1903 what is known as the Grand View Trail, 11 miles farther east on the south rim of the Grand Canyon. There was no one going to the Grand Canyon other than a few prospectors, myself, and my associate. I doubt if my distinguished colleague went to the Grand Canyon for 15 or 20 years after the trail was built. However, that makes no difference, as I am merely trying to give a little sketch of the real pioneering of this great wonder created by nature.

For a considerable number of years after we had built the trail but few came out to the canyon. We did not build the trail for tourist purposes. We built it for mining purposes. In most of the Western States, those west of the Missouri River, there is what is known as a toll road or trail law under which one can go on the public domain and build a trail or road. In Arizona we have a well-defined law of this kind, and it provides that at the end of 10 years' time the board of supervisors of the county in which the trail is located has the privilege of taking over the road or trail, or they can extend the time for use of it five years longer. That was the old law under which we built the trail. During this long period of time we started and undertook to operate a triweekly stage coach to the Grand Canyon. Very few people went out, but finally we built up a little business for our stage line. A man came along by the name of Wilbur and put on a first-class stage line. He ran that stage line until the railroad was built from Williams to Onelda Junction, 45 miles from the south rim of the Grand Canyon. Then the travel was switched over to the end of the railroad and carried into the Grand Canyon from there.

About that time the Santa Fe Railroad Co., which did not build the road in the first place, got possession of the Grand Canyon Railroad through a foreclosure proceeding in court. Everything as far as the trail was concerned had been very happy up to that time. Soon after the Santa Fe Railroad got possession of the line of road to which I have just referred, they began to show a disposition to get possession of everything else. Through their attorneys here in Washington, Britton & Gray, they carried their ideas and plans in this connection to Gifford Pinchot, who was then the chief of the Bureau of Forestry under President Roosevelt. They presented their case to Mr. Pinchot and he at once granted them a free right of way over the trail without even consulting us, the real builders and owners, without even notifying us, and without even giving us a chance for our life in any way. We were not heard in this proceeding or even notified as to the hearing. In other words, we were out of the picture so far as they were concerned.

A friend of mine in Los Angeles, who was at that time connected with the railroad company, and another good friend of mine who has long since died, wired me to come to Los Angeles. I went there not knowing what was wanted. I was told, "They are going to take your trail away from you, as the Bureau of Forestry has granted the Santa Fe Railroad Co. an easement over your trail. You had better go to Washington and protect yourself." At that time Blinger Hermann was Commissioner of the United States Land Office and Ethan Allen Hitchcock was Secretary of the Interior. I came down here and found in a month or so that I was up against a brace game, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office was standing in, so to speak, with the railroad company, and I had not any power to move him or get his decision on my rights. I appealed to the President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, and told him my story. That great President listened to my side of the issue and immediately ordered the case out of the General Land Office and before the Secretary of the Interior for a special hearing.

The Secretary of the Interior took up the matter, and I appeared before him. I did not have money enough to employ a lawyer, so I argued my own case. The law was with me, and he decided that the Bureau of Forestry had no jurisdiction over the Bright Angel Trail, that the rights had accrued long prior to the creation of the Grand Canyon National Park, and that my rights were valid. That is my story.

My good friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] asked the question if the Santa Fe Railroad Co. was not behind this fight. I want to say to Senators here to-day that the railroad company is behind the fight and has been ever since it began, many years ago. I know, because I fought this same issue out with them many times before. This is not a fight between the Government and Coconino County. This is a fight between the railroad corporation and the county of Coconino and the Government. These are the facts, and I can prove everything I say, and I shall do so before we get through. I did not care to go into the details of the matter, but as I have been forced to do so to protect the rights of Coconino County, I am bound to do it.

A statement has already been made with reference to the situation as it exists at the present time. The trail rights are in the county of Coconino. There was a conference on a proposed agreement with reference to the matter at the rim of the Grand Canyon, and among those present were Hon. L. C. CRAMPTON, Hon. C. D. CARTEE, and Hon. CARL HAYDEN; also the National Park Service officials, H. M. Albright, G. C. Bolton, and L. I. Harrison; two members of the board of supervisors, including the chairman; and a representative of the Fred Harvey system, and one or two others. I think the date of this conference was April 4, 1923.

Fred Harvey & Co. are not only a part of the Santa Fe system but, so far as we all know, they belong to the Santa Fe system. They have charge of all the dining rooms on the Santa Fe system. They have charge of the dining cars on the Santa Fe system. They have charge of all the hotels along the Santa Fe line. They run the El Tovar Hotel at the Grand Canyon, and they also have charge, directly or indirectly, of all the vehicles, automobiles, horses, and everything else at the Grand Canyon. They have a concession which is an iron-clad monopoly, and they can charge the tourist who visits the Grand Canyon just as much as they like. As an example, which I have called to the attention of the Senate before, when we had our horses at the Grand Canyon, which were operated by us as individuals over this same trail without any coercive park supervision, one could go from the south rim of the canyon to the bottom of the canyon for $3. Since the Government eliminated the public or anyone that might go in there with horses or vehicles, they are charging $6, just twice as much. If the trail is sold by the county, they will pay $10 or any other arbitrary or unreasonable price for everyone that goes down the trail. I am trying to protect the public of the United States, as well as the county of Coconino.

I wish to read at this time a telegram from Williams, Ariz., because there seems to be an impression here in the Senate that the county is just itching to sell this trail; that all that is necessary is to pass this bill, and the county authorities will sign on the dotted line. It is dated March 5, 1924, as follows:

WILLIAMS, ARIZ., March 5, 1924.

Senator RALPH H. CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.:

I attended meeting with Crumpton and others at Grand Canyon; tentative agreement was drawn there as a basis of which to work. I am opposed to sale of Bright Angel Trail under the terms of that agreement.

R. C. RITTENHOUSE,
Chairman Board of Supervisors, Coconino County.

There was one other member there at that time, and there was one member absent. The chairman of the board of supervisors never assented to that tentative agreement, so he states in a telegram to me, which I have put into the RECORD, and which I know is correct. Just a few days ago I received the following telegram from R. C. Rittenhouse, chairman board of supervisors, Coconino County:

WILLIAMS, ARIZ., March 15, 1924.

Senator RALPH H. CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.:

Board of supervisors in meeting March 10 unanimously declared themselves opposed to sale of Bright Angel Trail as outlined in Hayden bill.

They meant the Hayden amendment. That was the first amendment. On March 14, after the other amendment had been brought forth, Representative HAYDEN having telegraphed to them what was proposed in the new House amendment, I received this telegram:

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ., March 14, 1924.

Hon. RALPH CAMERON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

By resolution adopted this day the board of supervisors of Coconino County have declared themselves opposed to the sale of the Bright Angel Trail and Toll Road on the terms as outlined by the Hayden bill.

J. B. RICKEL, Clerk.

That telegram relates to the proposition which is now before the Senate. What I have just read is not my own statement but is a statement of the chairman of the board of supervisors and the clerk of the board of supervisors. Since this matter has been considered and all the facts brought out we have this evidence undenied that the so-called tentative agreement was in fact nothing at all—a misunderstanding by the officers of the county.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAMERON. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Were the supervisors whose telegrams the Senator has read the same persons who, it has been stated, entered into the tentative agreement with reference to the amount named?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir; they are the identical men.

I do not wish to misconstrue anything, nor will I make a statement on the floor of the Senate which I do not believe is absolutely correct; I am not here for that purpose; but I am here to do the best I can for the people whom I in part represent. I have several letters and telegrams which I have received during the last month stating that the people of Coconino County, almost to a man and to a woman, are opposed to the sale of the Bright Angel Trail. The board of supervisors of that county are now opposed to the sale of the trail under any circumstances thus far brought out. As I have stated before, under the present existing laws of the State of Arizona there is no way on earth by which the supervisors can sell this trail unless the trail be condemned and declared worthless. Why should and how could the board of supervisors declare worthless one of the best assets, one of the best income producers for the taxpayers which they have in the county? Nearly all the county, all the public domain, has been withdrawn for national parks, for national forests, for Indian reservations, or for game preserves. Then, if Congress desires to do what is right—and I know it does—why is it proposed to take the last drop of the blood of the people of that county out of their veins and turn it over to what I am justified in saying is a corporation? Every national park, as Senators will find if they will look into the question, is controlled by corporations; they are not national parks any more. I have nothing against the national parks; I am for all the parks; I am for creating all the playgrounds that we can, and for maintaining them, but let us not put them in a position where only the rich can enjoy them. Let us allow equal opportunities to the poor fellow who comes along in a Ford or a Dodge or on horseback or with his pack animal, as we all used to travel in that region. Before the age of automobiles I traveled for many years in the section about which I am talking, when one could not take a wagon in there, but had to go on horseback with a pack animal.

I will say to any Senator in this body to-day that if he goes out in the national parks in his own vehicle he will be told when he can start out in the morning, when he can go to camp at night, unless he is favored by the transportation companies which run the parks to-day. I tell you, Senators, the situation is getting serious. I may not change a vote in the Senate by what I am saying, but, nevertheless, what I am saying is the truth. I can not understand why I have to stand up here and fight in order to protect the people themselves and the people's money which we are proposing to appropriate at this time. Understand me, Senators, I am not opposed to parks; I am not opposed to the sale of the trail if the county gets its real worth, but such is not the case here. This is a perpetual asset owned by a county already strangled by withdrawals, and the proponents of this sale try to hide under the cloak of a great public policy when they know the terms of this proposition call for the doing of something for the Government that the Government already plans to do itself; in other words, for Coconino County it is heads I win, tails you lose, if this thing should be allowed.

At present there are three trails that run to the south rim of the Grand Canyon—the Hermit Basin Trail, the Grand View Trail, and the Bright Angel Trail. Under the old law, I believe, a trail may not be built within a mile of either side of an existing trail, and if one had all the money in the world he could not build a trail anywhere else along the south rim of the Grand Canyon other than those which have already been built which would be safe to take people over or which would be a sane investment or a sane necessity.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to understand the statement the Senator has just made. Does the Senator say that if we should appropriate $100,000, as is set out in this provision, the Government could not build a trail paralleling the Bright Angel Trail within a mile on each side of it?

Mr. CAMERON. On each side of it; yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That takes away the objection that occurred to me.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to be, and I am trying to be, exactly fair, and I wish my colleague to hear the statement I am about to make. It was the law of Arizona that on the public domain a trail could not be built within a mile of an existing trail. I would not want to be committed to that precise statement of law now, however, and I would not want the Senator from Washington to base his vote on that understanding. While I have not made an examination recently, I am not willing now to agree that that is the proper view of the law. That was true when the land was a part of the public domain; that was the old law; but the law may have been altered. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. CAMERON. I think my colleague is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator from Washington wants me to tell what I think is true about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. That was the old law, and no doubt when the national park was created this was or is no longer effective. I do not know for sure.

Mr. ASHURST. I am expressing no opinion on it, for I have not examined the law for several years.

Mr. CAMERON. I think the trail right of way is 77 feet down into the canyon.

As to the question of charges on the trail into the Canyon and as to how the public may be benefited, let me say that the proceeds derived from the tolls are used for the most part to keep up the trail, although some four or five thousand dollars a year go into the treasury of the county in which the trail is located. In conclusion then permit me to say: The board of supervisors have advised us in their telegrams of March 14 and March 15 that they do not wish to sell the trail. The appropriation is not needed, because in a bill now pending in the House it is proposed to appropriate some $800,000 to build a main artery from Maine to the south rim of the Grand Canyon. Therefore, why should we appropriate money in this instance that is not needed and that can not be used for any legitimate purpose? Why should we apply an appropriation to something that is not necessary, when there are so many demands for the money of the Government and when there are clamors for appropriations for a great variety of objects, including the relief of the farmers, pensions and assistance for disabled soldiers, needs for public buildings, and so forth? Why should we, when there is no cause for it whatsoever, appropriate $100,000, when the people to whom it is proposed to give it and on whom it is trying to force it have expressed themselves individually and through the board of supervisors as being unwilling to accept it? I think it is preposterous and can serve only as a coercive force when one comes to think of it, and I hope Senators will vote to reject the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Utah is not present at the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Kendrick	Ransdell
Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Reed, Mo.
Bayard	Elliott	King	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Ferris	Ladd	Robinson
Brandegee	Fess	Lodge	Sheppard

Curtis	Howell	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Phipps	Warren
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Weller
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Ralston	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the proposal as it first came from the House regarding the Bright Angel Trail was something more than now appears in the amendment numbered 47. The original proposition was that the Government purchase this trail for $100,000, and that the $100,000 should be used in building an approach road to the park. It now appears that the county supervisors of Coconino County have no authority to sell the trail except for cash, the payment of the cash to be unconditional; but I assume that the county is willing to make some arrangement, perhaps not exactly as a condition precedent to the sale of the trail, for the building of an approach road.

The proposition as it comes to us from the House now looks to me to be a coercive measure. I do not believe that the Senate wants to coerce the supervisors of a county in Arizona, but I do believe that the Senate ought to make some effort to obtain title to this trail. It is within that national park, and in my judgment there should not be a private toll trail within the park.

The amendment which comes to us from the House is peculiar in more than that respect. It reads:

For the construction of trails within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That said sum may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase from the county of Coconino, Ariz., of the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail within said park under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct an approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of said park.

But no appropriation is made in the amendment for the construction of that road from the national highway up to the south boundary of the park. I can not see any purpose in putting in that provision to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a road and provide him with no funds for doing it. It seems to me, however, that an arrangement may be made down there to carry out the original intent. If the people of that county want to dispose of this trail to the Government, and want an approach road to the park built, as they originally proposed, it seems to me that some arrangement can be made for it.

This amendment comes to us from the House as an original proposition. The conferees have not agreed upon this proposal of the House; and as a solution of the problem, I move that the conferees be instructed to propose to the conferees of the House, in lieu of amendment No. 47, the following.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that he move the amendment straight, so that it will be the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Edge in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from New Mexico that the Senate is now considering the motion made by the Senator from Utah, which is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that he offer the amendment as an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If it can come up in that way from a parliamentary point of view, I should much prefer to do that; but this bill having been referred to a conference committee, I am under the impression that the Senate could not very well change it until the conferees had reported.

Mr. SMOOT. The conferees have now made a partial report on the bill, and the Senate has agreed to all of the items that were agreed upon. Then, following that, I moved to agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 47. Now, the Senator can offer an amendment to that amendment, and it will be in order at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I see. In lieu of the amendment No. 47, I move to insert the following:

For the purchase of the Bright Angel Toll Road within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That said sum shall not be so used until an arrangement be made satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior for the construction of an approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of said park without expense to the United States.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the people of the county can have a chance to vote on that before it is accepted? Does the Senator's amendment give the people of the county the privilege of voting on it?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This is a mere proposal on the part of the Government of the United States to buy it under these conditions; and, of course, if they can not buy it that ends the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. If the laws of Arizona are such that they can not do it without a vote of the people, they can not purchase it.

Mr. CAMERON. If the amendment will provide for a vote of the people, I will accept it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; we can not provide anything of that sort. That is purely a matter for the people of Arizona. We do not know what the laws of Arizona are.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. If a provision were inserted to the effect that the trail should be purchased only upon approval by vote of the people of the county, then the trail could not be sold until proper machinery was provided for the people to vote on it. Why would it not be a good idea to put in such a provision?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the law of Arizona.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have been told that that is the law now, but I say to the Senator that we could not impose a condition which the law of Arizona does not impose.

Mr. HOWELL. But we could provide a condition such that no purchase would be made unless the proper law was provided by which they could vote upon the subject.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course that provision could be put in here, but for one I should not favor it. I do not know what the provision of the law of Arizona may be for the sale of such property as this, and it does not concern me. I assume that the people of Arizona are able to make their own laws and dispose of their property in their own way. What I propose is that we make an offer to purchase this trail, and I assume that that offer, if accepted at all, will be in accordance with the laws of Arizona.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it, of course, that the Government would want to get a good title to the property, and that title would depend upon the laws of Arizona, not upon any provision that we might make here.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. The State of Arizona provides a method for the transfer of property in that State, real estate as well as personal property, and whatever is required under their law to vest title in the United States the United States would have to accept. I do not think we could provide anything different.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. We certainly can not control the transfer of property in Arizona. We make a proposal here to buy the property for a certain sum of money and under certain conditions. If the people of Arizona want to transfer the property under those conditions, all well and good. If not, there is no trade, and the proposal lapses.

I do not think we should impose upon the people of Arizona any conditions regarding the transfer of their property which the laws they have made do not impose. I therefore am not willing to accept an amendment which would require that this question be submitted to a vote of the people of that county. I have been told that that is necessary under the law as it exists in Arizona, but I do not know whether it is or not, and I am not going to concern myself about the laws of Arizona.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOWELL. My experience has taught me that oftentimes these local bodies can not be trusted to represent the attitude of the people. For instance, I know that in our own city we have had to take away from the city council the right to grant a franchise to any corporation. It is granted only by a vote of the people. Why? Because experience has taught us that the council could not be trusted with this power. I was simply suggesting that rather than intrust to the supervisors the power of determining whether or not they should sell this trail it should be submitted to the people of the county to determine. True, we can not affect the laws of Arizona, but we can provide that we will not purchase unless the people approve by a vote, and then they can make their arrangements to have a vote and carry it through in that way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course we can.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. We were one of the first States to adopt the recall, and it is applicable to county officers. I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska is sincere in this matter. Senators may give their perturbed spirits rest, however; you are not going to force anything down the throats of any part of Arizona. If the people of Coconino County think that the sale should not be put through, even before the advertisements could be completed, before the 30 days were over, our recall would "yank" officials from their office, "yank" meaning in Arizona to remove quickly. If the supervisors should seek to do anything in opposition to the public interest, they would never have a chance to carry it out.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the matter any further, but I really would like to inquire from either one of the Senators from Arizona as to the purpose of putting into this amendment numbered 47 the authorization to the Secretary to construct a road from the Old Trails Highway up to the south boundary of the park without making any appropriation for it.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. That would grant authority to build this road as authority was granted to build a road into the Yellowstone.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. With the idea that there will be a subsequent appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then what has become of the proposition that the money used for the purchase of this trail should ultimately find its way into the construction of a highway from the Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of the park?

Mr. ASHURST. We could not do other than provide that the assets of this sale shall be paid into the county treasury. That is all we could do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But why go further regarding that other road and provide that after the money gets into the county there is a probability that it may be used—

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator if he expects Coconino County, out of its funds, to build an approach road within the park? I know the Senator does not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; not within the park. This is to the park.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator really expect to have Coconino County build a road within a national forest, over land within a forest? Does he want the county to do that at the county's expense? I must now rush to the aid of Coconino County against Senators who were so solicitous a moment ago. Surely the Senator does not wish to have Coconino County build a road at the county's expense through a national forest.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Was not that the original proposal?

Mr. ASHURST. The original proposal?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The money was to be employed and used in building an approach road, but we find we can not do that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Am I to understand that the little station of Maine, on the Santa Fe road, is in a public forest?

Mr. ASHURST. It is, and pretty nearly everything else there is in a reserve. I hope the Senator will never recede from the position he has taken so logically and ably heretofore, to wit, that in a national forest the Government ought to build the roads. All we are asking is that the same rules be applied to Arizona that are applied elsewhere.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I had prepared this amendment with the view of carrying out the original proposition, that the money would be used to build this road; but I say to the Senator that if that approach road is within a national forest I think the road ought to be built at the expense of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I did not know that when I prepared the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Probably I should have told the Senator. I knew it myself, and I assumed others knew it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, Mr. President, I will modify my amendment by striking out the proviso.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico proposes an amendment to the amendment of the House. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The READING CLERK. In lieu of the amendment as agreed to by the House the Senator from New Mexico proposes to insert:

For the purchase of the Bright Angel Toll Road within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the House.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I would like to amend that by providing that it shall be left to a vote of the people of Coconino County.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator propose his amendment in the form in which he would like to have it submitted?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. After this amendment is agreed to, the Senator may offer a further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the House amendment.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, as I recall, the proposal in the original bill was that $100,000 should be appropriated for the construction of a road to join with the Bright Angel Trail, and that the money should be used for that purpose provided the Bright Angel Trail was turned over to the Government. It would seem that the proposition involved in the pending amendment is identical with the original proposition, because the amendment provides for the building of this road, but makes no appropriation therefor.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending amendment would provide for an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. My amendment does provide for an appropriation with which to buy the trail, and there is nothing in it about the approach road at all.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Kendrick	Ransdell
Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Reed, Mo.
Bayard	Ernst	King	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Ferris	Ladd	Robinson
Brandegee	Fess	Lodge	Sheppard
Brookhart	Fletcher	McKellar	Shields
Broussard	Frazier	McKinley	Simmons
Bruce	George	McLean	Smith
Bursum	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Cameron	Gooding	Mayfield	Spencer
Capper	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Caraway	Harrell	Neely	Stephens
Colt	Harris	Norris	Swanson
Copeland	Harrison	Oddie	Wadsworth
Conzues	Heflin	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Howell	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Phelps	Weller
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Willis
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Ralston

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside to enable us to continue the consideration of the action of the House on certain amendments of the Senate to the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. How long does the Senator think it will require to settle the Bright Angel Trail dispute?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will take very much longer.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does seem to me that it ought to be disposed of promptly.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] wishes to make a short statement in regard to the reclamation project in his State. I am going to ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment anyway, but he seems to think it necessary to make a statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to having the unfinished business laid aside temporarily, but solely for the purpose of the consideration of the action of the House on these amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator make that request?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I make the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside solely for the purpose of the consideration of the amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. Automatically at the conclusion of the consideration of the amendments to which the senior Senator from Utah has invited attention, the unfinished business would then come before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CAMERON. I would like to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico the Senator from Arizona proposes to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no purchase shall be made of the said Bright Angel Trail until the people of Coconino County, Ariz., shall have ratified such purchase by vote at an election for such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as amended, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of Bright Angel Toll Road within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That no purchase shall be made of the said Bright Angel Trail until the people of Coconino County, Ariz., shall have ratified said purchase by vote at an election for such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. COLT. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am advised that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], with whom I have a general pair, would vote upon this question as I intend to vote. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—44.
Borah	Dill	Jones, Wash.	Oddie
Brandegee	Edge	Keyes	Pepper
Broussard	Ernst	King	Phipps
Bruce	Fess	Ladd	Ransdell
Bursum	Frazier	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Cameron	Gooding	McKinley	Smoot
Capper	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Colt	Harrell	McNary	Stanfield
Cousens	Howell	Mayfield	Wadsworth
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Moses	Weller
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Willis
NAYS—27.
Adams	Edwards	Neely	Shields
Ashurst	Ferris	Overman	Simmons
Bayard	George	Pittman	Smith
Brookhart	Glass	Ralston	Stephens
Caraway	Harris	Reed, Mo.	Swanson
Copeland	Kendrick	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McKellar	Sheppard
NOT VOTING—25.
Ball	Harrison	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Heflin	Shipstead	Warren
Elkins	Johnson, Calif.	Shortridge	Watson
Fernald	La Follette	Stanley	Wheeler
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sterling
Gerry	McCormick	Trammell
Greene	Norbeck	Underwood

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of New Mexico as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the motion of the Senator from Utah to concur in the House amendment as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], and his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As that Senator is absent, I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 24, as follows:

So the amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60. That is what is known as the Howard University amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. What will be the effect of the Senate concurring in the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The effect will result in a reduction of the appropriation by $500,000, embracing the item for additions to medical school building, $370,000, and for equipment for additions to medical school buildings, $130,000, so that the total, instead of being $865,000, will be $365,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then it reduces the appropriation by a total of about $500,000?

Mr. SMOOT. It reduces the appropriation by $500,000 exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree that the motion should be agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OWEN in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] that the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60 be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. I now move that the Senate insist upon the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 38, and 39.

Mr. ROBINSON. What are those amendments?

Mr. SMOOT. Those amendments are as follows:

Amendment numbered 15 relates to the reclamation project on the Flathead Indian Reservation, amendment numbered 16 is an amendment on the same item, amendment numbered 17 has to do with the reclamation project on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, amendment numbered 18 relates to the reclamation project on the Blackfeet Reservation, amendment numbered 19 has reference to the Blackfeet reclamation project, amendment numbered 38 has reference to the Newlands reclamation project, and amendment numbered 39 is the total appropriations for all of the reclamation projects. As to those amendments, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one of these items which is known as amendment numbered 38. The provision as it came from the House of Representatives is as follows:

Newlands project, Nevada: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $155,000.

The Senate amended that provision by changing the appropriation from $155,000 to $400,000 and adding this language:

of which amount $245,000 shall be used for drainage purposes when the water users of the Truckee-Carson Irrigation district have voted for a contract binding themselves to reimburse the Federal Government for the cost thereof.

So far the managers of the conference on the part of the House of Representatives have not agreed to the Senate amendment. If the amendment is not agreed to the result will be a lack of funds for the drainage of the lands in that project.

Now I want the Senate and the House to understand how important the drainage proposition is in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior; and I wish to say that whenever any particular matter with regard to irrigation meets the approval of the present Secretary of the Interior it is absolutely needed. Here is what took place at a hearing before the Committee on Reclamation of Arid Lands on March 17, at which the Secretary of the Interior was present. This is the testimony which was given in the hearing:

Secretary WORK. It develops in starting these reclamation projects that no provision was made for drainage I believe in any of them. That is one of the first requisites to provide for in putting out a new project. Many of them have seeped back until the acreage is lost. It happens with many of them that twice as much land was expected to be irrigated as is irrigated. Of course, that doubles the cost to those who have to bear the cost of all of it; it increases their cost, and in addition to that the expenses was probably doubled or maybe trebled by construction, so that has embarrassed these people on the project to the point where they can not pay out.

Senator PITTMAN. Your department has to a certain extent met that drainage problem as far as the Newlands project is concerned. I am aware of that.

Secretary WORK. We did that rather drastically, too.

Senator PITTMAN. Yes; it was an emergency.

Secretary WORK. And under considerable protest.

Senator PITTMAN. And it has worked out?

Secretary WORK. Well, it is not completed yet, Senator.

Senator PITTMAN. Not entirely; no. And there is a provision for an appropriation.

Secretary WORK. We took all the money we had to put in drainage rather than complete the project in order to save what we had.

The situation, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, is that the Government, which has expended several million dollars on this project, is in danger of losing its investment as well as that the homesteaders are in danger of losing their lands by a failure to provide for the drainage of the project.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, and is it not the opinion also of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is undoubtedly my opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is also my opinion. That is the reason why I have insisted upon this appropriation of $275,000 remaining in the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. It seems to me incomprehensible that Members of the other body should take the chance of the result by killing an amendment of this kind when the Secretary of the Interior and all those who are familiar with the project state that it is essential to save the project.

Mr. President, I do not know that much more can be said or need be said. I do not know how language could be put any stronger than it has been put in the hearings. The Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], is familiar with these questions, and he concurs with all of the other western Senators that drainage is absolutely essential to the success of irrigation projects. I do not care how much money may be spent in placing water on an irrigation project, if there is not provided a drainage system the water level will rise until it will drown out everything on the land, and that is what has taken place.

Again, in the same hearing, we find this colloquy took place:

Senator PITTMAN. But there are many projects, Mr. Secretary, that may have cost a great deal more than they expected, but after they are two-thirds completed, we will say, and the water users are actually existing on them and making crops, it would seem that it was essential to complete that kind of a project.

Secretary WORK. Absolutely, to complete it at any cost; and then adjust the cost afterwards and let the Government bear the expense of the overcharge.

The Newlands project was one of the first projects ever instituted under the irrigation system, and there were a great many mistakes made by the Government. I am not criticizing the department in regard to those mistakes, because it was an experiment; it was something new.

But what are the facts with regard to this project? As Secretary Work testified the other day, the Government expected to get twice as much water from Lake Tahoe, which is on the dividing line between California and Nevada, and it expected to place under irrigation twice as much land as has been placed under irrigation. What happened? After they had laid out this irrigation project to reclaim probably 140,000 acres, and after they had invited homesteaders from all over the United States to go there with their families and to build homes, with the expectation and the promise that they would be furnished ample water to irrigate their homesteads, it developed that there was a mistake, and that they could only get half of the water which they had expected to get from Lake Tahoe, the reservoir selected for the irrigation of this land. What was the result of that? It was just as Secretary Work said; the cost was twice as great to the settlers. The settler has complained about that, but what the settler particularly complains about now is that the Government delays furnishing those essential things that will preserve what he has built up there in 8 or 10 years as a homesteader.

What are those essential things? The Government has to give him enough water so that he can produce more than one-half a crop each year, and it has to give him sufficient drainage so that the crop he does raise will not be drowned out. It has not made the arrangements to carry out its contract as to furnishing the necessary supply of water, but the Secretary of the Interior and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have met the emergency temporarily, as far as drainage is concerned, by providing this amendment, carrying the small appropriation of $245,000, to protect a project that already has cost the Government several million dollars.

I know that the managers on behalf of the Senate are fighting for this amendment. I do not believe that the managers on behalf of the House so fully understand what it means. It is a frightful thing that the interests of the Government and the interests of thousands of homesteaders can be jeopardized by reason of the indifference and neglect of legislators.

If this bill comes back here with this amendment out of it I intend to use every bit of physical strength as well as knowledge of this subject that I have to educate some of those who are now acting without any consideration whatever of the great question involved. I do not say that as a threat to this body. I say it because the circumstances are so outrageous that anyone is justified in saying it. I have no doubt that the managers on behalf of the House favor this proposition, but they have back of them a great number of legislators who apparently have not the time or the opportunity or the desire to consider important questions of this kind. I hope that such legislators will read the remarks of the Secretary of the Interior given at the hearings referred to in these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS managers on behalf of the Senate at the further conference.

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

The joint resolution as introduced by Mr. WADSWORTH and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary December 6, 1923, is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article, in lieu of Article V, be proposed to the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of each House shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by three-fourths of the several States through their legislatures or conventions, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress or the convention: Provided, That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote; and that, until three-fourths of the States have ratified or more than one-fourth of the States have rejected or defeated a proposed amendment, any State may change its vote: And provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

The joint resolution was reported by Mr. WALSH of Montana from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the word "Article" in line 1, page 2, and in lieu to insert:

ARTICLE —.

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, upon the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution when ratified by a vote of the qualified electors in three-fourths of the several States, said election to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe, and that until three-fourths of the States shall have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States shall have rejected, a proposed amendment any State may in like manner change its vote: Provided, That if at any time more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the proposed amendment, said rejection shall be final, and further consideration thereof by the States shall cease: Provided further, That any amendment proposed hereunder shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution as provided in the Constitution within six years from the date of submission hereof to the States by the Congress: Provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senate now has under consideration Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto. This joint resolution, then, does not seek to confer upon the Federal Government any additional power or to affect in any way the selection of Federal officials or their terms of office or the sessions of the Congress. It relates solely to the method of adopting amendments to the Constitution.

Article V of the Constitution is the article in which the machinery for the adoption and ratification of amendments is set forth. The article is short, and I think it worth while that it be read:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

The first sentence under the proviso, with respect to amendments which may be made prior to the year 1808, is no longer of any importance, as, of course, it ceased to be of importance when the year 1808 came along.

Mr. President, it will be noted that the ratification of a Federal amendment may be achieved by either of two alternatives, and it is for the Congress to decide which of the alternatives shall be adopted when it submits an amendment. The Congress, in the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution, may direct that ratification shall be had by the legislatures of the several States, or by conventions called within the several States for the purpose of considering the proposed amendment. Since the adoption of the original Constitution in 1789, 19 amendments have been added to it. In none of those 19 cases has the Congress resorted to the alternative of submitting the amendments to conventions to be called in the several States. In all of the 19 cases the Congress has submitted the amendments to the legislatures of the several States.

The question may be asked, "Why is it necessary to propose any change in the machinery for the consideration and ratification of amendments?" The answer is that experience through the years has demonstrated that there are certain elements of weakness in the machinery set up under Article V; and if it is true that there are certain elements of weakness in that machinery, it is important for us to give consideration to its perfection. Living as we are in a restless era, and hearing as we do many, many proposals for changing the fundamental law of this Republic, and remembering as we must that there are now pending in the Congress something like 100 joint resolutions proposing amendments to the Federal Constitution, it is incumbent upon us to give very, very serious consideration to the machinery by which this Constitution of ours is to be amended in the future.

I take it that no Member of this body would urge that little or no consideration be given to the possibilities of the future, and that every Member of this body is more than willing to see to it that whatever changes are made in our basic law in the generations to come shall be made with due consideration of their importance and their significance and their final and lasting effect upon the lives of more than 100,000,000 people.

Those who believe that the machinery for the consideration of amendments is susceptible of improvement, and that it should be improved, have been brought to that conclusion as the result of a number of incidents which have occurred in the past in connection with the ratification of one or more of the amendments that have been added to the Constitution; and at this point it may be proper for me to remind the Senate that the first 10 amendments may very well be considered a part of the original instrument. The principles contained in them were generally taken for granted in the Constitutional Convention of 1787—so much so, as I recollect the history of that convention, that the Delegates there present did not believe it necessary to insert a bill of rights in the Federal Constitution. But so fearful were the people of that time that government when once set up might turn out to be arbitrary and despotic, and attempt to rob the people of their rights as they sensed them, that a demand instantly arose throughout the 13 States at the time the Federal Constitution was submitted for ratification that the bill of rights set forth in the first 10 amendments should be immediately added; and those 10 amendments were added to the Constitution, as I recollect, in 1790.

They were all submitted by the Congress at the same time, if my recollection is correct, and were adopted with unanimity. So, for the purpose of this discussion, at least, we can regard the first 10 amendments as part of the original instrument. In the true sense of the word, therefore, 9 amendments have been adopted since the original Constitution was adopted.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST], in a very informing address a few days ago, related some incidents which occurred in connection with the ratification of one or two of the amendments which were adopted immediately following the Civil War. I think he referred especially and particularly to the fifteenth amendment. He related upon some rather startling incidents, which, if repeated in the consideration of future amendments, would certainly endanger the integrity of the Constitution of the United States.

I shall not discuss any of the happenings connected with the ratification of those amendments which were added to the Constitution shortly following the great Civil War, but I do want to bring to the attention of the Senate some incidents which occurred in connection with the ratification of the last two amendments, the eighteenth and the nineteenth, and as I do so I beg the Senate to believe that I am in no way swayed or influenced in reaching the conclusions I have reached by any consideration of the merits or demerits of the eighteenth amendment or of the nineteenth amendment. Those two amendments are now a part of the Constitution, thoroughly embedded in it, and no matter what one's opinion may have been as to their wisdom, certainly it is not my purpose to attack them as such, but merely to draw the attention of the Senate to some things which occurred in connection with their ratification, and to ask the Members of the Senate to project their minds into the future and ascertain, if they will, whether they would like to have the same kind of incidents occur in connection with the ratification of future amendments.

I assume that no Senator will deny the assertion that the people who set up a government, provide for its powers, and impose limitations upon it, as set forth in a constitution, should have the right of passing upon any changes in the form or powers of that government which may be proposed.

Every State in the Union but one, the State of Delaware, provides in its State constitution that amendments thereto shall be passed upon by the people of the State in popular referendum. The method of submission of State constitutional amendments varies in the several States, but in all but one of them, Delaware, the people themselves make the final judgment, and it may be said that in Delaware, by an indirect method, the people of that State may exercise a very profound and compelling influence in the final decision.

I think it fair to say that a great many people in the United States believed that it was within the power of the people of a State to give direct consideration to an amendment to the Federal Constitution if they chose to do so, by placing some limitation upon the power of the legislature in ratifying a Federal amendment. That phase of the question has been drawn to our attention very sharply as the result of an experience in connection with the ratification of the eighteenth amendment.

Whether the trend toward direct action on the part of the people in legislative matters is wise or not, I think no one will deny the right of the people to pass upon proposed changes in their fundamental law. And it was with this idea in mind, and in this spirit, that the people of the State of Ohio, in writing a new constitution for themselves a few years ago—I forget the year—inserted a provision in their constitution to the effect that upon the petition of a certain prescribed number of qualified electors the Legislature of Ohio should submit to the people of Ohio proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States submitted to the State by the Federal Congress. That provision was imbedded in the constitution of the State of Ohio.

In due time the eighteenth amendment was submitted by the Congress to the several States, and, of course, was submitted to the Legislature of Ohio, under the terms of Article V of the Constitution of the United States as now existing. The Legislature of Ohio ratified the eighteenth amendment, whereupon, in accordance with Ohio's statute and the Ohio State constitution, a petition was filed demanding a referendum upon the question, and, in accordance with the provisions of the Ohio State constitution and the Ohio statute putting it into effect, the subject matter of the eighteenth amendment was submitted to popular vote in the State. The legislature had ratified, but the people, in popular vote, rejected the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. By what majority?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not aware, but it was rejected by the people. The Ohio procedure was then tested in the State courts, one party to the controversy contending, apparently, that the people had no right to pass upon a Federal amendment. However, the procedure which I have just described was sustained in the State courts, up to and including the highest court of the State.

The matter was then brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that body reversed the Ohio Supreme Court in a case entitled Hawke against Smith, which will be found in Two hundred and fifty-third United States Reports, commencing on page 221.

It is with a good deal of hesitancy that I attempt to brief an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, especially as I am not a member of the bar, but the Supreme Court held, in effect, that under Article V of the Constitution of the United States, legislatures, and legislatures only, if that alternative is used, may ratify; that the term "legislature" as contained in Article V means that body of representatives elected by the people of a State to enact its laws, and that only that body may give consideration to, or ratify or reject, as the case may be, an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. President, I am not proposing to criticize that decision, but it becomes apparent that the decision is one of vast importance if Article V of the Constitution, construed in that way, is to remain unchanged for the generations yet to come, for it serves notice that if no change is to be made in Article V itself, the people of this country, grouped in their several States, will never be permitted to have anything whatsoever to say in connection with the ratification of an amendment to their fundamental law. The situation needs correction, and at the earliest possible time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the Senator say that the Supreme Court of Ohio held that under the Federal Constitution—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the Supreme Court of Ohio, but the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know that, but the Senator first said that the question as to the right of the people of Ohio to pass upon the question of ratification respecting the eighteenth amendment was presented to the State courts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that the highest court of Ohio sustained that right?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It did.

Mr. ROBINSON. But that upon appeal, the United States Supreme Court held that under the Constitution only the legislatures of the States have the power of ratification, unless the Congress sees fit to submit the question to a convention.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be interesting for me, as a lawyer, to know how any other construction could be placed upon Article V than that which was placed upon it by the Supreme Court of the United States. Article V provides that an amendment shall become a part of the Constitution "when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States," and so forth, the reference to the convention not being relevant in this connection. That, of course, is exclusive of any other method of ratification. Clearly, a State legislature might avail itself of the opinion of the people of the State by providing for a referendum, but the decision of the people in the election could not be binding upon the legislature, because the Constitution provides that ratification should be by the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would be interested to know how the State courts could take a contrary view to that expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States. I understand the Supreme Court decision perfectly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not the State court opinion before me and can not inform the Senator. I suppose the question turned upon the meaning of the word "legislature." There are legislatures and legislatures.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know of different kinds myself.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, there are legislatures and legislatures, unquestionably, but the word "legislature," I think, has a well-fixed meaning in law. It means the lawmaking body. It does not mean anything else. It always means that. I do not think that the term "legislature" could be construed fairly to mean the electors of the State. It would be necessary to construe it that way in order to sustain the right of the people themselves under the present Constitution to ratify amendments to the Constitution. Of course, this has no relation whatever to the merits of the proposal to change the method of ratification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the method ought to be changed. I think that the people ought to be permitted to vote upon amendments to the Constitution, but I do not understand that Article V of the Federal Constitution is susceptible to any other construction than that which the Senator states was placed upon it by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Ohio case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not contended in any way that Article V was susceptible of one construction or another. I have simply recited the fact that the Ohio courts gave a different interpretation to it, but the Supreme Court of the United States gave the interpretation which has been described, and its interpretation is final and binding. In any event it creates a situation not anticipated, at least, by the citizens of Ohio.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Referring to the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, while I do not speak with authority upon the subject, my understanding was that in the Ohio instance, where an act of the legislature has to be ratified by the people in certain cases, the claim was made, as the Senator said, that the lawmaking body in that State had become extended so as to include the people whose ratification was necessary to the making of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that the word "legislature," as contended by the Senator from New York, might have a broader meaning or different meaning from that which is ordinarily given to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I think is the explanation of the Senator's remarks. I think the Senator from Arkansas is right and I agree with him. I was simply trying to elucidate the situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Supreme Court of Ohio undertook to uphold the referendum provision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It did.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should say it would be competent for a legislature to provide for a referendum as an advisory procedure so as to inform itself as to the sentiment of the people of the State; but in the last analysis the obligation is upon the legislature itself. It can take any means of informing itself that it chooses, but the mere fact that the people voted one way and the legislature voted another way would make no legal difference. It is the vote of the legislature that counts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not only were the people in certain cases an advisory body, but there are certain instances, as the Senator knows, where the ordinary referendum is a reference to the people of a matter in which the people, if they do not agree about it, have a veto power.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope I do not lose the floor as the result of this colloquy between other Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was claimed, I always thought fantastically, that the term "legislature" in those States which had the referendum must be enlarged to include the act of the people as a part of the legislature. I never took that view of it. Of course the founders of the Constitution had no such idea when they wrote the Constitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit another interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If that construction were a proper one, it would necessarily follow that State constitutions and State legislatures could make a conclusive interpretation of the Constitution of the United States. They could in effect provide how amendments to the Federal Constitution should be ratified, and of course we know that can not be done. The Constitution itself is the sole instrument by which we can determine how amendments may be ratified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The question was what the Constitution meant, and as the Senator said, if the States should finally decide what it meant and hence enlarge the legislature to include all the electors of the State in such a matter, it would be their own final interpretation.

Mr. ROBINSON. And in addition to that we might have very many different constructions placed upon the instrument.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Forty-eight.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; as many as there are States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Supreme Court would not stand for that, of course.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The theory is, as I understand it, that the legislature ought to respond to the sentiment of the people of the State. They certainly did not do it in Ohio. When the matter was submitted to the people of Ohio they voted it down by 250,000 majority, according to my recollection. Then I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the evidence before the committee showed that it was submitted to the people of Massachusetts and, although it was voted down by 133,000 majority, the legislature approved it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will Senators please permit me to continue? I should like to address the Senate on my joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am going to come to the very things which the Senator from North Carolina alluded to a moment ago, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I yield if Senators insist.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am sorry I anticipated the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless he is willing to be interrupted, but I was going to point out what was stated before the committee in the thought suggested by the Senator from Arkansas referring to the Supreme Court decision and the argument that was made in reference to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make one suggestion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to suggest that the amendment was defeated in Ohio on the referendum by 200,000 or 250,000. My recollection is, and I was confirmed in that when I spoke to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], that the temperance people stood upon the position that the ratification was complete when it was ratified by the legislature and therefore took no special interest in the election, and that accounted for the 200,000 majority against it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course I did not refer to the Ohio incident in order to drag out the question of whether Ohio was really for or against prohibition. I simply stated what occurred. It occurred under the provisions of the Ohio State constitution, the people of that State availing themselves of the right which they thought they had under their constitution. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in construing Article V is correct. Undoubtedly it is correct, and the people of Ohio did not have that right. The temperance people of Ohio were right in that construction, if they gave it that construction.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator did not refer to the vote; he did not bring out the figures, but I thought if they were brought out in the RECORD it would be well to have them explained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was immaterial to me whether it was carried or defeated in Ohio, so far as this discussion is concerned.

In any event the decision in Hawke against Smith does announce a situation which, of course, has existed from the beginning, which the people of Ohio at least had not anticipated, and certainly administered to the people of that State a somewhat severe check in the exercise of rights which they thought they had.

So much for that incident, except to say that I believe with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the people of the States should have the right to vote upon proposed amendments to the Federal Constitution. The joint resolution which I have introduced proposes to give them that right in the manner which I shall describe later.

Mr. President, there were other instances in connection with the consideration of the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments, and in discussing them I again beg Senators to believe that I am in no way attempting to drag in a discussion of the merits or demerits of either of the amendments. The statements I am about to make are accurate, I believe.

The nineteenth amendment was ratified by 38 legislatures. Of the 38 legislatures, 30 were composed exclusively of members elected prior to the submission of the nineteenth amendment. For the purposes of this discussion we will call them "hold-over" legislatures. Thirty of the 38 legislatures which ratified the nineteenth amendment were hold-over legislatures. Many of them ratified the nineteenth amendment in special sessions called by the governors of the States. This situation might not seem especially significant or important if we did not recollect that in several instances the legislatures ratified in the face of and in spite of an adverse vote by the people of their own States held only a short time before the legislatures acted.

For example, the people of Texas in a popular referendum rejected woman's suffrage by a substantial majority. Within one month thereafter the Legislature of Texas ratified woman's suffrage as provided in the nineteenth amendment. The people of West Virginia in a popular referendum by a vote of nearly three to one rejected woman's suffrage. The legislature of West Virginia within a comparatively short time thereafter ratified the woman's suffrage amendment. The people of Missouri in a popular referendum rejected woman's suffrage. The very Legislature of Missouri, whose members were elected on the same day on which the people of Missouri rejected woman's suffrage ratified the nineteenth amendment. The people of Massachusetts in a referendum, and by a very substantial majority rejected woman's suffrage and the legislature thereafter ratified it.

Now, forgetting the merits or demerits of the case, it is fair to ask the question, where does public sentiment control? Can situations of that kind be permitted to exist down through the years to come, where, in spite of the vote of the people themselves, the legislative bodies proceed in the opposite direction. It is a very serious situation.

Now, with respect to the eighteenth amendment, the people of Maryland, in a popular referendum, rejected prohibition. Shortly thereafter, the Legislature of Maryland ratified prohibition in the eighteenth amendment. The people of California, in a popular referendum, rejected prohibition. The Legislature of California, shortly thereafter, ratified prohibition. The people of Massachusetts, in every test that has ever been made, have declared themselves by their votes as opposed to prohibition. The Legislature of Massachusetts ratified prohibition. The people of Iowa, in a popular referendum, rejected a proposal for State constitutional prohibition; they would not put an "eighteenth amendment" into their own constitution; but the Legislature of Iowa promptly put it in the Federal Constitution. I think there are some other cases that have escaped my memory.

Then, too, the constitutions of several of the States provide that the legislature shall not ratify a Federal amendment unless the members of at least one house of that legislature are elected subsequent to the submission of the amendment. Of the 38 State legislatures that ratified the nineteenth amendment, five did so in violation of their own State constitutions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator whether he is going to urge acceptance of his amendment as originally introduced?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Instead of the substitute reported by the committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am coming to that.

Five of the thirty-eight States ratified the nineteenth amendment in violation of their own State constitutions. The members of those five legislatures violated their oaths of office, in that having been elected as legislators prior to the submission of the nineteenth amendment the State constitutions forbade them to act. They acted just the same. Had the legislators of those five States obeyed their own State constitutions the nineteenth amendment would not be in the Constitution of the United States to-day.

That opens up a rather interesting vista of possibilities.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the action of Tennessee in relation to the ratification of the nineteenth amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am going to tell the story of Tennessee. In doing so, Mr. President, I shall not violate the rule which in effect forbids casting aspersions upon a sovereign State of the Union.

The constitution of the State of Tennessee contains two provisions which are important in this connection: First, that a quorum in the house shall consist of two-thirds of the members. There are 99 members of the lower house of the State legislature at Nashville, and 66 are a quorum under their State constitution. That constitution also contains a provision to the effect that the Legislature of Tennessee shall not ratify a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution unless the members of the lower house have been elected subsequent to the submission of the amendment. The nineteenth amendment was submitted by Congress and in due course reached Tennessee. The Tennessee Legislature was a holdover legislature and was not in session at the time. All of its members had been elected before the nineteenth amendment had been submitted. The Governor of Tennessee, however, called that legislature in a special session at Nashville in the summer of 1920 and urged that it proceed to ratify the nineteenth amendment. What was the State constitution to him? He did not care. The legislature met and proceeded to act. A minority of the men in the lower house at Nashville protested and said, "We have no right to act under our very oaths of office; we are not competent to act, because we were elected before this proposed amendment came to us." However, the supporters of the nineteenth amendment had a majority, and they drove straight ahead. When it became apparent that they were not to be deterred by any consideration for their constitution or oaths of office a group of the minority left the State of Tennessee and went into the State of Alabama and stayed there in order to break the quorum and give the people of Tennessee a little time in which, as they thought, they could exert their influence upon the members of the legislature, generally, to remember the State constitution and their oaths of office.

A sufficient number of the members of the lower house left the State and went into Alabama, outside the jurisdiction of the sergeant at arms, to break the quorum. I repeat that 66 constituted a quorum. The number actually present was reduced by that exodus to 59. The 59 went right ahead and passed the resolution ratifying the nineteenth amendment by a vote of 50 to 9, the 9 apparently being those in opposition or in the minority who were left on guard. The constitution of the State of Tennessee was violated in two instances: First, the constitutional quorum was not present, and, second, the legislature sitting in 1920 had no right under the constitution to pass upon the nineteenth amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not hear all of the Senator's statement, but in the latter part of it he is mistaken, I think, in his facts, for this reason: After the ratification of the nineteenth amendment by the Tennessee Legislature a bill was filed in the court setting up the contention that the amendment had not been ratified in accordance with the constitution and law of Tennessee. That bill was heard first in the chancery court. It was then appealed to the court of appeals, and from there it was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Both the Tennessee courts and the Supreme Court of the United States held that that resolution had been duly passed by the Legislature of Tennessee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The court could not go back of the returns when certified by the legislative body and its officers. That is what the Supreme Court held. I have accurately described what happened. Of course constitutional questions may be manipulated one way or the other, but those men under their constitutional oaths had no right to vote at all on it, and there was not a quorum present.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, did not the Supreme Court of the United States decide that they did have a right to vote?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They did not. I will bring out what the Supreme Court said about it in just a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was accepted as the supreme law of the land as decided by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will bring that out in a moment.

Mr. BROOKHART. Was the Supreme Court wrong in what it did?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it was not, in my judgment. I am going to state what the decision was.

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me the Senator is very close to criticizing the Supreme Court.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The Senator has not read the decision and does not know what is in it. I have. The court could not go back of the returns.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has proposed a constitutional amendment after long and careful thought. He has made a study of the question for years, and I think, in courtesy to him, we ought to hear him through without interrupting him, and then when he has finished his presentation of the question he may be subjected to all the cross-examination that we feel like putting to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from New York did not think that I interrupted him improperly. I had been out of the Chamber and just heard the name "Tennessee" as I came in; that is all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me continue the Tennessee story, because I have not told all of it as yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I will not ask to interrupt the Senator in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that if the Senator from New York obtains that degree of immunity suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania he will be the only Senator in this body who has ever enjoyed it since I have been here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, let me continue for a moment with the Tennessee story. The Legislature of Tennessee ratified the nineteenth amendment in that method and in that manner, and a certificate of ratification was sent to Washington by the appropriate legislative officers or by the governor—I forget which—and was delivered in due course, and properly, to the Secretary of State of the Federal Government, Mr. Bainbridge Colby. He received it, and in purely ministerial fashion proclaimed the ratification of Tennessee. Tennessee was the thirty-sixth State, and with Tennessee's ratification the nineteenth amendment was a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Then, something even more extraordinary happened. The legislature had taken a recess or an adjournment at Nashville and reconvened two or three weeks later. The absent members were then present. Apparently some influence or pressure had been brought to bear upon that legislative body during that short interval of time when they were not in session, for when they returned, when they got together again, that same legislature passed a resolution rescinding the act of ratification; it reversed itself completely, and a certificate to that effect, announcing the rescinding of Tennessee's ratification, was sent to the Secretary of State here at Washington, and it was adjudged to be too late.

Mr. President, in 1920 we were in the midst of a presidential campaign. The chairman of the National Committee of the Democratic Party and the chairman of the National Committee of the Republican Party both, figuratively speaking, stormed at the doors of the Tennessee Legislature in an effort to persuade that body to ratify the nineteenth amendment, each chairman having an idea that if he could get the credit for getting Tennessee, the thirty-sixth State, to be for woman suffrage, either Harding or Cox, as the case might be, would get the women's votes. That is why it was done. A perfect mob of politicians from both parties went to Nashville and pounded that legislative body for purely partisan political purposes, and drove it off the foundation stones of its own constitution; and when it was done the leaders of both the great political parties shouted "Hurrah!" and asked the women to support their candidate. That is how it was done, and that is why it was done.

Mr. President, I have here a joint resolution which proposes that a thing like that never can be done again. I do not believe there is a man in this body who believes in that kind of consideration of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that is only one of them. In four other States the legislative members violated their oaths of office in voting for these amendments. What is the Constitution when politics is at play and politicians are hunting votes in an election?

It is apparent that under Article V, as now drawn, no State can change its vote from the affirmative to the negative in the matter of a constitutional amendment. Once ratified by a State, that State can not change, even though it does so before a sufficient number of States have ratified so as to insert the amendment in the Constitution itself. Tennessee tried to change. It can not be done under Article V.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, having once rejected, can it change?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the legislature of a State may change from the negative to the affirmative at any time, and there is now pending before the States of the Union a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution submitted away back about 1820.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If I understood the Senator correctly, he said that a State having voted affirmatively on the ratification of an amendment can not change its vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It can not.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate the study which the able Senator has given this amendment, but I do not agree with that conclusion. Does the Senator use the Tennessee case as a precedent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In part.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not think it entirely fair to inject my personal opinion into the matter, but I disagree with the Senator's conclusion on that point. I assert that a State, no matter how it may have voted, has the right to change its vote, provided it changes it before other States have acted in sufficient number to cause a ratification; but it is immaterial. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's fine argument, but I simply did not want to be committed to that proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may have stated the matter too emphatically.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator is entirely correct; the Senator is historically correct when he says that when an amendment is once submitted by the Congress there is no power known to withdraw it from the consideration of the States. They have forever to ratify it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is there forever. There is one there now.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is what the Supreme Court held.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Am I right when I say that the amendment which is now pending has something to do with forbidding American citizens to accept titles of nobility?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. The able Senator stated that some amendments were pending for many years. There were two submitted on the 15th of September, 1789, and they are still pending, according to the last returns.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are there all right. They can be taken up and ratified now.

Mr. ASHURST. Exactly. Another one, to which the learned Senator has referred, was submitted in 1810.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the one I had in mind.

Mr. ASHURST. That proposed amendment prohibited citizens of the United States from accepting gifts, bounties, or perquisites from a foreign country. It has been pending for 110 years and has not been ratified, according to the latest returns. Another one is still pending; and I think the able Senator will do a great public service, in addition to the great public services he has already rendered, if he will hammer away not only upon the necessity of giving the people some chance to say what they think about the form of government they are living under in the way of expressing their approval of constitutional amendments, but upon the necessity of limiting the time within which a State may act.

I thank the Senator. I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may have been overemphatic or too sure of my ground when I said a moment ago that a State can not change from the affirmative to the negative. It may be that it can.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to the Senator that on that point there is a very sharp division of opinion amongst lawyers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there is.

Mr. ASHURST. I adhere to the opinion that a State, if its action is not conclusive or determinative, may change.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is the situation as I understand it, and the Senator will forgive my failure to express myself in legal terms.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has done well. I am admiring his speech.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When a State has ratified it sends to the Secretary of State at Washington a certificate to that effect. He proclaims the ratification by the State. That is an accomplished fact.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield there for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. It is true, as the able Senator says, that when a State ratifies it sends to the Secretary of State a resolution announcing its approval. In the case of the first 10 amendments that were ratified, however—12 were submitted and 10 ratified—no announcement whatever was made by the Secretary of State. It was only in later years that the States began to send notices of ratification. Singularly enough, there were no notices of ratification. It went as a matter of judicial notice. The States and the Government took judicial notice when enough States had ratified, so we find no notice of ratification sent by the Secretary of State respecting the first 10 amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; there should be no question about it.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true; and will the Senator pardon me one thing further? To show how easy it is to fall into these errors, it may be stated that the States are now falling into the error of permitting their governors to approve or disapprove a constitutional amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The governor has nothing to do with it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing at all. The governor, in the present situation, merely calls an extra session of the hold-over legislature and demands that the legislature ratify something. That is what happened in 30 cases in connection with these last amendments, and all of them had a strictly partisan political motive back of them.

Mr. President, as I was saying, that feature of course should be cleared up, and a State should have the right to change its vote from the affirmative to the negative, provided it does so before three-fourths of the States have ratified, and from the negative to the affirmative, provided it does so before more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the amendment. Certainly that right should not be denied any State, and the joint resolution before us takes care of that situation.

I regret that Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, reported from the committee with an amendment, has been butchered by the printer. It is quite impossible for Members of the Senate to understand the portion stricken out by the committee between lines 15 and 18 on page 2. The language as printed means nothing at all. It has been destroyed. So the only way in which Members can understand and read intelligently the original proposal as introduced by me and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary will be to get a copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 as introduced on December 6 and have that before them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator request a reprint and get a correct print of it so that we will have it in the morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was about to do so. I make that request, Mr. President—that the joint resolution as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary be reprinted with due regard to the language of the original joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, could it not be printed also so as to show the changes made in the Senator's joint resolution for the convenience of Senators?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask, then, that that portion of the language of the original joint resolution which I introduced which proposes changes in Article V be printed in italic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York requests that that portion of the article referred to, Article V, be printed in italic. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest to the Senator that he have printed with his remarks his own proposal and the amendment that the committee proposed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the Record?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; with the Senator's speech.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; then I will make that request, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution as originally introduced is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article, in lieu of Article V, be proposed to the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of each House shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by three-fourths of the several States through their legislatures or conventions, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress or the convention: Provided,

That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote; and that, until three-fourths of the States have ratified or more than one-fourth of the States have rejected or defeated a proposed amendment, any State may change its vote: And provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

The joint resolution as proposed to be amended by the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article, in lieu of Article V, be proposed to the several States, as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, upon the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution when ratified by a vote of the qualified electors in three-fourths of the several States, said election to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe and that until three-fourths of the States shall have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States shall have rejected, a proposed amendment any State may in like manner change its vote: Provided, That if at any time more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the proposed amendment, said rejection shall be final and further consideration thereof by the States shall cease: Provided further, That any amendment proposed hereunder shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution as provided in the Constitution within six years from the date of submission hereof to the States by the Congress: Provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on December 6, 1923, this joint resolution was introduced. In its original form it is, I think, an exact duplicate of the joint resolution introduced in the last Congress, and it had a great deal of consideration from the Committee on the Judiciary, including a hearing. It would be well worth the time of Senators who are interested in the preservation of the integrity of the Federal Constitution to get a copy of that hearing and read it. No hearing was held this year; but the committee, as I happen to know, has had many discussions on the subject, first in the subcommittee and then in the full committee.

In my remarks up to this point I have endeavored to point out three principal defects in the present machinery for the consideration of Federal amendments:

First, the people can have no participation in it, as the result of the Ohio case.

Second, hold-over legislatures, composed of members who were elected long before the submission of an amendment, may ratify, and have done so, even in spite of their State constitutions. That should be corrected.

Third, there is grave doubt whether any State can change its vote from the affirmative to the negative. That certainly should be corrected.

The amendment as originally introduced sought only to meet those three objections, and sought to do it in such fashion as to make just as little change as possible in Article V. Some very well trained minds gave their attention to this matter long, long before I ever saw it in bill form; and it was not until after weeks and weeks of discussion, held privately, that a group of people finally arrived at the language which can be found in the original joint resolution on page 2, commencing with line 6.

The joint resolution as originally introduced makes no change in the manner of the submission of an amendment. The Congress may submit the amendments either to conventions called in the States or to the legislatures, but it goes on and provides that the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed.

That takes care of one of the objections in the present situation. It reads further:

That any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote.

That leaves it to the people of every State in the Union to exercise their right to say "yes" or "no" when they want to exercise it.

Mr. OVERMAN. It leaves it to the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The people of the State, as represented by the legislature. All the substance of the power of direct action by the people is granted to them, as I view it, in that sentence. They may exercise it or not, as they please, but it is handed to them, a weapon is put in their hands to check hasty or ill-considered or indefensible action on the part of their legislatures.

Then the next clause provides:

And that until three-fourths of the States have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States have rejected a proposed amendment, any State may change its vote.

That is the entire proposition as originally introduced. There is nothing drastic about it. It is not revolutionary. It does not attempt to change in a revolutionary manner the method of giving consideration to Federal amendments. It has been termed by some of the supporters, and in some publications, the "back to the people" amendment, because it does bring back to the people the right to pass upon proposed changes in their fundamental law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The last remark of the Senator challenges my attention; but I wanted to address him with respect to another aspect of this matter. I suppose the Senator will agree with me that amendments to the Constitution ought not to be made for light or transient causes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Most decidedly I agree.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, many features of this Constitution of ours are of doubtful wisdom theoretically. We can easily conceive that a whole flood of evils might possibly ensue by reason of extraordinary powers granted here, but, some way or other, they never do. Just what is the experience of the United States, under the provision of the Constitution as it stands, so unfortunate in its character as that the Senator thinks we ought to tinker with it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think what happened in Ohio is in utter violation of our entire theory of government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, it was held that the act of the legislature in submitting a matter to a vote of the people was ineffective, that the power was granted to the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I mean that I think the outcome of that is indefensible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In this particular case the legislature did act, and did ratify, and the Senator thinks that because of that situation of affairs the Constitution ought to be amended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and because of the Tennessee case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the Tennessee case as well. Where the local constitution provided that one branch of the legislature would have to be elected before a vote on a proposed amendment, and that was held ineffective.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is a matter of no great consequence, if the result would have been the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber when I referred to the matter, but that same thing happened in five States, all together, in connection with the nineteenth amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Assuming all that to be the case, what harm does the Senator think has resulted? What difference would it have made so far as the eighteenth amendment is concerned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what is going to happen in the future.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator does not know what is going to happen. That is the very point I am making. I can point the Senator to a dozen provisions of this Constitution, and point him to evils which might ensue, but they never have ensued, and we have been under the operation of this Constitution for a century and a third. But the statement made by the Senator which just now challenged my attention was that under the existing system the people have no opportunity to express themselves upon the matter at all, and that under his amendment they would have, because at least one branch of the legislature would be elected before the ratification took place, and the proposed amendment would thus be submitted to the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In addition to that they have the right to pass upon it by direct vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is another matter. The Senator was speaking about the provision requiring the election of one branch of the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see the point the Senator is making. Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator does not regard that as operating to get any expression from the people on the subject, does he?

Mr. WADSWORTH. One can not estimate just how complete an expression can be gotten. I understand what the Senator means, that members of legislative bodies are elected on a general election day, with a dozen issues at stake, and a proposal to amend the Federal Constitution might not be in the minds of all the voters at the time they were voting for a member of the assembly in the State of New York, for example. But, after all, some one among the people would be very apt to ask the candidate for the assembly how he stood on the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Federal Constitution, and he would have to reply.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, undoubtedly some man might ask some candidate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He would be asked.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But in the district in which I reside the question which would determine a man in voting for this candidate or that candidate would, in all probability, be his idea as to which would be able to get the biggest appropriation for the State fair, although there was a constitutional amendment pending, and I suppose in the district in which the Senator resides some local matter would probably outweigh 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States, unless it happened to be a prohibition amendment. Of course, a prohibition amendment would swamp everything.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It cuts across everything else.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nothing can transcend in importance, of course, the matter of an amendment on prohibition, or any prohibition question. If such an amendment is up, nothing else is considered. I agree with the Senator about that. But it is otherwise with respect to any other question, for instance, a child labor proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not reply with an abrupt affirmative or negative.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The idea I have in mind is that if the Senator is really trying to fix matters so that there will be a vote on a proposed amendment to the Constitution which would really express the views of the people with respect to it, why does he not provide that it shall be submitted to the people?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This does so provide.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No, it does not. Under that it would be submitted to the legislature, and the legislature might, if it cared to do so, submit it to the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the State would do it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The State could not do it except through the act of the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The State could do it through its ordinary legislative power or through the amendment of its own constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The people of a State are entirely competent to provide for themselves, if they want to do so, the right to pass upon a Federal amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator would not get that at all. This is the language:

Provided, That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote.

It must do it either under its constitution or through its legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely. I believe they have the substance of the power to do it if they want to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So the Senator would not by this language accomplish what he wants to accomplish.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not agree with the Senator in that. I say we would get the result we are after in every State of the Union. I think the demand for it in each and every State would be so great that every State would acquire the power, and exercise it when it desired to in the future. It might be that a proposed amendment to the Constitution submitted by the Congress would not be of sufficient importance to warrant or compel referendums in 48 States, with all the attendant expense. There might be an amendment which did not propose to extend the power of the Federal Government. It might be corrective, something in the nature of the amendment which was agreed to by the Senate the other day, changing the day for the inauguration of the President and the meeting of the session of the new Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has studied this question very carefully, as can be seen from his remarks, and I would like to ask him what he thinks about the likelihood, if this amendment is adopted, of its being very much harder to amend the Constitution of the United States. Would it make it harder or easier to amend it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not prepared to say that it would make it much harder to amend, but amendments would receive a degree of consideration which would be more deliberate than they have received in the past.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it not depend largely on the amendment which was under consideration?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; we can not draw a rule for all of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. For instance, as the Senator from Montana and the Senator from New York both agreed just a few moments ago, when an amendment in reference to prohibition or the liquor question is up, it puts every other question into insignificance. That reminds me to say to the Senator something which I probably would have said at the time if I had heard all of his remarks a while ago in reference to the Tennessee situation. That was indeed quite a remarkable situation. Before the legislature met more than two-thirds of the members of the legislature signed a statement in which they said that they favored the ratification of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Which amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of the nineteenth amendment. Mind you, over two-thirds signed it. It required but a mere majority, but more than two-thirds, under their own signatures, declared that they were going to vote for the amendment. A gentleman from New York came down and circulated for quite a while, and after he had been there some time one and then another of those who had signed changed their views, and when the vote finally came my recollection is it was by a bare majority, of probably just one or two votes, that the amendment was ratified.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the lower house the vote was 50 to 9.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; when the amendment was really ratified, my recollection is the vote was 51 to 50, or maybe it was 52 to 51, about 100 members voting. There was a difference of just one vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not the Senator thinking of the other amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am thinking of that very amendment. It was a most remarkable proceeding. Two-thirds of the legislature had agreed in writing to vote for the amendment, and during the delay that came changes were made from this written statement which they had voluntarily entered into; but finally, however, when the vote actually came there was still the necessary majority for the ratification of the amendment. The governor of the State certified the vote to the Secretary of State here in Washington, and he announced the ratification of that amendment. That was challenged in the courts in Tennessee and in the Supreme Court of the United States here in Washington, and it went through all the courts. The Tennessee Supreme Court upheld the action of the Tennessee Legislature, as did the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I shall not indulge in a controversy with the Senator from Tennessee about what happened in his own State legislature; but that whole thing was laid before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate by people who had with them copies of the journals, and they showed that the vote was 50 to 9, 50 members being present out of a total of 99 elected, 50 being less than a quorum. That was the point, that there was less than a quorum there when they voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not when they voted on the ratification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The facts are stated in the argument before the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining my statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Supreme Court upheld just exactly that point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But did not question the figures as to how many men were there.

Mr. McKELLAR. What they upheld was that it was duly ratified in the first instance. The ratification was certified. Upon that certification the Secretary of State declared the amendment adopted.

The Supreme Court of the United States held that that being the last State to ratify, it made the ratification complete. As I recall, it did not go so far as the Senator seems to think it went and say that the ratification of a State could not be changed afterwards. The inference that I had from reading the case, although it has been some time since I read it, was that if the particular State that ratified did not make up the total three-fourths, and if final action had not been taken, then a State could withdraw its ratification. But if its action caused a completion of the work of ratification—in other words, if it was the last State of three-fourths of all the States—then, of course, it was a completed action. I am rather inclined to believe that the Supreme Court of the United States stated the law correctly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. However that may be, we know what happened. It was indefensible.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Do I understand the Senator's position to be that he believes in the principle, under the present Constitution, of providing for the submission of a proposed amendment to the legislatures, but he seeks to correct weaknesses and abuses which may have taken place in the past when submissions were made under the provision of the Constitution?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In general, that reflects my opinion. I think it is a little more than correcting weak spots. I think it goes back, in the instance of the second sentence in my proposed amendment, to the basic principle that the people should have the right under our theory and philosophy of government and politics to pass upon a change in the fundamental law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Broadening the authority of the people?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask a question for the purpose of enabling me to choose between the original amendment and the committee amendment—that is, being in favor of the general plan? I gathered from his suggestion that in at least a series of instances, possibly half a dozen, it was found that the legislature did not represent the popular vote with reference to ratification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ADAMS. And the Senator also feels that under the amendment in the form in which he proposes it, all of the States will provide ultimately for submission of a constitutional amendment to the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there is no doubt of that.

Mr. ADAMS. That being the situation, I am wondering why we should not adopt the second form, or the present committee form, which provides immediately for the thing which will ultimately come—that is, submission of amendments to the people by direction of the Constitution itself rather than by the more roundabout process involved in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was just coming to a discussion of that feature of the matter. The original amendment still preserves the two alternatives—submission to State conventions or submission to State legislatures. We have never resorted to submission to State conventions thus far, for one reason or another. The substitute proposed by the committee and drafted, as I am informed, by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and known as the Walsh substitute, eliminates the legislatures entirely and eliminates State conventions entirely, and provides that all amendments shall be submitted direct to the people, without any intervening machinery. I hope that the Senate will not go that far. Certainly it is a very drastic change. I do not think less of it just because it is drastic, but it will make a very profound change, with effects hard to anticipate far into the future. I myself believe thoroughly that the people themselves should have the right to pass upon these things, but I also believe that these things should be debated first and voted on later. Each State contains an arena in which to debate a proposed amendment to the Constitution—its own legislature.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, upon that proposition I do not care to interrupt the Senator or to break the thread of his argument, but I want to ask just one question upon the proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment, if I may be allowed to develop my thought. I do not believe in wiping out the legislatures from the situation. I think they can be very, very useful. I still believe that the theory of representative government can be used and applied to these situations to the great advantage of the country and of the public, who will have an opportunity to hear the pros and cons of future amendments.

Suppose the Walsh substitute is adopted—and, mind you, I think it is better than the present situation. The Congress every other year sits well into the summer in its long session, and it is only in the long sessions of the Congress that the Members have time enough to give consideration to constitutional amendments. In the short sessions, which end March 4, we do nothing but pass appropriation bills, and perhaps one or two other measures that are especially pressed.

It is only in the long sessions of the Congress that we are apt to give consideration to constitutional amendments. We will sit until August or September. Supposing the Congress submits an amendment to the Federal Constitution in September, a very probable event. It would go instantly into the elections in the first week of the following November. It would be voted on simultaneously all over the United States in 48 different States. The issues would be complicated with the election of governors, of Congressmen, of local officials, and even the President of the United States. There will be no time whatsoever for debating the question. The consideration which the people can give to it will be clouded and confused by a host of issues injected into the campaign. It will be almost impossible to get their attention in any quiet arena for consideration. Is it not safer, is it not wiser, to use the legislature of the State as a part of the machinery? Would it not be safer in cases of that kind to defer action by the people on an amendment submitted only six weeks or two months beforehand and instantly thrown into the whirlwind of a campaign, and largely forgotten except by those who may for some special purpose of their own want to drive it through to ratification?

I believe that there is an element of danger in taking the legislature out of the picture. I think it should be retained.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I interject a thought?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It occurs to me in that connection that there are certain questions which are peculiarly difficult for decision by the electorate and for which the legislature is especially qualified. Those are questions of the division of authority between the States and the National Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Take the proposed child labor amendment. One of the most serious objections that has been urged against it is that it transfers from the State to the National Government a power which the State now exercises. That element of the question can be considered in the legislature, and yet I venture to say that if the committee amendment to the joint resolution were adopted and that process followed, that question would never be thought of by one person in a hundred who voted on the amendment. They would all vote on the question of whether they believe in child labor or did not, and nobody would ever stop to think whether it was wise to take that power from the State and put it here in the Congress. I think the legislatures would think of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator brings up a very important element in the situation. It will do no harm after the Congress has submitted an amendment to thereafter go slowly in ratifying. Under the Walsh amendment, so called, a complete ratification may be had within one month of the submission of the amendment by the Congress to the States in a general election, with no intervening discussion whatsoever. I think it would be highly unfortunate. It would be one mass vote, divided into 48 parts, and the result announced the next day.

May I ask Senators who are supporting the Walsh amendment to give consideration to this thought. It is not proposed to change that provision of Article V that the consent of three-fourths of the States shall be necessary for the ratification of an amendment. Supposing in a nation-wide simultaneous referendum in 48 States it turns out on the day after election that 13 States have voted in the negative, and that in those 13 States there reside only one-twentieth of the people who voted; that nineteen-twentieths of the people residing in 35 States, not enough to ratify, have voted in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that is not just the situation now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not quite.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why not? Take the same 13 States. The amendment is rejected by the legislatures of the same 13 States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not done on the same day all over the country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is the difference whether it is one day or not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a very great psychological difference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remark as well to the Senator, Why should he assume that it is going to be on the same day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be in the next general election following the submission, I assume.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nearly every State has an election every two years. The State of Massachusetts has one every year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a general election every year as I understand it, in every State.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no general election in my State except every two years.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But it always follows the long session of Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may be mistaken in that statement of mine. If so, I frankly admit it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In Massachusetts they have an election every year. They would vote in Massachusetts immediately afterwards. In my State they would vote two years afterwards, and perhaps in some other States not until four years afterwards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator confine that to gubernatorial elections?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; not necessarily at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They vote in my State every year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have a gubernatorial election every four years, but we have an election for county officers every two years and an election for some State officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does any year go by in the State of Montana without an election?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Every other year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; every other year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no election of any kind every other year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is true. In the State of Wisconsin, where I was raised, they have a general election every year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What does the Senator believe would be the effect of a submission direct to the people in this direction? Does he not think it would be the tendency of those States which do not have elections every year to demand that the amendment be submitted immediately at a special election so they could all vote together? Does not the Senator think that would be the tendency?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think so at all. I think the tendency would be to make it as inexpensive as possible; and undoubtedly the legislature would provide that it should be determined at the general election next following after the submission. It seems to me that would be a reasonable thing to do. In my State, of course, if it were submitted now we should vote on it next November, but if it were submitted a year from now it would lie nearly two years before being voted on. In some other States, where they have a general election only every four years, it would lie something like three years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. States in which general elections occur only once in four years are certainly very scarce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if there is any force in the Senator's suggestion that the ratifications would take place simultaneously if an amendment were submitted to the people, the same objection would apply to the submission of an amendment to conventions to be held in the various States. Yet, the Constitution now provides for ratification by such conventions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think that is on all fours with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. The conventions would meet on different days, after different periods, and would sit for different lengths of time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They would meet whenever the States wanted them to meet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but they would not all meet on the same day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is left with the States to decide when they shall submit it to the electors. Under the Walsh amendment it would be left to the States to decide when they would have their conventions if Congress chose to submit it to conventions in the States. The States might, by accident or otherwise, elect to determine upon the same day in either case, but it would be within the control of the legislatures of the different States to say when the question of ratification should be voted on, it seems to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and the tendency will be toward haste. That will be the demand of every supporter of the amendment as submitted. They will say, "Let us get it through as fast as we can. There is an election only six weeks from now. Let us go to it." That is done in every case by the proponents of any suggestion which bids fair to be successful.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. May I call to the Senator's attention the fact that the elections to which these proposed constitutional amendments are to be submitted are to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe? In other words, the rules and regulations would be fixed by the legislature, or the very body to which amendments are now submitted. Might we not rely upon the legislature to make reasonable provision as to the manner of submission, so that haste would be avoided? That is, in other words, the legislature might provide that an election should not be held within a certain period after Congress had submitted an amendment. The legislatures might in some States provide for submission at special elections. It seems to me there is provided in the power of the legislature to prescribe the time and the manner of the election the very safeguard which the Senator seeks to secure by having the legislature itself pass upon an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not confident enough about the future to trust the legislatures to that extent. I have seen things jammed through legislatures.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Referring to what?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To the Tennessee case and the nineteenth amendment. If that was not jamming things through, I do not know what is. I do not know what is going to happen in the future; none of us do. I know that the proponents of any proposal are always in favor of haste. If the road looks pretty good, they drive just as fast as they can; and that is human nature.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator from New York think it could be jammed through the whole mass of the people quicker than it could be by the legislatures through which he says he has seen things jammed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not. I think the Walsh substitute, so called, is better than the present situation; but I think it unfortunate to cut the legislatures out entirely, because by leaving them in as an essential element to the consideration we would stop all jamming through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—I shall not interpose if the Senator from New York prefers to proceed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not mind being interrupted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Sometimes we can get to a meeting of the minds quicker by cross-questioning than we can by waiting for each Senator to complete his speech.

The constitution of each State is now amended by the legislature proposing an amendment once and then submitting it to the people, or, as in some of the States, requiring that two successive legislatures shall approve the amendment before it is submitted to the people. My own State is one of the latter. The Senator from New York has stated that he thinks there is some advantage in retaining the legislative process; but Mr. President, if the Senator will think for a moment about it he will see that the action of Congress takes the place of the legislative process sufficiently, for when the Constitution of the United States is to be amended the National Legislature has to propose the amendment just as the legislature of the State has to propose an amendment to a State constitution. Then it ought to be submitted to the people, in my opinion, just as an amendment to a State constitution is submitted to the people by the State legislature. I do not think that any harm has resulted in the States by the present method of amending the State constitutions, and I do not think that there would be undue haste in submitting a constitutional amendment to the people of the States when that submission is controlled by the legislatures of the States themselves.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I reply to the suggestion just made by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ADAMS. I was going to make one suggestion, if I might, which fits in at that point. Might the Senator not put into the constitutional provision as drawn by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a limitation providing that the election should not be called within a certain period of time, thus providing against haste in the very constitutional amendment itself?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In my judgment, that would be an improvement.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has just said, I think that when an amendment is submitted to a State there are two elements of consideration which attach to it: First, the State as a State possessing sovereignty should, through its representatives and officials, give consideration to it; and, second, the people of that State, as citizens of that State and of the United States, should give their consideration to it.

This may seem more fitting as coming from an old-fashioned Democrat than from me, but I think we have done just about enough toward the destruction of the States of this Union. The Walsh amendment is one more blow. The government of the State is to be deprived of an opportunity to consider an amendment to the Federal Constitution. From that angle or viewpoint it affects the State as a State in its relations with the Federal Government, and I think the legislature is the body that should give that consideration to it. That is one reason why I do not want the legislature cut out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is not quite accurate when he talks about the government of the State and the legislature of the State, especially if he is speaking as an old-fashioned Democrat. No Democrat, however old fashioned he might be, and no Republican ever thought that his State was more sovereign than the people of the State, embracing all the State, but they have always thought that all the people were more sovereign than any legislature of the State.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the Senator does not impute any such views to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; but the Senator is saying that if we submit a question to all the electors of a State, in some way we have slighted the government of the State. The people are sovereign in this country. The people made the Constitution; the people ought to ratify amendments; and there can be no slight upon the governments of the States, it seems to me, if the people themselves want to amend the Constitution so as to exercise the right of ratifying amendments to it themselves instead of by their creatures whom they have elected to go to the legislature.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Is not the underlying motive of the Senator's proposal—and if it is I approve of it very heartily—to make it more difficult to amend the Constitution in any way; in other words, to compel two actions on the part of the States, so that action looking toward an amendment of the Constitution can not be easily taken? Is not that the underlying motive of the Senator in placing these safeguards around the ratification of future amendments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; to provide that action shall not be taken hastily.

Mr. EDGE. I concur very heartily in that view.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not condemn in toto by any means the substitute proposed by the committee. As I said before, I think it is better than the present situation; but I fear that under it we will get some very hasty action, at least in some of the States. Perhaps that will not hold good as to all; perhaps I overdraw the picture as to the States indulging in hasty action at the first election available after the submission of each amendment, but some certainly will; and for an amendment to be submitted in September or August and voted upon in November means that it gets no consideration worthy of the name.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator some time ago during the course of his able argument stated, I think, that in the multiplicity of questions submitted on the ballot a proposed constitutional amendment, if it went to a direct vote, to all the electors, would be lost in the general commingling of many issues. The Senator made that reference. I want to devote some little attention to it. That may be true, but let me call the Senator's attention to the circumstance of absentee voters. The able Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] put into the Record some days ago a statement referring to the election of Senators in the last election.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I saw that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. From which it appeared that the successful candidate received no higher than 32 per cent of the votes, and the unsuccessful candidate probably received 28 or 26 per cent, as the case may be, of the votes; but in no case do I recall that a majority of the qualified electors of a State voted. That is true. The same rule and circumstance obtains here. I caused to be made some years ago a close investigation of the important votes in the Senate—it did not have any reference to the relatively unimportant votes—which disclosed that in most of the important votes not even 35 per cent of the Senators, elected, sworn, and paid to come here and vote, voted. If the Senator will examine the record, he will see that on grave questions the Senate has voted sometimes 35 to 20 or 36 to 22 or 30 to 19. It is a rare occasion when a large percentage of Senators vote.

That is true of all legislative bodies; it is true of all parliaments. I am sure the percentage of absentee voters in the States is no greater than it is in the other branch of Congress and in the Senate, and, I repeat, the same thing is true of all governments. It may be and probably is an evil, but if it be an evil, there is no way of eradicating it, although, indeed, suggestions have been made in this country and others that absentee voters be fined for not voting. That, however, would be of no avail. So I do not perceive how the suggestion that people would give no attention to a question could be invoked, when in legislative assemblies, in parliaments, and in Congress no higher percentage of those elected and paid to vote votes than in the case of the ordinary voter.

I feel keenly upon this question, not for any better reasons than move other Senators, but I believe the time has come when we should give the people a chance somewhere to express themselves before an alteration is made in their Federal Government.

I am sure the appropriate method when the Constitution was written was adopted—the legislatures. At that time the legislatures were quite different bodies from what they are to-day. They gave careful consideration; they debated questions; and if a Senator wishes to drink at the Attic fount and refresh himself even in the classics, let him read the debates in the State legislatures from the organization of this Government until about 1850.

I want to conclude by saying that I know of but two States—possibly Delaware, and I heard the able Senator from Connecticut say his State—where constitutional amendments are ratified by the legislatures later. It is my opinion that there are not to exceed two States where the legislatures may ratify a constitutional amendment. It must be submitted to a vote of the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Delaware is the only exception.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator. Delaware is the only exception. Now, if the States will not permit the legislatures to ratify State constitutions or changes therein, for a stronger reason we ought not to permit the legislatures to ratify Federal amendments. Every argument that can be made in support of direct election of United States Senators can be made in support of the proposition that the people have a right to vote on each constitutional amendment. Legislatures are governed by legislative caucuses. The caucus meets. There are weak men and strong men in every caucus. The strong men drive the weak men. That is true everywhere; and, as a result, the legislature without consideration frequently refuses to ratify or ratifies these amendments. But suppose that the legislature acts wisely—and I will say here that on the amendments recently submitted, prohibition, woman suffrage, direct election of Senators, and income tax, I think the legislatures acted wisely.

It is my opinion that if the legislatures could have avoided it they would have done so. In most cases the legislatures were anxious and the bosses of the legislatures were anxious to defeat prohibition, woman suffrage, the constitutional amendment providing for the income tax, and direct election of Senators; and for years and years the bosses of legislatures cracked the whip, and they would have done so again had it not been for the consuming fire of public opinion on those amendments. It was because they could not escape that they ratified them, but that does not alter the argument. Whether the legislature acts right or wrong is not the question. The people ought to have a chance somewhere, some time, to say what sort of a government they wish to live under.

I thank the Senator. I ought not to have trespassed so long upon his courtesy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In any event, Mr. President, whether the Senate desires to take the substitute offered by the committee or the original proposal, modified or not, as may be the case, I think it fair to say that we are on the right track. There is no doubt about it. The machinery needs readjustment and perfecting. The dangers of abuses are now apparent, and the thing we must all have in mind is that in the consideration of amendments in the future the machinery shall work properly, shall be such that it can not be abused, and thereby and therefore our Constitution, under which we live and under which we hope our children will live for generations yet to come, will be maintained in a sound, sure, logical fashion, developing as time goes on to meet new problems if they should arise, but nevertheless kept true to the American conception of liberty. If we can perfect our method of changing the fundamental law, I think we shall have done something of tremendous import and value for the preservation of American institutions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 20, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. TILSON as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Redeemer, how blest and secure are they who know the strength of Thy presence and feel the comfort of Thy nearness. Continue to remember Thy mercy and truth toward us, O Lord. Help us to do right, and Thy recompense to us will be the power to do more right. Take away our sin and enable us to repulse all enemies of our best manhood. Our Father, may we always be among those who purify, sweeten, and broaden human life by word and deed. Through the radiance of the glorified cross may our souls ever be in the light and promise of divine hope, and thus ever lead us toward the Father's house. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the Record in some remarks I made yesterday, March 18.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the RECORD will be corrected in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Florida.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. During the proceedings on yesterday, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] made objection to all requests for extension of remarks in the RECORD. I was listening very carefully, and I was grieved when my colleague from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] was not permitted to read a telegram into his remarks; but now, upon looking at the RECORD, on page 4440, I find that telegram against which objection was lodged. Now, my parliamentary inquiry is, Does an objection in this House mean anything?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. With the permission of the Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent once more that the membership of the House have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bonus bill, and this will obviate the situation the gentleman is speaking of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the subject of the soldiers' bonus. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I hate to object when the gentleman from Texas makes the request—

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BEGG. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. To reply to the suggestion made by my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] regarding the fact that there appears this morning in the RECORD the telegram that I was refused permission to finish reading yesterday regarding adjusted compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What is before the House, please?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. A question of correcting the RECORD is before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I want to say, in explanation, that I never realized before the shortness of a minute, and having failed in receiving permission to extend my remarks by reason of the objection that was interposed I recognized that it was not necessary with my constituents because they knew full well my position and had confidence in me, and I joined with the rest in the hilarity which followed, but in some way I placed that telegram in the same pocket in which I had my remarks and inadvertently or otherwise [laughter] it was in the folded paper when I handed my remarks to the Clerk for printing, and I was very much surprised to find it this morning in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the Private Calendar is becoming somewhat congested. There are a number of Members, of course, largely interested in it. I have no personal interest in it myself and have no bill on that calendar. I know the congested condition of the general business of the House, and I simply want to venture to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he take into consideration the advisability of having a night session at some future, early date, if it can not be done otherwise without interference with the general business, to take up bills on the Private Calendar, unobjected to or otherwise.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that is a very excellent idea. I am very glad to accept the gentleman's suggestion, and any night that the gentleman would think advisable I would be very glad to agree to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Some night this week?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think so; yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We might confer later about that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will be very glad to do that.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

VESSEL FOR COAST GUARD DUTY IN ALASKA.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the construction of a vessel for the Coast Guard, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to construct and equip one Coast Guard cutter, at a cost not to exceed $925,000, of appropriate design and special construction, for Coast Guard duty in Alaskan waters and for cruises into the Arctic Ocean, to replace the cutter Bear, no longer suitable for such service.

Mr. WINSLOW rose.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it in order to demand a second; and if so, would it be in order to do that at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; this is Calendar Wednesday, the call resting with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The gentleman from Massachusetts has called up a bill from that committee and has asked and obtained unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN. How much time will be allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be considered under the five-minute rule as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a matter which seems to become necessary for consideration in the interest of the Arctic service of the Coast Guard off the coast of Alaska and in that northern region. For 48 years a good old ship, known to all travelers and to all mariners who have ever been anywhere near Alaska or in waters thereabout, has been doing a great duty in the interest of all governmental departments. The ship has saved many lives at sea and has saved many lives on land by carrying foodstuffs, medicines, and so forth. It has done police duty in those regions, and it has been an all-round successful old craft. The name of the ship is the Bear. The ship was built in 1874, and, to make a long story short, I would say that those who have to do with running and operating the Bear have no doubt, nor have they had for several years, that the ship is unseaworthy and that those who go out on her are liable at any time to the misfortunes of the sea by virtue of the decrepitude of the old craft. The purpose is to build a new ship to supplant the Bear. It is to be one of special design and of such a type and quality as to be able to fight ice, and so forth, all through the winter months. The committee, therefore, has brought out this bill with a short report reciting just about what I have said. Beyond this the chairman has no desire to take time, because the bill tells the whole story and so speaks for itself. I shall be very glad to answer any questions.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Have we not vessels now belonging to the Shipping Board some of which could be used for this purpose?

Mr. WINSLOW. If rebuilt, some might be available in the summer time; but in the wintertime, when they have to face ice floes and plow their way through the ice which accumulates in Arctic waters, I think the gentleman would find they would not qualify.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think it would be possible to so remodel or repair those ships as to render them efficient for this service for less money than this appropriation calls for?

Mr. WINSLOW. The inquiry is quite in order. Of course, the gentleman will appreciate that he is not asking information from a navigation expert, nor a constructor of ships.

Mr. RANKIN. I would as soon risk the gentleman in that respect as any member of the Shipping Board.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to thank the gentleman for the compliment if I could properly, but I do not feel that I can. The Coast Guard authorities say that this ship, of all ships, has to be especially constructed for the proposed service, and that there is nothing either in the Coast Guard Service or out of it in the country which would be adapted for that use, even if remodeled.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand from the remarks of the gentleman, this is to be used not only as a revenue cutter, but it is to be used by the Coast Guard for the relief of people wrecked at sea, and so forth?

Mr. WINSLOW. All of the usual activities of the Coast Guard ships, plus the special attendance they give to the people of Alaska and the work which they do in defending the sealing and other interests of the Government.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. KINDRED. Is this splendid old Coast Guard ship that has such a splendid record to be used for chasing bootleggers in the future?

Mr. WINSLOW. Maybe.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. Is the ship Bear specially constructed to perform these duties?

Mr. WINSLOW. I can not answer. It was built in 1874 and has been used as the one ship suited to that purpose. Whether or not it was constructed for the work which it has grown into I could not say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would state for the information of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS] that the testimony of the Coast Guard men who appeared before the committee was that this ship was a specially constructed sailing ship, purchased from the British Government, constructed for use in the Arctic region, and was, therefore, specially constructed and purchased for that purpose by the American Government.

Mr. WATKINS. Having been in Alaskan waters, and having ridden on this boat, I was anxious to ascertain this fact, especially in view of the question of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the gentleman is quite right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Last Wednesday, when the gentleman from Massachusetts had his main Coast Guard bill up, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS] offered an amendment in practically the same language as this bill, with the same $925,000 appropriation, to build just such a boat for use around the Columbia River, which is just south of where the gentleman designs this boat to be used. The gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of order against the Watkins amendment, although he recognized that it was meritorious. Will this boat be used as far down south as where the gentleman from Oregon wanted his boat used?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the intention is to use the boat between Seattle and possibly San Francisco at certain periods of the year, and far northern waters.

Mr. BLANTON. Then probably it will cover the same use as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS] wanted his boat to cover.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would not think so, for the reason that probably, if one is to judge from the usual work of the Coast Guard, they would commission a boat to be at the station to which the gentleman refers for constant use, and not take it away most of the year for Arctic service.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman not recognize that there is now an urgent necessity for just such a boat as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS] was trying to get authorized? If so, why not put it all in one bill, and not have to be passing these matters by piecemeal?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is a question of policy for the Congress to determine.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to make this one observation for the benefit of gentlemen in the House who have never been to Alaska. You can not comprehend the enormous distance this boat will have to cover. A well-informed man at Juneau, Alaska, told men last year that it was further, to go by water, from Juneau to Nome, as they have to go around the Aleutian Islands, than to go from Juneau around through the Panama Canal up to New York. That will give some idea of the distance that this boat will have to cover without reaching the waters around the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. WATKINS. Which is 1,200 miles from Juneau.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say there are no boats of the numerous boats we have that can be used for this service?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the report of those who have to operate the boats. It seems so to me for the reason that we have no boats built to deal with ice conditions such as those to which the Bear has been accustomed.

Mr. SNELL. That is the principal reason, on account of ice conditions?

Mr. WINSLOW. That would be one important reason. There are other ships that might be likely to be adapted for six months in the year only.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not a fact that the Coast Guard have no surplus boats of any kind and when one wears out it is necessary to replace it with a new one, and this particular boat is the oldest in the service of any government in the world or of any merchant marine in the world?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, sir. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, or rather remind him of something he knows, namely, that the Coast Guard has no boats to take the place of the one that it gives up, and it has not boats enough properly to do the work of the service as indicated in the case around the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. The words in the bill are "that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed." Of course, the power of the Secretary to carry out the authorization would depend upon the appropriation. They are not directed until the appropriation is made.

Mr. WINSLOW. Just by the same token they do not follow instructions until the appropriations are made.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman have any objection—

Mr. WINSLOW. I would not think that would be vital, but, on the other hand, if the gentleman does not care, we prefer to leave those words in.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, the gentleman has no doubt about their constructing the ship if they do get the money?

Mr. WINSLOW. It never works any other way.

Mr. CRAMTON. And they will not need to be ordered?

Mr. WINSLOW. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is another bill to give the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, $925,000 more to build a boat in addition to the $13,000,000 extra we provided for him the other day, and in a way it is to enforce prohibition. I am for the enforcement of prohibition, but I do not think we can ever get it through the present Mellon system that we have in reference to enforcement at this time. We have to change the head of our enforcement department.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment I will. We have to get a man more in line with prohibition than Secretary Mellon is, regardless of whether he has plenty of money to spend, if we are to have the law enforced.

I want to use my five minutes in saying this: The Times yesterday afternoon, under the heading "Dry laws aid crime growth, says Shelby," and under the subheading "Police inspector avers fact is undeniable," said:

Representative TINKHAM's attack on the morals of Washington was supported by Inspector William S. Shelby, acting superintendent of police, yesterday.

BLAMES PROHIBITION.

"There is more lawlessness in the country than ever before," Shelby declared. "Liquor laws will never be enforced," he said. Inspector Shelby favors a provision for the sale of light wines and beers, and the disposal of strong intoxicants under Government supervision.

That is the kind of prohibition enforcement officer this inspector has proved himself.

I want to say this: If Mr. Inspector Shelby would spend half as much time trying to enforce the law against criminals in Washington as he does sitting down in his office compiling data and statistics and reciting them before committees trying to show the dry law causes crime and is not effective, we would have more law enforcement in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not the time. I have heard him spend several hours before committees reading these same statistics time and again, and I have there denied his assertions, and I have told him about specific violations of law continuing here in the District, complaint of which had been brought to me by citizens here, and he was not interested enough in it to even take down the number of the street and property where the law was alleged to be violated. I watched him closely, and then said to myself, "Mr. Inspector, if you are really interested in enforcing the prohibition law you will at least make a notation of the complaints when I tell you certain places in Washington where they say the law is continually violated, and since you are not interested enough to take the numbers down and thereafter follow it up it convinces me that you are not possessed with any burning desire to have the law enforced."

He never even took enough interest in the specific complaints I recited to take the numbers down, and when I talked to him again about the matter he admitted that he had done nothing about it, and he then was not sufficiently interested to make any notation and did not take down the numbers or property. Mr. Inspector Shelby, I take it, is more interested in sitting in his office compiling statistics and cussing the dry law than in enforcing the law, and in my judgment he is not the proper kind of inspector to lead the splendid Metropolitan police of Washington, and should not be at the head of the law enforcement.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does not the gentleman think the inspector ought to get the thanks of Congress for telling the truth?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I do not think he is telling the truth when he asserts that the crimes of Washington are due to prohibition. I think since prohibition went into effect in Washington there have been fewer violations of the law in respect to serious crimes than there have been heretofore, and taking the increased population into consideration, the statistics show fewer arrests than when we had saloons in Washington. Of course, you have lots of traffic arrests and lots of liquor law violators, but the trouble about them is that they take the $10 or $15 or $25 collateral forfeiture and let the man go. When they arrest him they let him pay $10 or $25 or $100 and forfeit his collateral, and he goes hence without delay, and nothing is done to punish him except the forfeiture of his small collateral. The paramount trouble seems to be that Mr. Inspector Shelby is in favor of light wines and beer, if the Times reported him correctly, and spends his time compiling statistics to correspond to his beer and wine views and works very little on true law enforcement.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to ask the gentleman if Charlie Anderson has been telling the truth in the last few years?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Charlie Anderson is just one of the 110,000,000 people in the United States, and you can not justly throw odium on the whole prohibition law enforcement organization by calling attention to one man. For example, take Congressmen as a class, and sometimes you will find even one of them falling from grace.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is his champion.

Mr. BLANTON. I am one of the champions of a great cause. Oh, you can not blame him. He was a good man once, but he has been living in New York too long. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York would have to condemn the good people of 45 States in this Union, for they through their representatives in their legislatures ratified national prohibition, and it is here to stay, long after we who serve here are gone and forgotten.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINSLOW: Page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized," strike out "and directed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, having been to Alaska and having some knowledge of the great stretch of territory to be protected, I expect to support this measure, not only in the hope that it may save human life, not only in the hope that it may help in the enforcement of our revenue laws, but I am going to support it also in the hope that it may help break up this smuggling of immigrants, which are now being slipped into this country, according to the Secretary of Labor, in numbers estimated at from 50,000 to 300,000 a year.

Now, I hope that all of you gentlemen who have been fighting as I have for the enforcement of the prohibition law will get behind some movement here to put the entire force of the United States Navy, the Coast Guard, and every other agency of this Government behind the enforcement of our immigration laws. One distinguished gentleman said to me the other day, "I have fought for the enforcement of the prohibition laws ever since I have been in either House of Congress, and in my opinion our immigration law is being as flagrantly violated by the smuggling of aliens into the United States under the law we have as is the prohibition law."

Now, we are on the verge, I hope, of the passage of a new immigration bill. I sincerely trust, at least, that in a few days we may pass what is known as the Johnson immigration bill, or the bill now pending before the committee, in order to save America for Americans in the future, so that our country may not become the dumping ground for the riffraff of the Old World.

I hope those in authority will see to it that every agency of our Coast Guard Service, the Navy, the Army, and whatever else is necessary will be brought to bear to enforce the immigration law. This is one law that the American people to-day are interested in as they have never been before, and I realize that if we leave the great Territory of Alaska unprotected we are likely to have thousands of these foreigners pile in on her shores and make their way into the United States from that Territory.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall support this bill in the hope that in addition to the other services it may render in enforcing our revenue and prohibition laws and in saving human life, it may also render further valuable services in helping to break up the present practice of "bootlegging" aliens into this country in violation of our immigration laws. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: Page 1, line 4, after the word "equip," strike out "one" and insert "two."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of supporting this amendment for the reason that pending in the Senate and here there is a bill for the purpose of constructing an extra Coast Guard cutter for the protection of coast waters at and near the Columbia River. I understand that the bill in the Senate will be reported favorably, and if the rule with respect to the multiplicity of lawsuits is good in law it ought to be good in legislation, and by my amendment two things can be done at once. I am asking that this bill be amended so that the Secretary of the Treasury may be authorized—and "directed"—to provide an additional Coast Guard cutter so that there might be a cutter provided for Columbia River waters as well as Alaskan waters. If it is good for Alaskan waters and is needed there it is doubly good and clearly needed for the Columbia River waters, as conditions are the same; and I hope that the chairman of the committee will not raise a point of order, because he stated the other day when I tried to amend a somewhat similar bill that although my amendment was meritorious it was not in order because the purpose of the other bill was simply to transfer some boats from the Navy to the Treasury. If it was meritorious then, it is meritorious now; and if it is in order to construct one, then it is in order to construct two. I hope my amendment will carry.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, if the point of order has not been made, I will make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. The bill authorizes one Coast Guard cutter to be designed and constructed to replace the Bear, which has been in use, and I submit to the Chair that when a bill is considered to authorize the construction of a vessel of one particular type of construction an amendment to that bill adding another vessel is not germane under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. It is plain that the purpose of this bill is to construct a Coast Guard cutter to replace another specific vessel. It would seem that it would not be in order to add another cutter in addition to the contemplated one to replace the Bear. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that either the general debate be now closed or be closed in a few minutes in case anybody wants to say something. If not, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRAUDULENT SALE OF SECURITIES.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the bill H. R. 4, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 4, to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the committee consider the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on that motion is debate allowed?

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is allowed on that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the question.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a question of consideration can not be brought before the committee, but should be brought before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it is just the reverse, and the gentleman is wrong about that.

The CHAIRMAN. This is Calendar Wednesday, and that question could be brought before the committee, but the gentleman from Texas has withdrawn the question.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I presume it would be well at this time to arrange for a division of time between this side of the committee and the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill will be dispensed with unless there is objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to inquire whether anybody on the committee is controlling the opposition time? Is any member of the committee opposed to this bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. I have heard of no one.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am opposed to the bill; and if nobody else claims time in opposition, I shall claim it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman on the minority side of the House demand time in opposition?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care to claim it, because I believe the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] will yield me some time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If I control the time I shall be glad to yield the gentleman time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] will control the time in opposition to the bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] will control the time in favor of the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not think Congress ought to pass any legislation that is not absolutely necessary for the public good, but when there is necessity for legislation I think we ought to enact it promptly. If there is a great evil that is threatening the country in any way and it can be met by legislation, I think it is our duty to do so.

This bill, H. R. 4, is intended to meet a situation of that kind. This bill is intended to stop the sale of fraudulent and worthless stocks and other securities through the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce.

Let me call your attention briefly to the evil that exists in this country and that this bill is intended to meet. I find in the last issue of the Literary Digest a statement by the president of the National Surety Co., of New York, as to the amount of money that is lost or will be lost in the next year through various kinds of crimes. This gentleman, of course, obtained his information through statisticians and others, because it is in his line of business, he being the head of a large surety company. He states that the amount of money that will be lost next year through the sale of fraudulent stocks is $1,000,000,000. Now, as compared with that, the amount that will be lost through credit frauds—that is, various credit frauds, like money borrowed from banks and lost, and money lost through the extension of credit in other forms—is estimated at only $400,000,000. The amount that will be lost through burglary, larceny, and petty theft is estimated at $250,000,000, and through embezzlement $100,000,000. But the amount estimated to be lost next year through the sale of worthless and fraudulent stocks in this country is $1,000,000,000.

Let me read a statement made by Mr. Horace J. Donnelly, Solicitor for the Post Office Department, and who is connected with the enforcement of the fraud laws by the Post Office Department. This statement was made by Mr. Donnelly in an address to the Investment Bankers of America at their national convention here in Washington last November. I have a copy of his speech but I will read only this statement, and I ask the attention of all the committee to this statement because I think it is very illuminating, coming from a man who ought to know:

It is not extravagant to say that 1,000,000 gullible Americans yearly lose their money and property in mail fraud schemes, and that $1,000,000,000 annually are so lost.

Now, if that is true—and I think most of us know it is true—then it is the duty of Congress to do something to meet that evil. If the people of this country are losing anything like $1,000,000,000 a year by the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities through the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce, we have it in our power to stop it, and it is our duty to do so.

This evil has been growing rapidly in recent years, and the States have done their part to meet it. And what have they done, gentlemen? Laws have been enacted by 44 different States to prevent the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities within their respective borders. Forty-four of the 48 States have enacted what are known as fraudulent securities laws or what are sometimes called blue sky laws. All the States, with the exception of Connecticut, Colorado, Delaware, and Nevada, have passed such laws. Three States, New York, Massachusetts, and Maryland, have what are known as fraud laws; under these laws when a person is caught or found to be selling stocks or other securities that are thought to be fraudulent and his acts are reported to the Attorney General, he can start court proceedings to stop him by injunction or otherwise, and thereafter it will be unlawful for that person to proceed with his sales. All the other 41 States have enacted what are known as typical blue sky laws.

The general character of the blue sky law is a law prohibiting the sale of all securities within that State until those who would sell them have in some way, provided by law, qualified them for sale; they must have either obtained a license from a State administrative officer to do so or must have submitted full information in regard to the securities that are proposed to be sold and obtained permission from the proper State official or State commission to make the sale. These are what are known as typical blue sky laws.

These laws have proven reasonably effective in the different States. Kansas passed the first one. Kansas was followed by other States until all of the States, with the exception of the four I have named, have passed laws to protect their citizens from this kind of fraud; but they have found that the dishonest promoters are evading their laws and are practically nullifying them by doing a mail-order business. They do not attempt to go before the State officials and qualify their securities when they know they can not do so, but they will open an office in another State and do business through the mails or over the telephone or through other agencies of interstate commerce, and the result is that the State officials are finding that their laws are being practically nullified by these dishonest promoters who are carrying on their fraudulent business through the agencies of interstate commerce. The States are powerless to help themselves. The crimes are not committed within the State where the securities are sold. They are taking advantage of the immunities of interstate commerce to violate, evade, and practically nullify the State laws which were enacted for a good purpose. There is nobody that can stop this except the Federal Government, and the purpose of this bill is to bring the strong arm of the Federal Government to the aid and assistance of these States that are trying to protect their people from this class of fraud by cooperating with the States, if you please, to the extent of forbidding the use of the Federal agencies to violate and nullify the State laws.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I am afraid that the gentleman has so many exceptions in his bill that the main purpose of the bill has been abolished.

Mr. DENISON. If I have time, I will show the gentleman that is not the case.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like for him to explain the reason for this exception:

(f) Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population . . .

This lets three big cities continue to sell stock that is watered and securities that sometimes are not worth the paper they are written on.

Mr. DENISON. I will explain that fully to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Texas, I am sure, when we begin the reading of the bill. I will not have time to go into those details in this general statement, but let me state briefly that we are trying to accomplish one paramount purpose by this bill, but the bill has two objectives. We want to stop as far as possible the sale through the agencies of interstate commerce of fraudulent and worthless securities. We want the bill to have teeth in it, and we want to enact it so that those who would impose upon the public by transmitting for sale through the mails fraudulent and worthless securities may be stopped from doing so; but at the same time we must not unnecessarily interfere with legitimate business, because by far the greater part of the business of the country is transacted in this manner, and we ought not to pass any legislation that will obstruct or interfere in any way with the great mass of legitimate business that is carried on through the mails. We are trying to strike a balance of going just as far as we can to stop the sale of fraudulent securities and interfering just as little as possible with the transmission through the mails of perfectly valid securities.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. In whose hands do you leave the enforcement of this law?

Mr. DENISON. In the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The postal laws are enforced by the postal officials through the means of their inspectors. Have you provided for cooperation and coordination with the Post Office Department?

Mr. DENISON. I will state that this bill has the approval of the Post Office Department. It has been submitted to the various departments of the Government and has their approval, with the possible exception of the Secretary of the Treasury. I will go into that more in detail directly if I have the time.

Let me give the Members of the House, briefly, the theory of the bill. One section of the bill prohibits transmission through the mails or other agencies of interstate commerce by a party in one State to a party in another State of any security which can not lawfully be sold in the State into which it is sent. Of course, if the security can be lawfully sold in the State into which it is sent, then this law will not apply. If the State has no blue sky law or no securities fraud law, this act will not apply.

On the other hand, another section prohibits sending through the mails by a person in one State to a person in another State any letter, post card, prospectus, or circular advertising or offering for sale any security which can not be lawfully sold in the State into which it is sent, the purpose of both being to accomplish the one result of stopping the sale through the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce of fraudulent and worthless securities.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I am very much in sympathy with the purpose of the bill. I have heard it stated that in a good many instances we have not been able to enforce the law in the States that have similar laws. Is it the thought of the gentleman that we will be able to enforce this law and really accomplish something?

Mr. DENISON. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. And without any unnecessary interference with business?

Mr. DENISON. This proposed law will not interfere with any legitimate business. Under one of the sections of the bill securities are classified and those which experience has shown are ordinarily free from fraud and loss are exempted from its provisions.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman some questions in reference to the relation of this law to the existing penal provisions of the Federal code respecting the misuse of the mails. If the gentleman prefers, I shall wait and ask them later.

Mr. DENISON. I would be very glad if the gentleman would defer them.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am sympathy with this law, and I want to ask those questions later.

Mr. DENISON. Very well.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Does the gentleman provide in his bill for what seems to me more vicious than the physical mailing of the stock itself, and that is the advertisement for the sale of this fraudulent stock?

Mr. DENISON. The bill does not prohibit advertising.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. How about the mailing of the advertising?

Mr. DENISON. The bill does not touch the newspapers, if that is what the gentleman has in mind, or the magazines.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. We see very attractive pamphlets and folders sent out.

Mr. DENISON. The bill prohibits that.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. But not the advertising in the newspapers?

Mr. DENISON. No; it prohibits sending through the mails any communication to a newspaper to solicit an advertisement.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Is there any reason why we should not include the newspapers?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; various reasons. There might be some question as to its validity, and we do not want to go into that question. We are not prohibiting an advertisement; but the provisions of the bill will make the advertisement worthless, because those who would advertise can not reap any benefits from it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. In other words, this is the first step toward stopping interstate traffic in fraudulent securities.

Mr. DENISON. That is correct.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Does this bill, on page 9, in section (j), interfere with the sale of nondividend-paying stocks, by which there are more than a million corporations at present in the United States transacting their business?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all.

Mr. ACKERMAN. That is exempted, is it?

Mr. DENISON. Yes, Mr. Chairman, Pennsylvania was the last State that passed what is known as a blue sky law. That State passed its law last August. I want to read just a short statement issued by those who are charged with the responsibility of administering that law. Pennsylvania did not pass her law until after most of the other States had done so, and when the crooks were run out of the other States a great many of them went into Pennsylvania.

The people there were being imposed upon to such an extent that Pennsylvania was driven to pass some sort of a law to protect her people. She passed the law last August. I find this statement in a pamphlet which was recently issued by those having charge of the administration of the law:

The securities barred from sale in Pennsylvania under these rulings were undoubtedly fraudulent, and their sale would probably have resulted in a total loss to investors. At the prices at which those securities were selling, or were offered for sale until barred from the State, the actual amount involved in the 55 refusals by the bureau of statistics during the first 80 days of its existence aggregated the enormous total of $116,960,000.

They estimate that that law has saved the people of Pennsylvania that amount since the 1st of last August.

From a letter which I have received from Mr. L. L. Emerson, secretary of state of Illinois, which has a splendid blue sky law, I read this statement:

The efficient securities law, which has proved the model for securities legislation in many States in the Union, has been worked out in cooperation with leading attorneys in the State. During the four years under this law more than $350,000,000 in doubtful or fraudulent securities have been barred from sale in Illinois.

Testimony comes from various States which have what are known as blue sky laws to the effect that those laws are working reasonably well; that they are fairly protecting their citizens from these pirates of promotion in the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities within their States; but that they can not meet the situation of sales made on the outside of the States through the agency of the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce.

The officials of Pennsylvania have been to see me several times recently and are asking us to hurry up and pass this law, because they say that while they have run a great many of the crooks out of Pennsylvania, these crooks have gone across the State line and opened up offices in Camden and other places just across the State line and are using the telephones and the mails to flood the State of Pennsylvania with their lurid circulars offering for sale all kinds of fraudulent and worthless securities. The people of Pennsylvania can not stop that. There is only one power that can stop it, and that is the Federal Government. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. Of course, under the present Federal law, the fraud statute forbids the use of the mails for the purpose of carrying out fraud.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. And these glaring cases of which the gentleman speaks would be reached under the present law?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. Suppose this law should pass, what would be the effect of it? Could there be a double prosecution, one under section 5480 of the Revised Statutes, and one under this law, or would the prosecution be under this law alone?

Mr. DENISON. Both laws would be in effect, but the Government could elect to proceed as it desired.

Mr. THATCHER. Of course, this goes much further than the present law, because that relates only to actual fraud, while this prevents any sort of circulation of literature concerning the sale of stock unless the State has already approved it.

Mr. DENISON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. The trouble about the present fraud laws is that they are not effective. They do not help any at the right time. The Government can not do anything until after the fraud has been committed, and then the Government must hunt it down and secure the evidence and get the witnesses assembled in court and prosecute, but the relief does not come until after the damage has been done. This bill will remedy that. This is a preventative. It stops the commission of the crime before it is committed, and it stops it before the people have been robbed of their money.

That is the difference, and it is a very small difference. Now I have had this matter up with the Inspectors of the Post Office Department, and I have a report here that at Fort Worth, Tex., they had 335 fraud cases now pending, in addition to those that have been tried recently and in which they have secured a great many convictions; but it takes months to collect this evidence and the witnesses, and it is wholly inadequate to stop the losses we are trying to stop by the enforcement of fraud laws.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I call attention of the gentleman to page 9, lines 8 to 12, which read as follows:

(1) Negotiable promissory notes or commercial paper: Provided, That such issue of notes or commercial paper mature in not more than 12 months from date of issue and shall be issued within three months after the date of sale.

This character of paper is not prohibited under any of the States; then why prohibit it by this bill?

Mr. DENISON. It is not prohibited by the bill; it is excluded by the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Why limit the time at which they mature to 12 months?

Mr. DENISON. We are trying by that provision to exempt what is called commercial paper, and no commercial paper runs longer than 12 months.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Why should you prohibit the sale and transportation of paper running more than 12 months? It seems to me that is entitled to be sold in other States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield before he leaves that point?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of the number of fraud cases pending in the oil fields around Fort Worth, Tex.?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not our present law so strong that we were able to convict numerous fraud cases there, some of them of national repute?

Mr. DENISON. I think they convicted 20, but there are thousands that have not been convicted.

Mr. BLANTON. Cases that have not been tried?

Mr. DENISON. It is just what I am talking about; we can not under the present law—

Mr. BLANTON. They convicted a man of national prominence.

Mr. DENISON. I know; but if this law had been in effect that gentleman would have been in the penitentiary long ago and the people he plundered would have been saved millions of dollars; under our present law Doctor Cook and his gang defrauded the people out of millions before they could be convicted.

Mr. BLANTON. He was convicted as soon as tried.

Mr. DENISON. That is the trouble. What we want to do is to prevent the commission of the crime if we can do so rather than wait until it has been committed and the loss sustained.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield for this question?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Under your bill you can not punish anybody until he is caught in the violation of the provisions of the bill. It is not preventative any more than under their criminal law.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I hope the gentleman will put me right if I am mistaken; I simply asked the question.

Mr. DENISON. I think I can put the gentleman right if he is willing to be put right.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am entirely in sympathy with the purpose of this legislation, and I have in my mind the same question that is evidently in the mind of the gentleman who just asked the question. Now, section 215 of the Penal Code is a very drastic provision. Originally that section required a conspiracy which contemplated the use of the mails as a part of the conspiracy, but it was later modified so that under section 215 anybody who has designed any kind of scheme to defraud and uses the mails in any way commits a violation of the section. I would like to ask the gentleman—I do not want to intrude at an improper time—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] yield the gentleman from Illinois some more time.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I want to ask the gentleman exactly what his proposed bill adds to the powers of the Federal Government in the prosecution of fraud which does not exist under section 215?

Mr. DENISON. Under section 215 before the Government can act the parties must have committed their fraud, and the parties upon whom they have committed it must have sustained their loss. Now, this bill prohibits anyone from sending through the mails, or rather it makes it unlawful to send through the mails, any security which can not be lawfully sold in the State into which it is sent. It makes it unlawful to send it into the State. Now, if a person mails it contrary to the law the burden of proof is placed, by this bill, upon the person charged with the offense to come into court and show that the security which he has sent or mailed is lawful within the laws of that State.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If the gentleman will permit another question.

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Then, as I understand it, the theory of this bill is very much like the Webb-Kenyon Act.

Mr. DENISON. It is exactly like the Webb-Kenyon Act.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Which permits the State to prevent the coming through the agency of the United States mails into the State of anything which is prohibited by the State?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If that is the case it does go, and legitimately, beyond section 215.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is right, exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman will yield on the point I inquired of a moment ago—

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Under the intermediate credits bank act loans can be made upon cattle, for instance, for a period not exceeding three years' time, and can be rediscounted by a Federal reserve bank. It seems to me the paragraph to which I referred will prohibit the transportation of that character of security in the mails.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will just wait until we get to that point of the bill, that will all be made clear. That kind of a security is exempted under another provision of the bill.

Let me say this, gentlemen: This bill has the approval of the State securities officials—that is, the administrative officers of all the States that have "blue sky" laws—and they are very anxious to see this legislation enacted. It has been twice approved by their national conventions. It has the approval of the American Investment Bankers' Association, and it has the approval of the economic committee of the American Bankers' Association. It has been indorsed by the State Bankers' Associations of the States of Missouri and of Pennsylvania and several other States. It has the indorsement and approval of the National Credit Men's Association and various other business organizations of that kind. Letters have been coming in from all over the country appealing to me to hurry up and get this legislation enacted.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. In order to make clear the distinction between section 15 and the pending bill I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Section 15 is purely a fraud section. It prosecutes only the commission of a fraud as a crime?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The gentleman's proposed bill punishes the use of the mail for the transmission of anything that is prohibited in a State?

Mr. DENISON. By the State law into which it is sent.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. It is not a fraud case?

Mr. DENISON. No.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If a State shows that in a State stocks of a certain character are issued, or corporations have been putting out stocks of a certain character that are improper, and there was no moral element entering into it, this prohibits the luxury of the United States mail being used for the transmission of that prohibited thing in the State?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. This bill differs from many of the laws that have been passed by Congress in this, that instead of taking away from the States the powers they have heretofore exercised, this bill brings the Federal Government to the aid of the several States by preventing the use of the Federal agencies to violate State laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman had not exempted New York and Chicago and Baltimore, does he think he would have any chance of passing this bill?

Mr. DENISON. I hope the gentleman will not allow that impression to remain on his mind. I can explain that provision satisfactorily when I reach it.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, they are exempted.

Mr. DENISON. The stock exchange is not itself exempted. But the gentleman is wrong. He misunderstands the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I have read it pretty closely.

Mr. DENISON. I will explain it when I get to that part of the bill. I have not the time now.

Mr. RAMSEYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of a bill like this, gentlemen must guard themselves against being carried off their feet by fine words and catchy phrases. In the last few years it has been rather popular to be on the side of "blue sky" legislation. Whenever "blue sky" is mentioned the first impulse is to be for any legislation that is proposed without stopping to weigh what is up for consideration or to figure out the consequences. Of course, I am against all "blue sky" transactions and we must enact all legislation necessary to prevent the sale of, and offering for sale of, all fraudulent and worthless securities.

I doubt if many gentlemen here have ever read the bill that is before us for consideration. The gentleman [Mr. DENISON], who preceded me asserts that the intention of the bill is to protect the people against fraudulent and worthless securities. You can scan this bill from the first page to the last and you will not find the words "fraud," "fraudulent," or "worthless" in it. These words are not there and no words are there with meaning akin to them. We have at the present time, and have had for a number of years, one of the most drastic statutes prohibiting the use of the mails for the purpose of perpetrating fraud that can be framed by legislative ingenuity.

For a number of years I have been a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House. When this bill was up for consideration two years ago my attention was called to it just a few days prior to the second Wednesday that it was up for consideration. I read it carefully. The provisions of the first three sections of the bill appealed to me at the time as making a radical departure from our legislative policy so far as the use of the mails is concerned.

We have a great postal system in this country. That system is controlled and directed by one central authority, and that one authority is located here in Washington. It is the object of the Postal Service to carry communications and intelligence from person to person and from one end of this broad land to the other. This postal system is performing a most useful service. Anyone who desires to use the mails can find out now from the Post Office Department what uses are proper and what uses are improper.

If sections 2 and 3 of this bill are enacted into law, then every State in the Union will be empowered to make postal regulations. Then, instead of having one authority located in Washington to direct this great postal system of ours, we will have the regulations of this central authority at Washington, with such modifications as 48 States may see fit from time to time to impose through their legislatures, regulations of State securities commissions, and as construed from time to time by the State courts. This, to my mind, would cause chaos in the mail service and it is one of the chief causes for my opposition to this bill.

Every honest person and every honest enterprise ought to have the unhampered use of the United States mail service. Every dishonest person and every dishonest enterprise ought to be excluded from the mails, but the laws and regulations governing such exclusion should be uniform throughout the United States. The violations of such exclusion should be enforced by the one authority, the United States Government. If we enact legislation like this, not only will the mails be regulated by the authority here in Washington, as I have stated, but every State in the Union, through its legislature or through a commission authorized or empowered with wide authority to make regulations, will have the power to regulate the United States mails in so far as the transmission of securities or information concerning such securities are concerned.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY. The State of Pennsylvania, carrying along the gentleman's idea, has a very stringent "blue sky" law. It provides that registration certificates must be secured by dealers at a cost of $40 per calendar year. Here is a provision in the law:

SEC. 17. If the commissioner at any time has reason to believe any agent or salesman of any dealer has in any way violated, or is violating, or is about to violate, any of the provisions of this act, or has been guilty of any fraud or fraudulent practice, then the commissioner may, after hearing, and having reasonable cause to believe that the agent or salesman has been guilty of such offense, revoke said agent's or salesman's registration.

Now, under this law, suppose the commissioner of Pennsylvania revokes the registration of a man who already has it. What effect will it have under this law if this law is passed?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then, of course, the company or person would be denied the use of the mail.

Mr. KELLY. But it already had registration and had mail matter out and its registration is revoked.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That presents a different situation on which my off-hand opinion would not be of much value. The hypothetical question the gentleman presents had better be determined by some tribunal.

Let me call your attention to this bill. Sections 2 and 3 of the bill are the sections to which I objected two years ago when this bill was up for consideration. They are the sections which permit the States, through their legislatures or by regulations of their securities commissions, to determine what mail shall not come into such States. Whether the mail so prohibited by the States is in furtherance of a scheme or transaction to defraud is not the yardstick by which the right to send mail into the respective States is measured. A person or a company may have as honorable and honest an enterprise as there is in the world, no misrepresentations are made, and the enterprise may turn out to be a gold mine to every one who invests, and notwithstanding the fact that such an enterprise is organized and conducted honestly and turns out to be profitable, if the mail, in the furtherance of this enterprise, is sent into a State before complying technically with the statutes of that State or the regulations of its securities commission under this bill, the party or parties so using the mail would be liable to a term in the penitentiary, and a fine besides.

Section 4 of the bill arbitrarily proceeds to make numerous exemptions with which the laws of the States and the regulations of their securities commissions can not interfere. Securities, under the exemption provided for in the remainder of the bill, can be sent through the mails into the States even though such securities are in violation of the laws of the States and in violation of the regulations of the securities commissions of the States. The securities thus exempted have the unrestricted use of the mails whether such securities are honest or dishonest.

You will notice that every well-established and big business in the country is exempted. All securities which are quoted on the stock exchange of certain large cities are exempted. Those who traffic in such securities can use the mails to their heart's content, so far as this bill is concerned. All the vested interests of the country and every large and established business are not interfered with whether they perpetrate or undertake to perpetrate fraud on the people or not.

The newspapers are not interfered with; although, I think under section 215 of the Criminal Code, to which I shall refer in a moment, advertisements in newspapers in the furtherance of fraudulent schemes and transactions are prohibited, or rather excluded from the mail. Just what an effect a subsequent law will have, in exempting newspapers from the penalty of carrying advertisements for fraudulent schemes, I do not undertake to say at this moment.

Under paragraph (f) of section 4, the securities listed on the large stock exchanges in cities of over 500,000 population are arbitrarily exempted, and even though they become dishonest and fraudulent, they can not be excluded from the mails under this bill which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is sponsoring; while on the other hand the little fellow who has not won his spurs and established himself so that he can get his securities listed on the stock exchange in New York City, and a few other favored cities, is not exempted. It makes no difference how honest he is and how truthful he is in presenting his business to the public through the medium of the United States mails. My contention is, that so long as he is honest he, and every honest man and every honest enterprise, ought to have the right to use the United States mails. Such an honest fellow with such honest enterprise, even though he makes money for everyone who invests with him in such enterprise, becomes liable under this proposed law to a term in the penitentiary if he fails technically to comply with the statutes or regulations of one of the 48 States in the Union.

This is another attempt to multiply offenses and to fill up our prisons. A gentleman of prominence a few days ago remarked to me that it appeared that one-half of the people are trying to send the other one-half to the penitentiary. It is the duty of government to make it easy to do right and difficult to do wrong. This bill does not do that.

Now, I want to stop frauds. I am ready to join, gentlemen, in making our fraud statutes more effective in the prevention of fraud. I want to stop every person from using the mails in the furtherance of dishonest and fraudulent schemes and transactions. However, I am of the opinion that that is being done very effectively under section 215 of the Criminal Code.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] talks about prevention. The inference he evidently wishes to leave is that under his bill fraud is prevented, while under section 215 there is only punishment after the fraud is perpetrated. I do not get his distinction. This bill, if enacted into law, will do no more to prevent crime than does any criminal statute. Before you can punish anyone under a criminal statute there must be a violation of that statute, and the person so violating the statute must be tried and convicted in the courts. Before you can punish under section 215, or under the provisions of this bill, the violator of the law must be caught, indicted, and tried in the courts. Violators, under section 215, as would also be the case of violators under this bill, would have to be caught just like they have been catching them down in Texas for using the mails to defraud. There are quite a number of prominent citizens—one with a national reputation—who have recently been convicted and sentenced to long terms in the penitentiary for violating the provisions of section 215.

Mr. BLANTON. And you could not convict him until you tried him.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. There must first be a violation and then an apprehension of the violator of the law before trial and conviction can follow.

The idea of this bill had its birth soon after the war. The war created an abnormal psychology. Right after the war we had an abnormal post-war psychology. During the year of 1919 we experienced an orgy of speculation such as was never before witnessed in this country. People knew of many millionaires being made during the war out of war contracts. Prices of all products, including farm products, continued high right after the war. Many people had saved money during the war. After the war those who had not gotten rich during the war thought the time had come for them to get rich also. Every scheme that was presented to the people offering wealth and fabulous profits appealed to them and a whole lot of people bit.

When the bill was up for discussion in the House two years ago the State of Iowa was referred to as one of the States where "blue-sky" sharks had reaped a wonderful harvest, and it was estimated then that during the year 1919 in the State of Iowa there was spent something like $200,000,000 for fraudulent securities. Since that time an investigation was made through the bankers of Iowa to ascertain what percentage of such securities was sold in that State through the mails and what percentage was sold by so-called high-power salesmen. From the data received from the bankers all over the State it has been estimated that less than 10 per cent of the securities sold in Iowa at the time were sold through the mails. The rest of them were sold through these high-power salesmen, most of whom were imported from outside of Iowa to carry on these sales campaigns. Some of the better-informed bankers of the State estimated that from 95 to 99 per cent of the securities sold in the State during that year were sold by salesmen and not through the mails. Another interesting fact is that most of the securities sold in the State were for concerns organized in Iowa. We had several packing companies started there—fraudulent, of course. We had rubber companies, automobile tire companies, cement fence post companies, and others, right in Iowa, and stocks and securities were sold by salesmen through personal contact with the purchasers, and they were not sold through the mails.

Now, I am wondering too, just what effect the enactment of this bill will have on getting convictions under section 215 of the Criminal Code. My attention was recently called to the Dollings Co., of Ohio. The president and vice president of this company were, a few days ago, convicted in the Federal courts for violation of section 215. This company had secured permits to sell its stocks in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, and maybe other States also—I have not learned as to that. Under the Denison bill, that would give them the right to use the mails into those States because this company had complied with the laws of those States.

Another company I wish to call attention to is the Midland Packing Co., of Sioux City, Iowa, organized in 1919. The officials of this company went into the State of South Dakota and got permission from the securities commission of that State to sell its stocks in that State to the extent of $2,000,000. Under this permit, $8,000,000 of stock of this company were sold in that State.

I am advised that this company after getting its permit from the State of South Dakota advertised within that State that its stocks had the approval of the State securities commission. There is no question that the fact of having secured this permit induced many persons in the State of South Dakota to invest without careful investigation. Had no such permit been secured, naturally the purchasers in that State would have been more cautious, and the chances are that less stock would have been sold. The Midland Packing Co., of Sioux City, Iowa, turned out, as did the Dollings Co. in Ohio, to be a fraudulent concern. Its officers were likewise indicted under section 215 of the Criminal Code.

Now, suppose the Denison bill had been in effect and the gentlemen of the two companies referred to had been indicted, as they were under section 215 for using the mails for fraudulent purposes. Under the Denison bill they would have had a right to use the mails to sell their stocks in the States referred to. Would their compliance with the provisions of the Denison bill have made them immune against prosecution under the provisions of section 215? I do not contend that it would have done so; I am simply raising the question. However, I am inclined to think, and I think every lawyer will agree with me, that these defendants charged with using the mails for fraudulent purposes could have introduced as evidence in their defense, in order to show good faith and a lack of intention to defraud, the procurement of permits from the securities commissions in the respective States referred to.

Mr. BLACK of New York. What effect has this bill on such a situation?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, I am just speculating about the effect of this bill on a situation like that. I am confident that no court would deny the defendant the right to show that he had complied with the laws of the various States into which mail had been sent in compliance with the provisions of the Denison bill. The purpose of section 215 is to prevent the use of the mails for fraudulent purposes. This bill has no such purpose, but simply undertakes to prevent the use of mail for failure to comply with State statutes and regulations. As to the long list of exempted securities, the use of the mail is guaranteed in violation or even in defiance of State statutes and regulations. If a defendant were able to show that his securities were within these general exemptions or that he had complied with State laws and regulations, I think it would go far in overcoming the Government's evidence of guilt in support of an indictment under section 215.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman tell us what section 215 is?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am referring to section 215 of the Criminal Code, which is known as the fraud section of the postal laws. I will read you portions of this section, as I have it here before me, to give you an idea of its provisions:

Whoever, having devised, or intended to devise, any scheme or article to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises . . .

Then it goes on and specifically enumerates a lot of schemes, such as were prevalent in this country 30 or 40 years ago. I omit reading those and read the last portion of the section—shall, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do, place, or cause to be placed, any letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, whether addressed to any person residing within or outside the United States, in any post office, or station thereof, or street, or other letter box of the United States, or authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post-office establishment of the United States, or shall take or receive any such therefrom, whether mailed within or without the United States, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Let me ask again, Does that give the Postmaster General any right to discriminate with respect to that sort of stuff or does that leave it within the power of the prosecuting attorney?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Section 215 is a criminal statute and defines what is prohibited and provides the penalty. Section 3929 of the Revised Statutes is the fraud order statute. This section authorizes the Postmaster General to issue orders prohibiting the delivery of mail to any person, firm, or corporation found to be using the mail in the furtherance of any fraudulent schemes or for obtaining money under false pretenses, including, of course, the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities. Under such an order the Postmaster General can practically isolate the person or firm against whom the order is made from the rest of the world.

So you see, under existing law, we can not only punish users of the mail for fraudulent purposes but we can prohibit the delivery of mail to such users.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The Postmaster General might do that now on the initiation of proceedings by a State commission?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Certainly; he could if there was fraud.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Do you contend that this bill will practically repeal the provisions of section 215?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, no; I do not claim that this bill will repeal them. I simply raise the question that if this bill is enacted into law it will be more difficult to get convictions under section 215, provided the person or persons indicted under section 215 had gotten permits under the provisions of this bill, as I pointed out had been done by the Dollings Co., of Ohio, and the Midland Packing Co., of Sioux City, Iowa. The stocks of both of these concerns afterwards turned out to be worthless and fraudulent.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman shows by his answer to that question that he wholly misunderstands this bill. Nothing a State official does can affect the right to send worthless securities through the mail.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Maybe the gentleman is the only one who understands his bill. What I did state was that if this bill is enacted into law the defendant indicted under section 215 could show in defense that he went around and got the permission or consent of various State officials for the purpose of showing good faith on his part and rebutting any intent to defraud.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield for a question.

Mr. THATCHER. Could not an amendatory proviso be included in this bill to the effect that no action by the State in approving a security which could be mailed would preclude a violation under the fraud section—section 215?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; of course, you could put such an amendment on; but I do not care to take the time to discuss what effect that would have. I am wondering what you would gain by the enactment of this bill that you do not have now to prevent the fraudulent use of the mails. You empower the States to make regulations in sections 2 and 3 with reference to what kind of mail shall go into the States. Then the bill goes on and enumerates a long list of exemptions where the mail can be used in violations of laws and regulations of the States. As I said before, you are very careful to exempt every vested interest—you exempt every big concern—and you exempt the newspapers. You are very careful not to arouse the ire of the newspapers or anybody that might come in here with organized opposition. I want the mails protected against all frauds. Up to date the Government has seen fit to permit the use of the mails to every honest man and woman for every legitimate purpose and enterprise. The Government does not permit the use of the mails for dishonest purposes, for fraudulent purposes, or for immoral purposes; but, outside of that, Congress has not heretofore seen fit to legislate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. In just a moment. Now, the gentleman from Illinois comes in here, five years after the war, with a bill that was born in the aftermath of war hysteria. Right after the war we had numerous bills before committees, and some were reported into this House, to regulate almost everything—to extend the espionage act in peace time, for instance—all of which finally died by the wayside. I claim this bill will accomplish no good. It will introduce an element of confusion in the Postal Service.

Another thing which this bill undertakes to do is to transfer the enforcement of this law from the Post Office Department to the Attorney General's office, thus necessitating the creation of a force of inspectors in the Attorney General's office or the duplication of what we have now in the Post Office Department. I am advised by officials in the Post Office Department that all cases involving the fraudulent use of the mail are discovered and the evidence collected by the postal inspectors. After the frauds are discovered the evidence is turned over by the inspectors of the Post Office Department to the Attorney General's office for prosecution—that is, it is turned over to the Federal district attorney to be prosecuted in the Federal court having jurisdiction of the crime.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Section 215 now applies to all fraudulent stock, without exempting any.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I do not believe you could conceive of a fraudulent scheme that is not covered by that section.

Mr. BLANTON. But the Denison bill exempts all fraudulent stock if it happens to be listed on the stock exchange of one of the 15 cities having a population of over 500,000 people; therefore the Denison bill weakens the present section 215 instead of strengthening it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is my contention that the enactment of this bill into law will make it more difficult to get convictions under section 215.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] made a further statement that I do not think he can substantiate. He states that this bill has the approval of the Post Office Department and of the Attorney General's Office. I question that. If he, or somebody else, repeats that statement I shall show, when we get under the five-minute rule, that neither the Post Office Department nor the Department of Justice has approved this bill nor asked for legislation along this line. No official of either of these departments or of the Treasury Department was ever called before the Committee on Interstate Commerce to testify on this bill. I do not want to take more time now, as I promised a number of gentlemen to yield them some time.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 28 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I reserve the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAMSEYER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 22. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress.

FRAUDULENT SALE OF SECURITIES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill was very fully discussed in the House in April, 1922. The bill passed the House. At that time a number of questions were asked about the relation of this bill to section 215 of the Penal Code of the United States. I myself asked a number of questions upon a theory that this legislation was not necessary, in view of the existence of section 215.

When the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. DENISON] was discussing the bill just now I asked him a question and his answers have convinced me, at least, that the pending bill does not conflict with section 215 of the Penal Code, but that, on the contrary, the pending bill is an entirely different type of legislation. This present bill is to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting or promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof. I call attention especially to section 2 of the pending bill, and then I want to comment on section 215 of the Penal Code.

I might say that I myself have been very dubious about whether or not I should vote for this bill, but that I now feel that it is entirely proper and that we ought to pass this, having in view the intent of section 215 of the Penal Code and the intent also of this bill.

Section 2 of the bill provides:

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or cause to be carried, or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, or other agency of interstate commerce any security or securities for sale to any person in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale or delivery to such person, or solicit from such person, subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities.

It seems to me that, fighting as we should against the enactment of useless legislation, fighting as we should against the improper increase of the sphere of the Department of Justice of the United States, this bill is a sound bill constitutionally and is intended to guarantee to the States their own constitutional rights in preventing the sale of securities which the States deem should not be sold in those States. It is different from section 215 of the Penal Code. Section 215 deals entirely with fraud. This bill deals with the prevention of the sale of prohibited securities. Section 215 deals only with the abuse of the facilities of the mails. This proposed act prevents the shipment in interstate commerce by any means of prohibited securities.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If the gentleman will excuse me, in just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. DENISON. I yield two more minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. On page 7 of the report is the statement that this act has for a precedent the Webb-Kenyon Act, passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress, and then quotes the Webb-Kenyon Act. I do not think there is any Member of this House who has fought more consistently than I against what is popularly known as prohibition, or the constitutional theory underlying the eighteenth amendment, but I desire to say that the Webb-Kenyon Act, in my opinion, was absolutely a proper act, guaranteeing to the States the protection of their own laws. It happens that it was upon the result of my advice that the case was brought, which finally went to the Supreme Court, in which the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act was established.

A distillery in the State of Maryland offered for shipment to the Western Maryland Railroad Co. and the American Express Co. certain liquors, to be shipped into West Virginia. The laws of West Virginia prevented the sale or the importation of such liquors, and according to the proper theory of the Constitution, as expressed in the Webb-Kenyon Act, they had no business being sent in. I advised the American Express Co., my client, not to ship those liquors into West Virginia. It was sued in mandamus proceedings to require it to take the liquor in shipment, and on my advice the express company refused to do it.

The case finally went to the Supreme Court, and on those two cases—the Western Maryland Railroad case and the American Express Co.'s case—the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act was established.

The Webb-Kenyon Act and this act stand on all fours from the point of view of State rights. Under the Constitution, if a State wants to prohibit within its own borders the sale of any kind of securities it ought to have the right to do it, and another State ought not to have the right to permit its citizens to violate the law of that other State. It is the primary duty of the United States in its Federal capacity to protect the proper functioning of the laws of the individual States from interference by citizens of other States, and so I submit to you that this bill is not in conflict with section 215 of the Penal Code and will afford additional protection to the American people.

The improper functions of the Federal Government should not be extended, but the legitimate power of the Federal Government, those powers for which the Union was formed, should be strengthened whenever there is a need of added protection. [Applause.]

The provision of this bill is not a fraud provision; it is an entirely different thing. It is intended to permit individual States to enforce their own laws without being subject to violations of those laws through the agencies of interstate commerce which are primarily under the Federal Government. I am against the theory of the eighteenth amendment because it takes away the power of the States on purely local police matters. I am for the Webb-Kenyon Act and for the pending bill because they both protect the individual States in the exercise of the police powers reserved to them by the Constitution itself. I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee. I know very little about this measure, the so-called "blue sky bill," except what I have read since the committee convened; and if it is intended to cooperate with the States in assisting in enforcing the "blue sky laws" which are now on the statute books of the various States, then I am certainly in favor of it.

I recall that my State a number of years ago was overrun by a bunch of fictitious security and stock corporation pirates fleeing its good citizenship, and we passed a very stringent act while I was a member of our State legislature known as "the blue sky law" of Texas.

The matter, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, to which I wish to direct the attention of the committee has reference to the cattle situation throughout the country to-day. The wheat farmer has come to Congress and has asked for legislation; the President has recommended certain legislation; and relief legislation is now pending in both branches of Congress that is stated by some will stimulate the price of wheat. It is common knowledge of every person who reads and keeps up with present and past events that during the war the cattle raisers of the West, the Northwest, and the Southwest more especially, but, in fact, all over the United States, were urged to increase their herds, so that we could supply our armies with beef that was needed, and was thought might be needed, no one knew how long, to aid our soldiers in winning the war. I do not think there was a single cattle raiser who did not promptly, cheerfully, and patriotically respond to the Government's request.

Then we find in the fall of 1918, notwithstanding the heavy drafts upon the industry to feed our Armies and to a material extent aid in feeding the armies of our allies, that our herds were increased during the war over 3,000,000 head by countless days at home and the extraordinary efforts put forth by our cattlemen to comply with the request and desire of our Government until, gentlemen, when the war closed in 1919, there were in the United States, in round numbers, 68,500,000 cattle. We find that they have been decreasing each year since that time until on January 1, 1924, the number of cattle in the United States was 66,801,000, a decrease of nearly 2,000,000. Now, of course there is reason for this abnormal decrease since the close of the war, and here is the reason according to my view:

At the beginning of the World War and even before our country became involved the price of cattle mounted sky-high; certain banks and loan companies throughout this country sent out representatives soliciting loans from the cattlemen, and branch loan companies were established in the heart of the cattle-raising section. Some of these banks and loan companies loaned on the full value of cattle purchased, and, gentlemen, they even went further and furnished money to the borrower in many instances to pay for ranges upon which the purchased cattle were to be grazed. They said to the cattlemen, "Boys, go to it. We will see you through. We will stay with you." Everything was rosy then. Cattle were $50 and $75 per head. These would be benefactors and pretended friends of the cowmen were getting their 8 and 10 per cent interest, and everything was moving as merrily as a wedding bell, and "the goose was hanging exceeding high." Well, the cattleman did his part to win the war. He went wherever he could find a cow for sale and purchased it at inflated war prices and sold his beef to his Government at a price fixed by that Government. He did not lose any money then, I grant you, but he had many of those high-priced cattle on hand in his herds when the war closed, and here begins the sad part of the story.

At the close of the war, under free meats, England and other countries immediately flooded this country with shipload after shipload of frozen beef and mutton—millions of pounds that had been hoarded by those countries for war purposes—and we had no tariff to keep it out. Nor was that all. Soon our Government inaugurated its policy of deflation, through its various Federal reserve banks. We were told that loans on inflated values must be curtailed, no more money for legitimate speculation, and almost immediately trading in cattle on the range ceased. To go to the packers was the only market. Cattle dropped from $50 and $75 per head to far below the cost of production almost overnight. Then our philanthropic banks and loan companies, that had been so generous with their loans heretofore, stepped in and said:

"Mr. Cowman, we want our money, and you must dig it up instantly."

Oh, of course there were some exceptions. I know some banks that had a drop or two of the milk that makes all mankind akin left in the arteries of their corporations, and did not call their loans. But the great majority did. The result was the forcing on the market, at a time when said markets were glutted with foreign meats, thousands of the choicest of our breeding herds, at the greatest sacrifice in prices known in the history of the business.

Now we in Congress, seeing this disaster confronting the farmer and the livestock producer, endeavored to check this and relieve the situation. Various bills extending relief were introduced. I introduced one myself, extending long-time loans on both agriculture and livestock, through governmental agencies already established. The Government during the war, and for its entire period, had established the War Finance Corporation to aid agriculture and livestock. This the Congress revived and put to functioning again. This granted some relief. Many local banks that were honestly doing their part to carry the cattleman and the sheep grower were greatly aided, but this institution could only rediscount paper for chartered banks and loan companies, and for a period of six months. This was not long enough to enable the cattleman to reproduce his herds. It was seen he must have from one to three years.

Accordingly, patriotic and profound thinking men got together in Congress and formulated and passed, during the Sixty-seventh Congress, over a year ago, what is known as the act creating the credit corporation and the intermediate credit banks, the latter banks, 12 in number, in different districts throughout the United States, each with a capital stock furnished by Government funds of $5,000,000. Livestock loans with these banks, made originally with a local bank or duly authorized loan company, can be rediscounted for from one to three years. Now, some of these banks have functioned fairly well and given a measure of relief, and some have not functioned so well, neither have they given the relief to the livestock producer that they could have given, in my judgment, with safety and in conformity with the intention of Congress. Still these banks and loan companies that made loans on cattle during the war—and, as I stated in the beginning, many solicited livestock loans—continued to enforce liquidation and have forced many cowmen, experienced ones, and the best citizens that ever made an imprint on God's footstool, on the rocks of bankruptcy.

My judgment was, and I voiced it frequently in public addresses, that if these companies would give the cattle borrower a year or two longer to recover from the after effects of the war and the deflation period, he would pay them every cent he owed and have something left from a life's toil for himself and cherished ones. Many others who have studied financial and economic problems and knew the history and business of cattle production gave utterance to the same sentiment.

But no! The leeches, or many of them, continued to suck the lifeblood from this chief artery of our economic life. During the entire year liquidation was continued to be enforced, and thousands of our prime-producing herds went to the slaughterhouses; breeding cattle that it had taken almost a lifetime to breed to the highest stage went across the block at a price (selling as canners in many instances, as, on account of impoverished condition of the range, they were really unsuitable for human food, but the Shylocks said they must go) that would hardly buy the salt the animals had eaten and pay the taxes levied upon said animals. Now, I want to insert right here, as a part of my remarks, a letter from a reputable gentleman, who has been the efficient and honored secretary of the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association for many years:

TEXAS & SOUTHWESTERN CATTLE RAISERS' ASSOCIATION,
Fort Worth, Tex., February 28, 1924.

Hon. C. B. HUDSPETH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It has been reported to us that some of the loan companies owned by the packing interests are calling loans on cows and contemplating calling all of them and forcing these cows to be shipped on the market. We are in possession of definite information about one cattle loan company, in which some of the packing interests are interested, calling some cow loans and ordering them shipped to market.

We made an investigation to determine whether or not the information we had gotten regarding this company was correct and found that it unquestionably was. This might indicate that all of such loan companies were contemplating the adoption of such policy. If not all of them, at least a part of them.

The members who have talked to me regarding the matter consider it a very serious one, in view of the fact that the loan companies holding the mortgages on these cows are owned by the packers, and if they are shipped on the market, it will, of course, cause heavy runs of cows to the market and a consequential decline in prices, and the packers will be able to buy them at a low figure, and will therefore be in position to, on the buying in and handling of the meat, make up any loss which might occur through the loan which they have on them.

It is useless for me to state to you that the value of a good cow is not what she would bring on the market for beef but should really be considered from her ability to produce. Loan companies have placed a value on cows, however, which was based on their beef value, notwithstanding the fact that their true value should be based on their production ability. Some men engaged in the cattle business will have an opportunity to recover from the losses which they have suffered and get in financial shape again if they are allowed to continue to operate their breeding ranches. If, however, they are forced to ship their cows this opportunity will be gone. As stated above, it is useless for me to go over all of this with you, as you are as familiar with it as anyone.

If the packing loan companies are contemplating such a move as indicated above, then we feel that something should be done to try to stop it. We are laying the situation before you, and if there is anything you can do there which you think might be helpful at this time, you can use the information given for such purpose as you may see fit.

Yours, very truly,

E. B. SPILLER, Secretary.

Now, I placed that letter before Hon. Fred Starek, one of the directors of the War Finance Corporation. He has at all times been in full sympathy with the serious predicament of the cattleman and has gone as far as the law would permit to extend relief—likewise has Mr. Mondell, who was once an honored Member of this House, and other members of the War Finance. Mr. Starek had me wire Secretary Spiller to give names of banks and loan companies forcing liquidation of cattle paper. I did so, and Mr. Spiller immediately sent me a telegram which I have in my hand, giving names of five banks and loan companies that were foreclosing on cowmen, but it was found upon investigation that the War Finance was not rediscounting any paper for these certain banks, therefore could not checkmate them. But the War Finance was incensed that this was being done. This agency, the War Finance, is not enforcing liquidation, but is extending loans and giving the cowman every chance it is permitted to give under the law.

And I say to you, my colleagues, it is my honest belief, based upon an intimate knowledge of the situation, that the cowman will pay out if given a year or two longer. To-day we have the finest range conditions in Texas, and I understand throughout New Mexico and Arizona, that have been known in 20 years. Cattle are assured of getting fat by early summer. Cattle have advanced materially in the last three months on the markets, and from press reports from western Texas that come to me, I see that cattle, since the 1st of January on the range are selling from $8 to $10 a head higher than one year ago. And where there was no demand last year, there is now quite a lot changing hands and the demand is active.

But notwithstanding this marked advance and unusual range outlook, Mr. Spiller says these "ice water" institutions are still "putting the thumbscrews" to the poor cowman and are not even willing to give him a "fighting chance." And my colleagues, I am further informed they are using some Government money in these hellish practices. I was informed by reliable cowmen when I was at home last fall that loan companies that had solicited loans in the heyday of high prices were closing out cattlemen—fixing a price of $15 and $16 on good cattle—only crediting the poor fellow with that amount on his note—taking every hoof he owned, leaving a large balance due, refusing to give him his paper back, but holding a judgment through life for the balance against the poor borrower, setting him and his family out in the prairie without anything, and then this loan company would turn these cattle over to a member of its company—a stool pigeon, so to speak—who would claim to have bought the cattle; and this stool pigeon would go to the Intermediate Credit Bank, a Government agency created to help the stockman, and borrow money from the credit bank on the same cattle taken from the original owner at a value of $15 per head, on a loan value from the Government bank at $25 and $30 a head, the cattle upon which the money was borrowed from the Intermediate Credit bank in reality being the property of the loan company.

Ah, I know some one will say that could not be, the intermediate credit bank can not loan to an individual. I understand that. But this company would loan its stool pigeon the money at the fictitious valuation, or, to make it plain, at a valuation of from $10 to $15 per head more than they allowed the poor cowman when they closed him out and ostensibly take his note, then rediscount this paper with the intermediate credit bank. I do not make the statement that the officers of the intermediate credit bank are cognizant of these underhanded and rascally transactions on the part of these loan companies. And I am further informed if this is being done—and I am reliably informed that it is—that our Government will not countenance these iniquitous practices, and will, when due, call money made under such transactions. I say to you gentlemen these Government agencies were created to assist the livestock producer, not to be made agencies to oppress and take advantage of his misfortunes. I shall certainly exert myself to see that not a dollar of Government money goes to a bank or loan company that indulges in these low and contemptible practices. And I can see by your expressions that this House gives me its approval.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. COLTON. I understand that the Government has no way of correcting that evil unless the corporation has money from the finance corporation?

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is right; either the finance corporation or credits bank; and I say to the Congress, and I want to state to the gentleman from Utah, who represents a livestock section, that Mr. Mondell, of the War Finance, is not calling any loans made to the cattlemen. Mr. Starek, the Texas and southwestern director of said corporation, is not calling loans; neither, if I am fully apprised of their attitude, are they sanctioning the liquidation process at this time, but we find these loaning companies forcing liquidation at a time when the cattleman now has a chance to recoup his losses by virtue of the recent rise in values. I say that I am informed that these loan companies and banks, which solicited loans from the cowman, in many instances, are now using the Government agency after said companies force liquidation of the cattlemen, taking the cattle at a very low value, then going and borrowing almost double from the intermediate credit bank, thereby defrauding the cattleman and imposing on our Government.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will gladly yield to my friend from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I believe the gentleman speaks with knowledge of the subject of these cattle raisers. Does not the gentleman believe if these severe measures of liquidation could be relaxed that the cattle business at this time would present a splendid opportunity for improvement?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Beyond question. I will say to my friend from Kansas, who is also a cattleman and has aided the livestock producer and farmer in every way he could since his membership in this House, and is recognized at all times as their friend, and is a valuable Member here, that if the cattleman is given a little longer lease on his financial obligations, with range assured for this year and prices at the markets and on the range advancing, with Government agencies ready to extend his paper, if the private banks and loan companies would do likewise—do as well by him as the Government agencies are doing—inside of 12 months you would see a marked impetus to the business, and the cattle raiser would be back in the neighborhood of where he was when the financial cyclone hit him.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Certainly.

Mr. BOX. Has my colleague any plan to submit by which this situation can be remedied?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the largest livestock organization in the world is meeting near his district to-day, in Houston, Tex., the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association. They are studying this question with serious mien. There are as able men in that organization as we have in any department of this Government or in either branch of Congress. A man who was president of that association for many years lives in my home town of El Paso, a large cattleman, a broad, liberal, public-spirited philanthropic man. He made a great president of the association and is fully qualified to occupy the Executive Mansion at the other end of this Avenue, to be Chief Executive of this Nation. These men, I am sure, will evolve a plan to stop it. In the meantime, I will say to the gentleman, I am working with the War Finance and other governmental agencies to stop these banks and loan companies from oppressing my people; at least they will not be permitted to do it with Government money.

Mr. BLANTON. And they have been doing it with Government money.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; with Government money. I voted for the war finance revival and the creation of the intermediate credit banks, with a view of helping a class of men who have fostered me with financial aid in times long gone by and backed me in every political ambition that I have set my heart upon.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I understood it was done by corporations who had paid the Government.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That may be true in some instances, but they are now investigating down there in the Treasury Building, and it is my impression it will be a sorry day for the bank or loan company that is calling its loans at this time and squeezing the life out of our cattle people if it is found that such institution is rediscounting with the Government agencies. I have not taken this matter up with my friend Colonel Crisinger, governor of the Federal reserve, but I am going to do so at once, and we may find a check there. These banks and loan companies practicing the squeezing-out process are evidently rediscounting with some governmental agency. I will say to my friend from Utah—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me two or three minutes more?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am sorry—I have all my time promised.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes of my time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I thank the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman confidently believe that the cattle industry will follow along the line of improvement that he has seen in the sheep industry in this country?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, I would not say to my friend from Kansas that it would be as marked as the come back of the sheepman, because the sheep industry since the enactment of the emergency tariff is in a very prosperous condition throughout the West, with the greatest season in the way of rainfall and the largest natural forage crop they have ever known in that country, with the ewes bringing twins and the nannie goats bringing triplets, and all that sort of thing. There never was such a prosperous condition, with 40-cent wool and 80-cent mohair. [Laughter.]

Of course, we can not hope that the cattleman will come back as quickly as the sheepman has. But give him time. He does not lack energy or valuable experience. As surely as the God of Heaven watches over and protects him, he will come back. Now, I will not attempt to go into the tariff at this time. I think everyone is familiar with my views on the tariff, anyhow. But that is the sheepman's outlook now.

Now, gentlemen, for the benefit of some of you who are not familiar with these people, the greatest on this earth, let me briefly in the time allotted me give you a short verbal picture of this noble band, the trail blazers and the pathfinders of civilization. In both ancient and modern history you will find that the man with his herds has always been the forerunner of civilization and the builder of nations. This has been so since the dawn of time. In the days when the tomahawk of our once great adversary, the red man, was brandished and flashed in the sunlight of the western prairies and the crack of his rifle disturbed the stillness of the mountain fastness, the pioneer took his small flock and established his humble home out there, and when he placed the adobe bricks together to build that unpretentious cottage, the sunshine of love of Nation and of State, and the reverence of that flag, shone upon that mortar and permeated the dirt floor and the thatched roof, and not one ignoble sentiment of dissension or division found lodgment therein.

The noble, self-sacrificing wife, his companion, taught her sons to glorify that flag and if necessary die beneath its folds in defense of the cherished institutions of this great Government. The daughters likewise were reared to reverence the God of Heaven and to cherish the free institutions of this great Government. Not a bolshevik or a socialist, gentlemen, have I ever known among them.

I do not believe a germ of either class can survive for a day in the atmosphere of this splendid people. They have played their part in the moral and intellectual development of this country, and played that part well. They have contributed liberally of their hard-earned dollars, earned in the heat and the cold, and in the sleet and the rain, earned around the night herds on the trail when the thermometer flirted with zero, earned when they rode their plunging broncos at the head of stampeding herds, when, through chattering teeth, they sang the weird song of the cowboy to quell them in their dashing and mad stampedes, to the building of churches, schools, charitable institutions, and to benevolence. In prosperity they established comfortable homes, supplied with the latest periodicals, magazines, and current literature. But to-day many of those ranch homes show the imprint of hard times and financial depression. The paper may be worn frazzled inside, and outside the paint may be scaling from the walls, but there is a cheerful air and a neat and cleanly appearance within that home.

My friends, the cowman is the most optimistic creature on earth. You may bend him in every direction, but he seldom breaks, or, to use the vernacular of that section, "loses his grip." Under his broad-brimmed Stetson hat he whistles. He whistles "Dixie" as he rides away in the morning. And about her daily affairs his helpmeet, under the sunbonnet, sings "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in His excellent word," although at that moment the very roof may be sagging from the weight of a mortgage due in 30 days, and no visible means of meeting it.

Now, gentlemen, the lamented President Harding said about two years ago that the cattle industry had gotten beyond local lines and had become a national issue, and that a condition created during the war must be remedied. Suppose, gentlemen, these leeches on the body financial squeeze the cowman out, and he is driven out of a business which he has made a lifetime study—he knows no other—he understands the climatic conditions, and has weathered the storms and the droughts for 50 years. Whom are you going to put in his place? Will any of you "tenderfeet" over on that side from the effete East and New England be competent to respond? I would hesitate to give you a certificate of success.

Now, gentlemen, he is not here asking for any Government gratuities; he is not here with his organization, as the wheat farmer and other farm organizations are here represented. He has not the money to come here if his time could be spared from his business. He is looking to you and me to represent him—to stay for a year or two longer, if we may under our laws and governmental agencies, the hand that is now, when daylight is fairly breaking for the cowman, taking its pound of flesh. And he will be back where his country found him when he cheerfully responded to his country's call when we entered the world conflict.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is a more important bill than the committee seems to consider it. I want to call your attention to subsection (f) on page 5 of this bill, which exempts the following from the provisions of the bill:

Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed by any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population, etc.

I am for a proper "blue sky" law such as this if it applied to all fraudulent stocks in existence wherever manipulated, and if it did not make fish of one and flesh of another. But why should we exempt the fraudulent stocks issued when listed on the big exchanges in 15 of the biggest cities of the United States?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. How many are there of that kind listed on the stock exchanges?

Mr. BLANTON. There are lots of them. I can show you whole pages of stocks listed to-day on the New York Stock Exchange, some listed as low as 2 cents on a dollar, and some of them are practically worthless. Why? Because there is nothing behind them. Let me give you some of the New York Stock Exchange quotations as published to-day in the New York American on page 20. Here is the General Electric that is listed at 221; but here is the American Chemical at 114. Here is the American La France listed at 11. Here is the American Linseed Oil at 17. Here is the American Zinc at 84. And I could continue on indefinitely. Many of these stocks are so watered they are practically of no value. Some of them are fraudulent.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. The gentleman from New York has his own time. I want to discuss the vices in this bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I want to get the gentleman straight.

Mr. BLANTON. I am straight already. I am trying to get this bill straight. It is the crooked paths in the gentleman's metropolitan exchange on Wall Street that I am trying to straighten out. I happen to have about 200 business men scattered over my district who have been dabbling around on the gentleman's New York exchange, hedging, and not long ago they were robbed there and each lost considerable money, 200 of them at least.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Fleeced?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; they were fleeced on the New York Stock Exchange. They were fleeced just as badly as the men who have been buying fraudulent oil stocks over the country. I want to protect the innocent stock buyers of this Nation from all fraudulent stock sales. There are stocks sold on these exchanges, regularly listed, that are just as fraudulent as any of the stocks that you are seeking to prohibit in this bill. If you are going to have any exemptions for the 15 cities with over 500,000 population, why not exempt all? You are exempting the 15 big cities of the United States simply because they have a population of over 500,000. If you leave subsection (f) in this bill, I am against it. Why not make it applicable to all, I ask my colleagues?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I just want to ask the gentleman whether leaving that provision in this bill would give an advantage to the large concerns?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly it would. It would create them a monopoly. And do you know why they left them in there? Why, my friend from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] knows that he could not pass this bill at all if he had not exempted these big stock exchanges. He would have had the entire New York delegation here this morning instead of a few of them on the floor fighting for the privileges of their city. You would have had the entire Chicago delegation here, and you would have had the entire Philadelphia and Baltimore delegations here, in addition to our active friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. You would have had them all here fighting the bill if you had not exempted them.

Now, why should we exempt them? I want to call your attention to a very important question: Section 215, which is just as strong a fraud section as legal ability can write, is already the law, and under it men of national prominence recently have been sent to the penitentiary.

If you pass this Denison bill you are going to repeal section 215 and make it no longer the law of this country. Are you willing to do that? Are you willing to repeal section 215 so far as the listed stocks are concerned which are listed on the exchanges of 15 of the largest cities of the United States? I am not in favor of it. I am in favor of keeping section 215 intact to protect the people against fraudulent stock sales generally all over the country.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Under section (f) who will decide what securities can be listed on these stock exchanges?

Mr. BLANTON. The stock exchanges, themselves, of course.

Mr. LEAVITT. Are those stock exchanges made up of men who are interested in speculation as to those stocks?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, they are men who sometimes go there millionaires and leave paupers; they are men who sometimes come there poor and leave rich; they are cold-blooded men who will sometimes sell these worthless stocks to unsuspecting victims and make them paupers, and not a tear is shed over the transaction.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does this mean that groups of men in only 15 cities can decide what can be put into the United States mail?

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what it means. It means that these 15 stock exchanges in 15 big cities of the land shall tell us what stocks may be listed and what stocks shall go through the United States mail and no other stocks. They must pass their O. K. before they can be sold or sent through the mail. And I am not in favor of it. If my colleagues want to let such a bill go through, all right, but it is not going through with my vote. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGUARDIA]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, if I believed for one moment that this bill would repeal section 215 of the postal law, I would not be for it, but I want to say to my colleague on the Post Office Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], who is one of the best authorities in the country on the postal laws, that I can not follow him in this instance.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I never intimated it would repeal section 215. The gentleman caught that phrase from the gentleman from Texas,

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But the gentleman stated it would conflict.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I expressed the fear that it might interfere with convictions under that section.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Exactly; and let us see whether that fear is justified. Section 215 prohibits the use of the mail for fraudulent purposes. In order to obtain a conviction under section 215 it is necessary to prove every element constituting fraud under the old common-law count. This law, as I understand it, supplements section 215, and in order to establish a violation of the law under consideration it is only necessary to prove that a certificate of stock was mailed to a State where such certificate could not be sold. In other words, in order to obtain a conviction under section 215 of the postal laws you must prove misrepresentation, the representation of a fact known to be false, with intent to defraud. For instance, suppose a company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware for $1,000,000, and it was so carefully worded that the purpose of the corporation was to go down into Texas or Oklahoma to look for oil, and that the money was to be devoted to prospecting and searching for oil, leaving the impression and belief that the company already had valuable oil holdings. You could not get a conviction under section 215. But if the stock of such a corporation were sold in a State which had a blue sky law and required a certain amount of capital paid in, and prescribed the rules under which the stock could be sold, while now you could not obtain a conviction under section 215, but it would be a violation of the provisions of this bill and you could get a conviction.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman does not associate section 215 with this bill correctly. Under section 215 you must prove fraud or intent to defraud in the use of the mail.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, suppose a defendant should claim he had complied with these various laws—

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will not take too much of my time unless he can give me more time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I regret I can not, but could not a defendant claim good faith in an attempt to rebut the charge of intent to defraud?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. To the contrary, we have cases of the sale of stock throughout this country where you could not convict under section 215 because there are no misrepresentations made; the story is told in carefully worded prospectus and advertisements, while under this bill if a stock could not be sold in any State under its law you could not mail it to that State. I think that is the very purpose of the bill, so, as I see it, this is a step in the right direction.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The purpose of this bill may be briefly stated to be this: If a State passes a law, under which a certain stock or security is unlawful in that State, so that the citizens of that State can not sell it in that State, then the people on the outside of that State ought not to be allowed to sell it in that State.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Regardless of whether there is misrepresentation or not. It goes to the very foundation and formation of the corporation back of the stock.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is not a question of whether it is unlawful or not; it is a question of whether the company having the stock for sale went to that State and got a permit.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But if you had a blue sky law, you could not get a permit there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the proponents of this measure have talked entirely concerning fraudulent stocks. I do not find the word "fraudulent" used in this bill. I want to invite your attention to perfectly legitimate transactions as they would come under the provisions of this bill. Suppose a concern is a perfectly legitimate, honest concern. If it is listed on the stock exchange of a city having less than 500,000 people, it must go into every State where it desires to do business, and at considerable expense in many of the States, obtain the right to do business there. If it is perfectly honest, it must still go to a very great expense to do business in such a State and comply with its laws because the regulations of the States apply to honest concerns as well as to dishonest concerns. Therefore, you will see the disadvantage to which a business listed on a stock exchange in a city of less than 500,000 people is placed when it is doing business in competition with a concern that is listed on a stock exchange in a city having over 500,000. The small exchange is also discriminated against. The result will be a monopoly or at least the driving into the large cities of all the business that is now being done in the smaller cities unless subdivision (f) on page 5 be stricken out. I resent the inference that the stock exchanges in the smaller cities are dishonest. There are just as honest, just as reliable, just as capable, and just as efficient stock exchanges in cities having less than 500,000 people as there are in cities having more than 500,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Under this bill the large companies will be permitted to absolutely put out of business the small fellow who is trying to start up.

Mr. COLTON. Oh, yes; it protects the larger concerns that are now established or that may hereafter be established if it is listed on the large stock exchanges, and all other honest concerns that are limited in means must either go to these large cities and list their stocks or else go to the expense of going into every State in the Union and complying with their laws; and I say to you that in many cases it does require considerable expense. I am not talking of the dishonest or fraudulent concerns, but of perfectly honest companies.

I would be in favor of this bill if it protected the public against fraudulent schemes, but I do not think it does. I am saying it places at a great disadvantage all of the smaller stock exchanges, and particularly those that are starting out with perfectly legitimate enterprises. I expect, if no one else does, at the proper time to move to strike out paragraph (f) on page 5. It seems to me, gentlemen, that section is a protection to the large stock exchanges.

I happen to come from a State that for more than 25 years has had a perfectly legitimate mining exchange, and now they must go into every State in the Union and get these permits, because they do business by mail in practically every State and they do an honest business. There may be an element of speculation in their business, but they are attempting and seeking to do an honest, legitimate business, even though it has the element of speculation in it. If they continue in business, they must go to this expense to which I have referred, and go into every State in the Union and qualify. They will practically be forced to compete with stock exchanges that are taken out entirely from the provisions of this bill, and I am against it because I believe it discriminates against the small concern in favor of the large concern.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD].

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to this particular piece of legislation. There was a pretty good crop of suckers last year, and you may enact this particular bill and a dozen more like it, and I will guarantee that the crop of suckers next year will be quite bountiful. I hold no brief for those who seek to transact business unlawfully or to defraud their fellow men.

I want to speak for a minute or two about the effect of this bill upon one of the great industries of my State. I hail from a State where the principal industry of the State is precious-metal mining, and many of the great fortunes of the East came from the mines of my State. Some poor fellow out there, with hope and with courage, takes a flour sack full of grub and a miner's pick and goes out into the mountains. He finds what he believes to be promising ground. He exhausts his resources and then organizes a little company to go ahead and get the means to develop the property, and yet by this bill you are going to strike a blow at that great industry in my State. They are not fraudulent, and most of these mines that have started in that humble fashion could not have qualified, until the lucky day when the strike was made, upon any of the stock exchanges of the country. The average man who buys such stock buys it simply with faith that there may be development in that particular place; and to deny a prospector, as you will by this bill, the opportunity to sell stock through the mail in what we term mining prospects out in that great mining country is to strike a blow at a great industry.

I join with my colleague in another protest, and that is that you are permitting here the transmission through the mails of the United States of securities listed upon a few favored stock exchanges and branding every other character and variety of stock with suspicion. In other words, this bill would raise a suspicion against any stock that might be handled upon the stock exchange in my city; but if it should be so fortunate as to be listed upon the stock exchange in the great city of New York or in Chicago, you tentatively say that one may rely upon that with a considerable degree of security.

Gentlemen, if I were dealing in personal reminiscences, I think I could convince all of you that one could lose his money just as readily and easily upon the Chicago Stock Exchange or upon the New York Stock Exchange as one can lose it in helping some poor miner with a grubstake out in my country, taking stock as payment for the grubstake, perhaps sent to him through the mail. Many of the men now in the East who are contending for this legislation got their beginning by taking stock for grubstakes to develop a great industry out in my country. I protest against this idea, which seems to be so prevalent throughout the country, and seems to have reached into this branch of the Congress, that you can regulate and regulate and investigate and investigate and thereby protect people against their own foolishness. I wish my good friend from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], who is sponsoring this bill, would leave the cornfields of Illinois long enough to go out to the great West and see how the great industry of mining is fostered and developed and carried on. If he would do that, I think he would come back here on the floor of this House and voluntarily move to strike out of this bill some of the provisions which tend to strike down a great industry in the Western States. My State is no differently situated than the rest of the great intermountain country. In the last analysis you will never be able to protect foolish people by legislation from throwing their money away. At one time it was my duty to prosecute criminals, and one summer we gathered up a fine crop of confidence men who had fleeced some of our people on fake horse racing and things of that kind. After we had committed that crop of confidence men to the penitentiary, the next year, lo and behold, the crop of suckers was just as great, and some confidence men came back, and some of those same men who had been fleeced the year before eagerly sought to beat the game a second time. You strike at a great industry in your attempt to protect the foolish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, this is no hasty piece of proposed legislation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] who introduces the legislation worked upon it a long time in the last Congress. He has become an expert on the subject. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered it for a long time in the last Congress, held hearings upon it in the last Congress as well as in the present one, and the bill has the unanimous approval of that committee. The bill was first introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and is endorsed by the National Association of Security Commissioners together with the investment bankers of the country. As the most of you know it passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress.

My own State of Michigan is very much interested in this particular piece of legislation. The security commissioner of the State of Michigan is one of the officers of the national association, and has taken a leading part in the preparation of this legislation.

This is what this legislation primarily proposes to do: Any one who wants to sell a security in the State of Michigan, for example, and can not get a permit or license from the security commission of that State to sell the security in the State can not, if this legislation passes, go across the State line and by correspondence or otherwise sell the stock to the citizens of that State when the State commission itself has refused him a license to do so, and thereby evade the State law.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. What effect, if any, would it have upon prosecutions under section 215 if a man got the permission of the State authority and it afterwards developed that the stock he sold was fraudulent?

Mr. MAPES. I have not investigated that question and I am not prepared to answer it. The instance has been known where people have gone to the State Security Commission of Michigan and have been refused permission to sell a particular stock. They have then gone over the State line into the city of Toledo and by advertising and correspondence have sold the identical stock back in the State of Michigan, although the State commission had denied them a license to sell it within the territorial limits of the State. Under existing law there is no way to get hold of such people. This proposed legislation seeks to make it impossible to operate in that way.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. This limitation in Michigan would not apply on stock that had been approved by the stock exchanges in cities of 500,000 population or more, would it?

Mr. MAPES. My understanding is that it would not. That matter was gone into very carefully and was looked at from all angles by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was also considered very carefully by the National Association of Security Commissioners and by the investment bankers, and it seemed an undue restriction to all concerned to bring certain stocks that were nationally recognized and dealt in by these exchanges under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. Why was it limited to cities of 500,000 population?

Mr. MAPES. Because their exchanges, in the first place, have a history. They are well known, and they are well organized and have well-defined rules for listing the stock traded in upon their exchanges.

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, yes; their history is well known.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's inference, I think, is not well taken. There is no stock listed on the New York, the Philadelphia, or the Chicago stock exchanges that has not some intrinsic value, and while no one can guarantee the value of any stock, yet I think it is true that the stocks upon these exchanges have some real intrinsic value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan one minute more.

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I just want to ask the gentleman about those people who came to Michigan and were turned down; who went to Toledo and used the mail to sell their stock in Michigan. Was the stock that they were selling from Toledo fraudulent?

Mr. MAPES. If you mean by fraudulent stock that it was against the law to sell it in Michigan, then I answer it was. It was against the law to sell it in the State of Michigan by anyone within the territorial limits of the State. This bill proposes to make it against the law to sell it within the State of Michigan by those outside of the State.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Was it fraudulent stock; was it worthless?

Mr. MAPES. I say that it was against the law to sell it in the State of Michigan.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If it was fraudulent stock, its sale was prohibited by existing laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD] with considerable interest when he told the story of the prospector who goes out into the mountains and prospects and finds what he thinks is the possibility of a mine. He speaks of those men being given absolute immunity in interstate commerce for the sale of whatever stock they want to sell in distant States to this person and that person or whoever they want to sell it to for the purpose of raising money to develop the mine. I have a great deal of sympathy for the man who attempts to do that, who goes out into the mountains and finds here and there a valuable prospect and develops it. But I want to say, on the other hand, that there came to my office when I filed this bill a letter from a woman in Atlanta. Her husband had been killed in a railroad wreck, and she got $10,000 damages. That was all in the world that she had. She had it in a bank, and some concern out in a western State that wanted to develop a gold mine, composed perhaps of the same class of men my friend speaks about, discovered in some manner that she had it. I do not mean to say they came from Utah, but from some western State where they have gold mines. Those men got up a great big pamphlet telling of the untold riches lying buried beneath their property which they were going to open up. They guaranteed to all purchasers of their stock great wealth and riches, and they sent these pamphlets through the mails to the servant girls and the workmen and people of modest means in various parts of the United States. One of these pamphlets reached this woman in Atlanta and she read it and was interested in it and wrote a letter, and there at once came back to her other pamphlets, literature, great, lurid descriptions of the wealth lying buried out there that was going to be hers if she took stock. This woman had her money, as I say, in the bank and was only getting 3 per cent interest on it; so she invested in this mine stock and lost every dollar of it; she wrote a letter appealing to me to pass legislation to protect other women in her position from the imposition of these pirates of promotion who are trying to sell their worthless wares through the mails.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. In a moment. That is merely an illustration. Gentlemen of the committee, I have received hundreds and hundreds of letters of that kind from unfortunate people all over the country who have lost all they had in that manner, and now it is to stop that sort of thing we are proposing this legislation. No person who has an honest proposition, who can go before the proper State officials and show it is honest, is going to be injured by this law.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman has recited a very touching incident. I will say I am in sympathy with preventing such frauds, but is there not now such a law upon the statute books to prevent that, and why should we go and make an invasion further upon State rights and make it apply especially by giving special advantages over the others?

Mr. DENISON. We have no law now that will reach that kind of a case; this bill not only makes it unlawful to send that stuff through the mails but it will prevent unfortunate people from being defrauded in that way; this will also give a civil remedy to any who have been defrauded.

Mr. McKEOWN. Who is to determine? Are you going to leave it to be determined by a jury on a trial of the case?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Does the gentleman believe the enacting of this bill into law will protect the class of people who invest in gold stock upon such a prospectus as the gentleman described?

Mr. DENISON. I think it will. I think it will absolutely stop the people from being defrauded by the use of the United States mail for selling stocks that are worthless and fraudulent.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman tell us why stocks already listed on stock exchanges are excluded?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I would be glad to do that if I had the time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. DENISON. I will not have time in five minutes, but I will go as far as I can. I am glad that the gentleman asked that question. Now, you will find when you come to consider this bill that it exempts not only certain classes of securities but it exempts also all securities in certain transactions. Now, the classes of securities exempted in most of these provisions are exempted when they are issued by the issuing companies, but there are billions of dollars' worth of securities of various industrial concerns which have already been issued by the issuing companies, already outstanding, already in the hands of the public or in the hands of other persons, and the issuing companies are no longer concerned in them, because they have already sold them; we have to take things as they are now, and these stocks referred to in this connection are those already outstanding and in the hands of the public. They are stocks that are fully listed on the stock exchanges. Now, those who are interested in this legislation and who have been administering the State securities laws have found there must be some method of exempting that large class of securities which is already outstanding and in the hands of the public, and the only standard that can be found is that of listing on the stock exchanges. You have got to select stock exchanges that have had long experience and know what securities are reasonably free from fraud. There are certain stock exchanges in this country which have very rigid requirements for listing, and through long years of business have established a reputation for honest business methods. These requirements are so stringent that the State securities officials are willing to accept them. They are just as stringent as the securities laws of the different States. There are only a very few that have such stringent requirements for listing.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I can not yield; I have only two or three minutes. The securities listed on these stock exchanges have already been upon the market.

They have been bought and sold, and they are still being bought and sold on the market. There can be no fraud connected with them, because the sales are all in the open, and in public, and the sale values are quoted in the daily papers all over the country. The stock exchanges that are exempted in this bill are the stock exchanges that are national in character.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDS. It would not stop a man from sending a letter pertaining to that particular stock that has been listed on the stock exchange?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all. This bill does not in fact, exempt any stock exchange as such. It exempts certain stocks or other securities that are already outstanding, fully issued, in the hands of the public and that have been fully listed on certain stock exchanges. That is all that it does.

Mr. McKELWYN. In my State no city could comply with it. Why should we have no stock exchange in my State?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman does not fully comprehend the meaning of that. The State securities officials—by that I mean the men who have been chosen to administer the "blue sky" laws of the different States—have found, in examining the stock exchanges of the country, that there are splendid listing requirements that are and have been enforced by the management of certain of these stock exchanges for years, which reasonably assure the securities sold on those exchanges from being fraudulent and worthless.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the same request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make the same request.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I make the same request.

Mr. COLTON. And, Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these several requests?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act the term "person" shall mean and include a natural person, firm, copartnership, association, syndicate, joint-stock company, unincorporated company or organization, common-law trust, or any corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia or of any State or Territory of the United States or of any foreign government.

When used in this act the term "security" shall mean and include any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, transferable certificate of interest or participation, certificate of interest in a profit-sharing agreement, certificate of interest in an oil, gas, or mining lease, collateral trust certificate, any transferable share, investment contract, or beneficial interest in or title to property or profits, or any other instrument commonly known as a security.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the only purpose I have in saying anything is to call attention to the fact that in my judgment this bill will only make it easier to avoid "blue-sky" laws than it is now. [Applause.]

Now, the three biggest bankruptcies and biggest swindles that ever hit Ohio have happened in the last five or six years. Every one of the stock issues of those companies was listed on every stock exchange in the East, and I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] really means what he says when he says that the listing of the stock is an evidence that there is some value back there. I have had enough experience and have paid for enough to know that that is not so. I know an automobile concern that was turning out two or three cars a day, where the owner of the concern went over to New York and made an agreement or contract with the moneyed interests over there to borrow so much money, and there was not that value back of it, but the man saw a chance to put it on the stock exchange at about 5 or 6, and by buying it up drove it up to 11½, and he got the money back that he borrowed from the concern and they are in bankruptcy, and everybody who took a nickel's worth of the stock lost it all.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. What would be better, to have that stock listed on the stock exchange and all the quotations on it listed both ways and out to the public every day in the year, or have it under cover all the time?

Mr. BEGG. Oh, I do not object to listing it on the stock exchange. The only purpose of my remarks was to show that the contention that they are allowed to be listed as an evidence of their being bona fide is pure bunk. It is no evidence of the value of the stock if it is listed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. TABER. You did not tell us whether the stock you last referred to was listed.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, absolutely listed on the New York Stock Exchange. I thought I made that clear. The man went to New York and borrowed the money from John Smith, we will say, and put it on the stock exchange around 5 and 6, and bought it himself in order to get other suckers to buy it because it was going up a point a day, and he did get other suckers to buy it, and they lost their all.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. It is not an evidence of a bona fide contract?

Mr. BEGG. No.

Mr. MAPES. It would be desirable in the minds of a good many people that that situation should be remedied by law. But this bill goes as far as the security commissioners of the different States feel it is practicable to go as a workable proposition, and they want to protect other buyers of stocks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if there is any one form of legislation that this Congress ought to indulge in, it is legislation that is designed to put the "blue-sky" artist out of commission entirely. I do not know whether this bill is as good as it ought to be or not, but I do know this, that any bill that will limit the operations of these men is worthy of the support of Members of Congress.

I have a district that has been pretty well scorched by deals of this kind in the last year or two. The R. L. Dollings concern sold in my district in the neighborhood of $3,000,000 worth of stock.

Mr. BEGG. That stock was listed on every stock exchange east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Furthermore, that company got a permit from the securities commission to sell stock in the State.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That may be; but the people of that district have been trimmed up to the tune of about $3,000,000 by reason of the fact that these people were allowed to operate there. In addition to that we had another concern in Indiana known as the Hawkins Mortgage Co. They have been indicted in the courts, and I think they are headed for a place behind the bars in a good substantial penitentiary; at least, I hope that is their ultimate destination.

I did not imagine when I rose that I could throw any particular light upon this bill; but I want to impress upon this committee that whatever it does in this matter it should do what it can to put all of these blue-sky artists out of commission wherever they are and whenever they operate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Under section (f) of this bill a stock could be denied circulation in every one of the 48 States and yet could go to New York and be listed on the stock exchange at 1½ or a little higher and then could be sent by mail into every one of the 48 States which had denied it circulation. So what good will this bill do?

Mr. ELLIOTT. If the gentleman is right in his contention, then it should be amended.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no question about that.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDS. Are not those who are now on their way to the penitentiary going under the existing law?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Well, I presume they are going to the penitentiary under the laws of the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say, in reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that it will at least be noticed that the stock is worth 1½.

Mr. BLANTON. But it goes up and down.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I decline to yield any further because I have only five minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman permit me to say that that stock was sold in the State of Indiana by agents and this bill does not affect them one particle, and all of that stock in my State was sold by high-power agents.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The object of this bill, as I understand it, is to limit the operation of these blue-sky artists in so far as that can be done by law. It makes no difference how the Dollings people did business in my State; the point I want to make is this: That such scoundrels should have no right to do business anywhere under any law, and the law should be made strong enough, if possible, to put them out of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is recognized.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for time during general debate, because I did not know from which side to ask it. I expect to vote for the bill; therefore I could not ask time from the opposition, but I have grave objections to express to the bill, and therefore I could not ask it from the affirmative side.

Nearly all of the States have adopted so-called "blue sky" laws for the protection of their citizens from peddlers of fraudulent stock. However, those laws are mild; they do not operate to give full protection; they are merely a short step, but they do give some protection.

The purpose of this bill is to afford to the people of the various States self-government and to force those who want to sell stock to their citizens to operate under the laws of those States. In other words, the purpose of this bill is to fix it so that anybody who wants to sell stock to the citizens of a State, and undertakes to do so by means of interstate commerce, will have to operate in exactly the same way as he would if he were personally and actually within the territory of that State. In short, a dealer in stocks and bonds is not permitted to stop at the State line and talk by telephone, by telegraph, or by letter with the people of a State and defraud them in stock sales without subjecting himself to punishment such as would be inflicted for that same kind of a fraud if he had stepped over into the State.

Now, with that purpose I am in full accord. It is hard for me to understand how any Member can object to his people being protected by the laws of his State against fraudulent stock manipulations. And it is hard for me to understand how any Member can insist upon other Members' constituents being deprived of the protection given by the laws of their States against the fraudulent acts even of his own constituents. I doubt whether there is anybody who would really take that position understandingly.

The trouble with this bill is that it has entirely too many loopholes. There are entirely too many exemptions from its operation—too many people who are permitted to use the mails and the telegraphs to defraud unsophisticated persons who want to make an investment.

One of the classes exempted from the bill are those who have their stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange and other stock exchanges. It is absurd to say that merely because a stock is listed on a stock exchange fraud can not be worked by selling it.

Hardly any of the stocks are worth par. There is nothing to prevent a dealer who has a stock listed on the stock exchange and quoted at anywhere from par down to nothing from making false representations through the mail or otherwise and selling it to some unsuspecting purchaser. I see no reason why subsection (f), on page 7, should not be stricken out and I favor its being stricken out. [Applause.]

What I object to about this bill is that it has not got enough teeth. It is too satisfactory to people who want to peddle worthless stocks. [Applause.] I tried, in my modest way, to get some amendments adopted to the bill, but the author of the bill and a majority of the committee were satisfied with it as it was. It is a compromise. There is no use trying to conceal that. It is a compromise in order to get it passed. The fear is that if you bring out a bill that has some real teeth in it you can not get it through. I am surprised that anybody would argue against this bill that it is going to do something wrong. The trouble about it is that it is not strong enough. That is the real defect.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman can get more time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not think I want it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. This bill exempts all the big established interests. The gentleman is on the committee. Why did you exempt the newspapers?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will tell you why. It was because a majority of the committee did not agree with me that they ought to be exempted. For instance, why would you allow all railroad stocks to be excepted from the bill? Practically none of them are worth par and a fraud can be worked with almost any of them. Why will you open the door and exempt railroad stocks from this bill? There is no reason for exempting any kind of stock. If it can not come in and be sold under the laws of the State it ought not to be sold at all.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 2, line 2, after the word "of," insert the word "any," and after the word "interest" strike out the words "in an oil, gas, or mining lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McKEOWN offers the following amendment: On page 2, line 2, after the word "of" and before the word "interest," insert the word "any," and after the word "interest" strike out the words "in an oil, gas, or mining lease."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I will go as far as any man in this House to try to suppress the sale of fraudulent securities, but what does this bill undertake to do? This bill undertakes, in the first place, to invade the rights of the several States, but we have so long forgotten they ever had any rights that that will be immaterial to the House. This bill will do what? It will put in the hands of the smoothest and the strongest stock salesmen and the men who pull the biggest skin games in the United States the control of all these matters and will give them a free hand while some struggling man who is trying to develop some industry in the West will find himself shut out from trying to make any developments. Now, gentlemen, you can put this bill over as it is if you want to, but why do you depart from the law that we now have? If you do not think the present law is sufficient go down to Fort Worth, Tex., and you will find a lot of gentlemen down there who think that the Department of Justice has found an effective way to put them out of business because there are great bunches of them who have gone to the penitentiary.

Why not go to work and say that it shall be unlawful to send this fraudulent stock through the mail instead of drawing up a bill that is going to turn loose and license the big concerns of this country to turn loose their stocks on the country. If you, perchance, can get your stock listed in New York or in Chicago or in St. Louis, well and good; but if you happen to live in Oklahoma, where you do not have a city of 500,000 people, you have got to let the people from St. Louis sell their stock in your State, but you can not sell any of your stock in their State. And you pick out oil and gas. Why do you pick them out? Why do you not say real estate or why do you not mention all the other bunk patent propositions that are sold? Why do you not include railroad stocks? No; you pick out oil and gas, and you propose to stifle the production of oil and gas in the States where they are produced, because the Standard Oil and the great oil interests of this country have long since learned too much to go out there and wildcat and undergo the hardship of a frontiersman and take chances on discovering oil. They do not develop any oil fields. They wait until you develop it, and then they buy everything in sight and the small man is put out of business. What do you propose to do? You propose to let the Standard Oil sell its stocks throughout the country without any restriction, and yet if a man in Oklahoma is trying to develop a little oil field out there in order to bring in some oil to add to the wealth of the country, he will go to the penitentiary if he even writes a letter to some friend in Kansas or in some other neighboring State telling him what he has done and stating he wants some money to help him.

Gentlemen, I am sure you want to do what is right about this matter, and I want you to stop and think a minute about what this bill does. This bill will turn loose upon the country some of the most outrageous propositions and give the promoters of those propositions a good bill of health. They will go out and advertise the fact that they have their stocks listed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. They will go out and advertise the fact that they have listed their stocks on a stock exchange in a city of over 500,000 people, and that will be taken as a good endorsement.

What is the matter with the railroad situation to-day, and what is the trouble about the railroad rates? The trouble is that the stocks issued by the railroads have been so enormous that they have to have high freight rates in order to get any returns, and the stock is now owned by widows and orphans and small-salaried people throughout the East and the North, and that ownership has been shifted into their hands by the promoters who drew up the propositions in New York and sent them out to these people. That is the trouble with the railroad situation to-day, and yet you are going to favor those fellows and make special pets out of them.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose this bill were written into law just as it is and a man was desirous of putting over a fake stock-selling scheme. Would not his prospectus which he would show to the customers be the most convincing argument he could offer if he would cite a paragraph of the law that exempted the securities, if listed?

Mr. McKEOWN. Instead of a small skin game going on, with the caliber of an inexperienced, small promoter, they would get the smoothest artists in the country, and they would pull it off in great big sales.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. For a question.

Mr. MAPES. Is the gentleman's motion to strike out the sale of securities regarding oil and gas and mining leases because of his desires to make the legislation more stringent, or is it too stringent?

Mr. McKEOWN. The only reason I offer the amendment is because oil and gas are picked out specifically. Let us apply the thing to any interest, to anything.

Mr. MAPES. Is it the gentleman's feeling that the law is too restrictive rather than not restrictive enough?

Mr. McKEOWN. It is not restrictive enough because you specify, and whenever in a statute you specify and name a particular class by inference you exclude all other classes. It is just as wrong to skin on any object as it would be on oil or gas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were requested—I might put it that way—by the various blue-sky law commissioners of the United States to give additional relief which was not afforded the States. If gentlemen will go back two years they will find that some $500,000,000 were taken from the poor people of the country, from the widow, from the servant girl, from the small investor, who were carried away by big fake prospectuses. Forty some States in the wisdom of those States have created blue sky law commissioners, and they found that they were unequal to the task of protecting the poor people of the States from the vultures who fed upon them.

Let your mind go back a year and a half or two years, and you will find that every great newspaper in the country and all the magazines were leading a crusade against this form of theft. The State commissioners found that they were unable to cope with it, so their wishes were placed in the form of a bill which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] drafted, and that bill was given long and careful consideration by the committee of which I am a member.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. In just a minute. These commissioners had their own representatives. Extensive hearings were had. Every line of this bill, every word of this bill was carefully canvassed. It has received the support of what are called the investment bankers, the men who handle an enormous mass of undisputed securities, legitimate securities, and the committee was confronted with the difficulty of trying to define each security. Therefore, in its wisdom the committee defined securities by classes, and this definition met the approval of the commissioners of these sovereign States, who stated to your committee that without this national legislation this robbing of the poor people of the country would continue.

The representatives of these 40 States, men selected by the governors of the States or elected by the people of the States, have given this bill their approval.

Now, gentlemen, at the eleventh hour, after all this careful investigation, after this Congress has passed this bill almost unanimously at the last session, while this robbing is going on, while this theft continues, we are here now quibbling over phraseology.

My friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN], for whom I have the greatest respect, finds oil and gas stated and thinks they are pointed out conspicuously. The bill does not intend to do that. They are only two of the things that are pointed out, and yet it is a fact that the sale of oil and gas stock are two of the incentives to beguile careless investors.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would not this law cover all of the things without naming any special one? Would it not be stronger if you said the—certificate of any interest, collateral trust certificate, any transferable share, investment contract, or beneficial interest in or title to property or profit or any other instrument known as a certificate,

What is the necessity for putting in oil, gas, and mining leases? Is it not just as bad to sell shares in inventions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWES. I would say to my friend from Oklahoma that every line and word in this bill was gone over with the greatest care by the representatives of the commissioners of these various States.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And the American Investment Bankers' Association participated in this conference, and this bill represents a compromise between those two interests. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HAWES. Very largely.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is not the drastic bill that the gentleman from Illinois originally introduced, which was withdrawn. These interests went out and got together and brought this in.

Mr. HAWES. No. I would like to correct the gentleman in this respect, at least so that the matter may be clear. The compromise was not on the phraseology of the bill that we are discussing now. The compromise, if there was a compromise, was on the designation of the stock exchanges and the character of the stock, but not where it relates to oil.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The bill that we have now before us is a complete departure from the original bill and is not half so drastic. It does not compare with the other bill at all.

Mr. HAWES. I disagree with my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWES. That is not my understanding about the object of the bill or the severity of the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman does recollect, however, that we held hearings on the original bill and that the representatives of the Investment Bankers' Association appeared and objected to that bill.

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And it was subsequently withdrawn and that later this bill was introduced, with the statement that these parties, the Investment Bankers' Association and the representatives of the State utility boards, had gotten together and agreed on this bill?

Mr. HAWES. That is correct, but the disagreement was not on the kind of stock they want to prohibit the sale of.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. The original bill carried the language that it was thought prevented the transportation of any kind of securities, however legitimate they might be, from one State to another. The only thing the investment bankers and securities commissioners did was to go over the proposition so as to harmonize it with the laws of the various States and make it possible to prevent the transportation of fraudulent securities, but not to interfere with the transportation of legitimate securities.

Mr. HAWES. The gentleman from Kentucky has accurately stated the situation. The compromise was not as to fraudulent stock, but it was an arrangement that would permit the free flow of legitimate stock.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the reason why their services were availed of was that they had technical knowledge of all of these matters, which the members of the committee did not have.

Mr. HAWES. The gentleman from Kentucky will recollect that everybody was called in except the representatives of the crooks who were trying to sell fraudulent stock. Is that about a correct statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. There may have been one or two slipped in, but we did not intend it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The newspapers are the main advertising medium of the country to-day. Fraudulent stock, under this bill, can be advertised indiscriminately with immunity. Why did not the gentleman include newspapers in the bill?

Mr. HAWES. Because it would have been absolutely impossible for a newspaper to look into everything that they advertise—stocks, medicine, and horses. The gentleman might have a cow in Texas which he might advertise at $100, and the newspapers would have to investigate the cow to see whether it was really a $100 cow or not.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think the bill has gone far enough in that respect.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why did you not include real estate?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. McKEOWN) there were—yeas 14, yeas 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment. After the word "lease" insert the words "and real estate."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "lease," insert the words "and real estate."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, or other agency of interstate commerce any security or securities for sale to any person in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale, or deliver to such person, or solicit from such person, subscriptions to or orders for, such security or securities.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up much more time, as I have already spoken in general debate. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] spoke of the very intense attention which had been given this proposition by the committee, spoke as though everybody had been before the committee, as if everybody had been called in except the crooks. I have in my hand here the hearings and there were just six gentlemen who were called as witnesses, aside from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the author of the bill, who also appeared as a witness. There may have been other hearings, I do not know. If there were, they were not printed. Here is a small pamphlet containing nothing but short statements of the securities commissions of a few of the States. I do not know what gentlemen think about this bill, those who have not spoken to-day. I have said before that I am just as much against fraudulent operations through the mails as anybody can be, and nobody can be more opposed to them than I am. It does seem to me that in principle this is one of the most vicious pieces of legislation that has ever been offered here on the floor of this House. It does not undertake to segregate fraudulent schemes from those which are honest and free from fraud. The mails should be at the service of every honest man and every honest enterprise. Every dishonest man and every dishonest enterprise should be excluded from the use of the United States mail. This bill does not undertake to make any such distinction. Sections 2 and 3 provide for drastic exclusions unless with permission of the States. The rest of the bill deals with exceptions. In these exceptions are the big stock exchanges, the big interests, the vested interests, whether honest or dishonest, which do not have to comply with any law of the States; they do not have to comply with any regulations of any State. They can operate in defiance of State laws and regulations. Now, if you want State rights and want the States to be supreme within their boundaries, why do you not turn this thing over to the States, as the gentleman from Alabama advocates? A State that does not want railroad stocks and bonds sold within its borders, let it say so and be protected by the Federal Government. That way you can put up a Chinese wall around every State and protect it against all comers.

What I am contending for is that if the present law against the fraudulent use of the mails is not sufficient—and they tell me down at the Post Office Department they can not think of a scheme for selling fraudulent and worthless securities they can not get under the existing law—you are simply penalizing the honest fellow who is trying to get on his feet as against the fellows who are established. What you ought to call this bill is a bill to give Wall Street and the vested interests a monopoly on fleecing suckers.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Post Office Department has a statute now that forbids the fraudulent use of the mails?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But there is no statute which forbids the fraudulent use of other means of interstate communication?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman knows these various facilities of interstate commerce in this bill here were inserted for the purpose of giving jurisdiction of this legislation to the Committee on Interstate Commerce—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman is not basing his opposition on the jealousy existing between committees.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Not a particle. I have not mentioned it before. It was brought up by one of the members of the gentleman's committee. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to have this bill re-referred. This is what I am trying to bring out: This is a 100 per cent postal regulation, or at least 99 per cent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RAMSEYER. In a moment. For instance, here is section 3, following section 2. There you have the ridiculous proposal of excluding letters from the railroad companies, express companies, telegraph companies, and telephone companies.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman ought to know that the United States has an absolute monopoly on first-class mail, and there is no way that you can carry letters and postal cards in the States or from State to State except in the mails.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman wants to be fair, I am sure.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Certainly.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The clause that the gentleman read has reference to letters and circulars and pamphlets in addition to post cards. That is the way these stock dealers reach the public, by going through the express companies. They send this literature out by the bundle, and have it distributed by boys throughout the cities, and that is not now in violation of any Federal statute.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Letters and post cards you send only through the mail, and I may further say that 99 per cent of what you undertake to prohibit goes through the mail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. While the postal laws may regulate the sending of first-class matter through the mail, there is no law on the statute books that regulates the transmission of interstate telegrams and telephone messages.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes. How many persons or suckers are induced to buy stock in these fraudulent concerns because of a telephone message or a telegraph message?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not a question of the number of suckers, but a question whether we can protect any of the suckers.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman is getting facetious. The telegraph and the telephone are not used to any considerable extent for the promotion of fraudulent stock sales.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. HAWES. We are told that this law will hurt the crooks. I would like to know how it will harm the honest man.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The crook is absolutely covered under existing law. Under the existing law, as soon as you get the evidence, the crook is on the way to the penitentiary, and the only way you can enforce this proposed law on the crook is first to get the evidence and prosecute him in a Federal court.

Mr. HAWES. The gentleman finds himself in opposition to 40 States that are opposed to the crooks and which wish Congress to pass this law.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, those State security agents want anything passed by Congress that will tend to dignify their positions. They want to be able to go to their State legislatures and say that they went down to Congress and got something through. Of course, that will justify an additional appropriation for them by the legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will devote some of his time to telling this House how it will hurt the honest man, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am after the crook. We do not need any law for the honest man. There is another matter that I want to call to your attention, and that is about the tremendous amount of consideration that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has given to this bill and the outside support for this bill. That committee is composed of able men, and of course anything that is reported out by them is entitled to respectful consideration. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] stated that this had the approval of the Post Office Department. He made that statement on the floor two years ago, and I got up on the floor and challenged it outright, and the inference now is that it has the approval of the Department of Justice also. I challenge that statement. There was no one from the Post Office Department before the committee, so far as the hearings show. There was no one from the Attorney General's office before the committee, at least the hearings do not show that. There was no one from the Treasury Department before the committee to pass upon the question of these securities, whether those excluded were properly excluded from the operation of the proposed law, and whether others could be properly excluded. The Postmaster General, to whom this bill was submitted, on January 4, 1923, addressed this letter to the chairman of the committee:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1923.

Hon. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WINSLOW: In reply to your communication of the 18th ultimo, submitting a copy of H. R. 4, being a bill to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies in the traffic of certain securities, I have the honor to advise you that I have no views to communicate thereon or report to make other than to suggest that the provisions making it unlawful to use the mails in the manner therein indicated would be enforced by the Department of Justice and that doubtless you might desire to hear from that department on the subject.

Very truly yours,

HARRY S. NEW, Postmaster General.

And then the committee got a communication from the Department of Justice, and this is what that department had to say:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., December 29, 1923.

Hon. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The department is in receipt of your communication of the 18th instant, transmitting for such views as the department may care to express a copy of H. R. 4, regulating the sale of securities in interstate commerce through the use of the United States mails.

The department's only suggestion has reference to section 11 of the act, which imposes certain duties upon the Attorney General. It is not believed that compliance by this department with that section will in any wise aid with the enforcement of the act. Moreover, to collect, compile, and distribute the data therein required would entail considerable labor and the incurring of expense. When cases of an alleged violation of the act arise, it would be necessary to conduct investigations, and no difficulty will be experienced in ascertaining at that time the particular law of the State involved. It is, therefore, believed that this section of the act should be eliminated.

Respectfully,

MABEL WALKER WILLEBRANDT,
Assistant Attorney General
(For the Attorney General).

That is all that the Department of Justice says. If there is anybody demanding this legislation, it is not anybody in the departments of the Government, either in this administration or in the last administration. This whole scheme is a beautiful dream. I compliment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] upon his wonderful imaginative powers. A lot of things in theory work all right, but in practice this project is bound to create confusion in the mail service. It will not encourage honesty and discourage dishonesty. As has been ably stated here, if any stock company wants to be effective in its sales it simply has either to refer to the section of the Federal code where they are exempted, or go to those innocent fellows down in St. Louis and say, "Here we have submitted our plan to the securities commission of Missouri, and they say it is all right." That is a certificate of its validity. A most effective talking point to make easy money.

It is just like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has stated about that Dolling Co. Their stock was on the stock exchange. They got a permit from the securities commission of Indiana, and yet it turned out to be one of the most fraudulent schemes that has ever been perpetrated upon the public. And I am informed that two of the men of that company have been convicted under section 215 of the Criminal Code. I am satisfied that anything that is in this bill will not aid in bringing about convictions under section 215; but, as I pointed out before, I believe it will hinder convictions under that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to speak upon this measure, but there has been so much misapprehension, as I view it, evidenced concerning this bill that I am impelled to speak briefly, particularly in view of some things which have just been stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Now, what does this bill attempt to reach? It does not attempt to reach fraud as such. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] has referred to the fraud statute. To be sure we have a statute against fraud, but that is not the purpose of this bill. The fraud statute will not be affected in any way by this bill. If there is evidence of fraud and if it can be shown that a man commits fraud in the sale of these securities he will be liable under the fraud statute, just the same should this bill become a law as he is now.

But here is the situation: Forty-one States of this Union have seen fit to throw about their citizens additional safeguards. That does not mean that a security which is listed with a State is thereby guaranteed as to its validity. Not at all. The blue-sky statutes of the States are not intended or expected to prevent people in all cases from being imposed upon, but the States, 41 of them, have simply said, "We will compel compliance with certain conditions before we will permit the sale of securities within our States, and to that extent we will afford protection to the citizens of our States. We will compel the people who are offering these securities for sale to come in and make a showing before State authorities as to their assets, as to their method of doing business, and all of those other things which are required before a security can be listed for sale." Now, then, anyone who attempts to offer for sale within that State a security which is not permitted to be sold because it has not been listed commits an offense.

It is not a question of fraud at all; it is a question of whether he offers for sale in that State a security which has not been listed and which has not met the requirements of the State.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose Kansas refuses to permit certain securities to be listed and every other State does the same thing; yet those securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange. In that event they can come right back into Kansas and you can not stop them?

Mr. HOCH. Now, listen; here is the situation with reference to that: At the present time there is no limitation whatever. Does the gentleman deny that the securities which are listed upon those exchanges can now be sold in the State of Kansas or anywhere else?

Mr. BLANTON. What is the necessity for section (f)? I think it should be stricken out.

Mr. HOCH. Wait just a moment and I will get to that. What do we propose to do? We simply propose to do this: That people living outside the State of Kansas, to follow the illustration, shall not be permitted to do something which the people within the State of Kansas are not permitted to do. It is true we do not extend that to all transactions that are interstate in character, because, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has said, it was realized that there had to be some compromise, and yet there are some gentlemen who are objecting to this bill on the ground that it does not go far enough and there are other gentlemen objecting on the ground that it goes too far. To the extent that we impose any restriction on the sales of securities and thus protect the people, to that extent we go beyond anything that exists in the statutes to-day. Therefore, what reason can anyone who wants any restrictions have for objecting to this bill when it at least imposes additional restrictions over any which exist to-day? That is the heart of that proposition.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Section (f) exempts certain securities which are listed on certain stock exchanges. Is it not true that in nearly all the blue sky laws of the various States similar provisions are found, and that stocks which are listed on certain accredited stock exchanges are excepted from the provisions of those very blue sky laws?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOCH. It has been suggested that the listing of stocks upon these stock exchanges would permit the sellers of these securities to go in, regardless of the State law. Not at all; and nothing of that kind is proposed. As far as sales within the State are concerned, they would have to comply with the State law if it were a listed stock, just as much as they have to comply with it now.

Here is the reason for that exception in paragraph (f): Each one of the States which has a blue sky law requires that certain conditions must be met before a stock can be offered for sale. These exchanges have similar conditions; and we were reliably informed by men who are in sympathy with this legislation that these stock exchanges have conditions which are just as stringent as the conditions imposed by any State in this Union.

That does not mean that fraudulent stocks may not get listed upon those exchanges. Not at all. There will be stocks listed in the State of Kansas and other States which get by in spite of those provisions. But if the conditions upon those stock exchanges are just as stringent as those provided in any State, then what reason would there be for saying we are going to require them to comply with the conditions in the States before we permit them to use interstate agencies?

Mr. LEAVITT and Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. HOCH. I yield first to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. LEAVITT. Do the "blue sky laws" in all the States make the exception in favor of stocks listed on these stock exchanges?

Mr. HOCH. I could not tell you whether all of them do or not. I think not all of them, but perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] can give you definite information.

Mr. LEAVITT. If that is not the case, will not this allow the sale of stocks listed on stock exchanges in the States that do not have that provision in their laws?

Mr. HOCH. This does not set aside any State law at all. The State law must be complied with, if this bill becomes a law, just as much as before. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. I was just wondering if the stock exchanges do have rules that are just as rigid as any of the laws that have been enacted by the States; and if that is true, why would it be any trouble for them to comply with those State laws?

Mr. HOCH. It would not be.

Mr. JONES. Then why exempt them?

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman from Illinois gave the reason. There is a vast amount of outstanding stocks in the hands of purchasers where the companies have no interest in complying with the laws at all.

Mr. COLTON. Is it not a fact that new stocks listed in the future on these exchanges in cities having over 500,000 people will also be exempted?

Mr. HOCH. I think that would be true; but the gentleman is now arguing that the law does not go far enough, when the gentleman and other Members from States where many of these mining companies have imposed upon the people of this country are arguing that this law goes too far, and I think that the gentleman and his fellow Members who are opposed to this measure ought to at least come to a common basis on which to oppose the measure.

Mr. COLTON. Is it not a fact that there are just as stringent regulations in cities having less than 500,000 as there are in cities having more than that population?

Mr. HOCH. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. COLTON. And is not this a discrimination?

Mr. HOCH. Let me answer the question. If it were possible to state briefly in the law an exception that would take in all exchanges that ought to be taken in, I would be in favor of that; but when you look at it as a practical proposition, the committee found it was practically impossible to cover in all of the exchanges, and so we said that in order to go reasonably far in this law we would take the exchanges where it is known that the conditions are at least as stringent as those imposed by the State.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not a fact that this exception in paragraph (f) complies with the statutes of those States that have such laws and at the same time does no harm to any State that does not have them?

Mr. HOCH. Exactly so.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that hereafter, if any State should impose such conditions, it would protect that State just as it now protects those States that now have them.

Mr. HOCH. To be sure; and the fact that the stock is listed upon one of these exchanges is no guaranty at all that one may not be imposed upon by the purchase of such securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. One further question. If this exemption is not put in, would it not be possible to prohibit the transfer of legitimate stock that is owned privately, which has not been bought or sold upon the exchange, but whose stock is listed on the exchange, unless the company made some sort of requirement or provision that would enable them to shift such stock from one private individual to another?

Mr. HOCH. Yes; that is the principal necessity for putting in some provision of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman have one more minute in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended one additional minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have sat here throughout this entire debate. Can the gentleman name one Member who has spoken here who has contended that this bill goes too far? I have not heard any such statement. They are all contending it does not go far enough.

Mr. HOCH. Oh, no. Several gentlemen—and I have the highest respect for them—

Mr. BLANTON. What Member has claimed it goes too far?

Mr. HOCH. Several gentlemen. The gentleman from Utah argued that.

Mr. BLANTON. They are contending that you are exempting people that ought not to be exempted, and that the bill does not go far enough.

Mr. HOCH. Let me answer the question the gentleman asked. I do not say this in criticism, but gentlemen have plainly argued against the whole bill. They have contended that this would prevent the development of their States by preventing concerns that wish to develop their States from offering their stock for sale throughout the country. I say it will not, because all they will have to do is to comply with the laws of the sovereign States of this Union in order to sell their stock. And that they should be compelled to do.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, we will have to proceed with this bill. The gentleman can talk on some other section, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. McKEOWN. I object to that because this is the section I want to discuss.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman want to do?

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to discuss this very section.

Mr. DENISON. Then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I will show you gentlemen what this section does. You say it had a lot of consideration. I will show you exactly what it does. It is admitted there are seven States in the Union that have no laws making it unlawful to sell these securities in those States, and then you turn around here and let those States be made the victims of all the crooks in the other States. That is exactly what you do. You say it is unlawful to sell these securities in any State where it is unlawful to sell them under

State law, and then you say there are only 41 States in the Union that have blue-sky laws and you are then going to turn around and turn all the crooks loose on the seven States that have no laws to prevent that.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. If the people of those States do not want to protect their citizens from that class of fraud, then why should the Federal Government go in and do that?

Mr. McKEOWN. Why turn loose all the crooks on them and keep them out of all the other States?

Mr. DENISON. That is up to the people of those States. If they pass a blue-sky law then this bill will help them.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman is going a long way when he is undertaking to force blue-sky laws on a State like New York, that has no blue-sky law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman think that the greater proportion of these crooks are already there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman that the attorney general of New York is prosecuting more fake oil schemes coming from the West than there are being prosecuted in any State of the Union.

Mr. McKEOWN. I hope he does prosecute them and I hope he gets the whole lot, in which he will find some of his own citizens.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill does not take away from the people of those seven States any protection they now have, nor does it turn loose these crooks upon them in any different sense or in any greater degree than they are now turned loose upon them by their full consent.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand; but this just makes it unlawful to sell in some States and makes it lawful to sell in others. In those States that have no protection of their own. That is exactly what it does. It goes out and says that it is unlawful to sell such stock in the State of Oklahoma, because Oklahoma has one of the most stringent blue-sky laws in the Union, but up here in another State, where it is not against the law, you are going to turn loose all of the crooks in the United States and just say, "Go to it now and skin them." That is just exactly what it does. [Laughter.] There is no defense to that provision. Why do you not make it unlawful to sell them in any State, no matter whether it is lawful or unlawful to sell them in those States?

Mr. DENISON. This bill will prevent the crooks in other States from selling securities in Oklahoma contrary to the law of the gentleman's State.

Mr. McKEOWN. Oklahoma has a law to prevent them from selling blue-sky stuff, but here is another State over here that has no law, and you are going to turn the crooks loose that can not sell in Oklahoma and tell them to go to the other States and use the mail all they want to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transmitted, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, telegraph company, telephone company, or other agency of interstate commerce, any letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet intended (1) to tender for sale, directly or indirectly, any security or securities; or intended (2) to solicit subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities; or intended (3) to procure advertisement for sale of such security or securities in a newspaper or other publication; when in either case such letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet is addressed, sent, directed, or consigned to any person at any place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale to such person, or solicit from such person subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 14, after the word "securities," insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful, after the passage of this act, for any person, at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States, to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transmitted, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, telegraph company, telephone company, or other agency of interstate commerce, any letter, message, postal card, circular, or communication concerning the purchase or sale of stock on margin or concerning or relative to the purchase, sale, or speculation of stock in cases where there is to be no actual physical delivery of the stock so purchased or sold."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that that it is not germane. We are not dealing with that subject in this bill. That goes into a question entirely foreign to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to prevent the use of the United States mail and other agencies of interstate commerce in transporting, promoting, or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof. It is forbidden in my State and in a great many States of the Union to speculate or gamble in stocks where there is no delivery of the stock, which is commonly known as buying on a margin. We prohibit in this bill the communication of any information concerning any fraudulent stock, because the sale of such stock is prohibited in a particular State. We prohibit the mailing of any stock into any such States. Therefore it is quite within the purview of this bill to prohibit the sending of any communication or any message concerning a speculation in stock which is unlawful in any State, and I submit my amendment is quite germane.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is in doubt, I would like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to prevent one of the very things that this amendment seeks to prohibit. It is clearly germane to the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to prevent people from being defrauded through sales of worthless securities. This amendment pertains to securities that are sold in fraud, in that they are never expected to be delivered after they are sold—a purely gambling transaction. All gambling transactions are fraudulent in their nature. This pertains to gambling transactions pure and simple, and I think it is clearly germane.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Chair that this bill is for the purpose of regulating the sale of securities, and it is not to prohibit the sale of securities.

Mr. BLANTON. It prohibits lots of sales.

Mr. BARKLEY. I might add this suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is to regulate the transportation of securities from one State to another where those securities are prohibited from being sold in the State. This amendment seeks to regulate stock exchanges throughout the country. The effect of it is to do that. It is therefore not germane to a bill to regulate the transportation of securities already issued.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How about the bucket shops?

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear to the Chair that the bill provides for the regulation of transportation of securities from one State to another, and seeks to prohibit the transportation of those securities where the State itself into which they are proposed to be transported has prohibitory laws in respect to the securities. The amendment of the gentleman from New York seeks to prohibit not only the transmission through the mail but the transmission by sound as well, as, for instance, messages by radio.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have taken that from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It seeks also to prohibit the sale of any stocks if those stocks are sought to be sold on a margin, even though the States in which they are proposed to be sold have laws which will permit them to be sold. The Chair can not conceive of the germaneness of such an amendment to the bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident from some of the things said that the position of those of us who are questioning some of the provisions of this bill is not understood. My objection to the inclusion of section (f), page 5, paragraph 4, is based on the fact that it is discriminatory against the sort of securities that are issued in the western country. I have looked over the membership of this committee and I find that there is not on it one member from a public-land State which is in the stages of development through which such States as Michigan passed 30 or 40 years ago. I was born in Michigan myself, although I have lived in the West for a considerable period of time, and I know what the situation was in Michigan quite a while ago, and the same situation exists in the Western States now that existed there perhaps 30 years ago. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that my objection to section (f) is based on its being a discriminatory proposition, so far as the development of the resources of the Western States—the public-land States—is concerned. Personally I want to be understood as being in favor of a stringent national blue sky law; but I do not want any provision in the law which will allow any group of men, with no supervision whatever, of 15 great cities, simply because they each contain half a million people, which is almost the total population of my State, to be able to say that securities upon which they pass favorably shall be allowed to go through the mails into all the States, while legitimate securities originating in States which are in the development stage shall not have the same privilege if they conform to the State's blue sky law.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will.

Mr. DENISON. There is a very good blue sky law in the gentleman's State.

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENISON. The official who is responsible for the administration of the law approved this bill and wants it passed. He thinks it will be a good thing for the people of the gentleman's State.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not doubt that, but the fact remains just the same that this paragraph (f) was written in without his consideration in that connection. The statement has been made here by a member of this committee that this is a compromise measure, and some of these things not asked for by the commissioners of the different States were written into it because demanded by other interests. From the angle of the commissioner of the blue sky laws in the State of Montana, there is in this bill language which I am sure he did not know of, as it has been explained on the floor of this House this afternoon. Now, no State can pass a blue sky law that will in any way affect the working of the postal laws of the United States. I do not believe for a minute the fact that a security is not satisfactory to a commissioner of the blue sky law in any State will prevent the United States mail bringing those securities into that State. The State itself can not legislate out of the State borders anything in the mails of the United States. I want to strike out this paragraph (f) and make it so that no securities can come in by mail into the State of Montana and these other States that are now in the development stage at any advantage over the securities which originate within those States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. I will ask for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Does the gentleman consider subsection (f) narrows or broadens the scope of the law?

Mr. LEAVITT. I think it narrows the scope of the law and makes it possible for securities—I may not understand the form of the gentleman's question, but I believe it throws the door much wider than it should be and puts securities, because approved by a great stock exchange, into unfair competition with securities that originate in the States now in a less advanced state of development.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Then the gentleman considers it really broadens the scope of the law?

Mr. LEAVITT. Which law?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. This law. It would tend to restrict the market for securities. That is the gentleman's point of view, is it not?

Mr. LEAVITT. No; I do not look at it in that way at all.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. I refer to the securities in Montana.

Mr. LEAVITT. Securities originating in Montana are for the development of new resources. I want to say that some of these securities now on the New York Stock Exchange from the State of Montana were a few years ago in such a state that you would herein bar them from being considered in the different States, but they have now become so strong that they can be sold anywhere in the United States and are approved by these great stock exchanges, while other securities of concerns in the same position as these securities were in 25 years ago would now be choked to death by this provision in this bill, simply because they might be disapproved by men perhaps interested in competing securities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LA GUARDIA: Page 3, line 14, after the word "securities," add: "That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transmitted, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, telegraph company, telephone company, or other agency of interstate commerce, any letter, message, postal card, or circular concerning the purchase or sale of stock on margin, or the sale, purchase, speculation, or gamble of stocks where there is to be no actual physical delivery of such stock, to any person at any place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale to such person stocks on margin or stock that is not to be delivered."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is the same sort of proposition the gentleman has just offered. This bill does not attempt to regulate stock exchanges or bucket shops or anything of that kind. That is not attached to this bill, and this proposition of the gentleman from New York is not germane to the bill.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. And, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. This amendment now offered cures the evil pointed out by the chairman in his previous ruling. The Chair has just ruled that the amendment was not in order because it prohibited the communication of information concerning stocks on sale or on margin to States where it might be unlawful to transact such a deal. The amendment now prohibits the transmission of such information to a State where such transactions would be lawful within the State.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard?

Mr. BEGG. Yes. I want to offer just this observation, Mr. Chairman: This bill seeks to regulate the transmission of securities, not the issue, and it goes on to make it a crime to transport such kinds of securities; that is all, as I maintain, that it does do. It does not set up any machinery or anything of the kind for the prosecution of that crime. It is merely a regulatory measure regarding the transportation that, when violated, makes the violator of the same a criminal.

Now, then, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] offers an amendment which has only to do with transportation, and if the gentleman's amendment is not germane to a general subject when the bill applies to a specific class, then you must overrule the precedent set down in Hinds. I think section 778 in the rules absolutely sustains that contention. If I am correct and accurate in my statement, that the bill only has to do with transportation, I submit that is all there is in the bill.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Section 3, however, deals with the same subject that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] deals with.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is clear that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] goes further than the purpose of the bill. The gentleman's amendment seems to be intended to regulate the conditions of the sale of the stock where the presumption is that the stock will not be delivered. I think it is fair to say that it is violative of the rule of germaneness, and consequently the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

(a) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory or insular possession thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State or political subdivision or agency thereof.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the whole section be read before amendments are offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. There are various subdivisions here with respect to exemptions. Where you want to strike out a specific subdivision like (e) or (f) of the entire section, must you go down to page 11?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. That is an entire section.

Mr. BLANTON. We do not want to be sleeping on our rights. The CHAIRMAN. No. The Chair does not contemplate catching the gentleman asleep. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) Any security issued or guaranteed by any foreign government with which the United States is at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof maintaining diplomatic relations, or by any State, Province, or political subdivision thereof having the power of taxation or assessment.

(c) Any security issued by a national bank or by any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank or national farm-loan association under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act of July 17, 1916, or by the War Finance Corporation, or by any corporation created or acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States: Provided, That such corporation is subject to supervision or regulation by the Government of the United States.

(d) Any security issued or guaranteed either as to principal, interest, or dividend by a corporation owning or operating a railroad or any other public-service utility: Provided, That such corporation is subject to regulation or supervision either as to its rates and charges or as to the issue of its own securities by a public commission, board, or officer of the Government of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or insular possession thereof, or of the District of Columbia, or of the Dominion of Canada or any Province thereof; also equipment trust certificates or equipment notes or bonds based on chattel mortgages, leases, or agreements for conditional sale of cars, motive power, or other rolling stock mortgaged, leased, or sold to or furnished for the use of or upon a railroad or other public-service utility corporation, or equipment trust certificates, or equipment notes or bonds where the ownership or title of such equipment is pledged or retained in accordance with the provisions of the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of the Dominion of Canada, to secure the payment of such equipment trust certificates, bonds, or notes; also bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness issued by a holding corporation and secured by collateral consisting of any securities hereinabove in this clause 4 described: Provided, That the collateral securities equal in par value at least 125 per cent of the par value of the bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness so secured. If any portion of the collateral securities consists of stock of no par value, then for the purpose of this subdivision such stock shall be deemed to have a par value equal to the price at which such stock was authorized to be issued by the public commission, board, or officer having supervision of the issue of such stock.

(e) Any security issued by a corporation organized exclusively for educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes, and not for pecuniary profit.

(f) Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population according to the last preceding United States census and providing facilities for the use of its members in the purchase and sale of securities listed by such exchange, and securities senior thereto or evidences of indebtedness guaranteed by companies the common capital stock of which is so listed: Provided, That actual transactions on such organized exchange have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years in the purchase and sale of United States bonds or other bonds of any of the classes exempted herein from the provisions of this act: And provided further, That such stock exchange requires financial statements to be submitted at the time of such listing and annually thereafter.

(g) Any security issued by a State bank, trust company, or savings institution incorporated under the laws of and subject to the examination, supervision, and control of any State or of the United States or of any insular possession thereof.

(h) Any bonds or notes secured by a first mortgage upon agricultural lands used and valuable principally for agricultural purposes (not including oil, gas, or mining property or leases), or upon city or village real estate or leaseholds situated in any State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia or in the Dominion of Canada, as follows:

(1) When the entire mortgage, together with all of the bonds or notes secured thereby, is sold or offered for sale to a single purchaser or at a single sale.

(2) When the mortgage is a first mortgage upon such agricultural lands, used and valuable principally for agricultural purposes, and when the aggregate face value of such bonds or notes, not including interest notes or coupons, secured thereby does not exceed 75 per cent of the then fair market value of said lands plus 50 per cent of the insured value of any improvements thereon.

(3) When the mortgage is a first mortgage upon city or village real estate or leaseholds, and when the aggregate face value of such bonds or notes, not including interest notes or coupons, secured by such real estate or leaseholds does not exceed 75 per cent of the then fair market value of said mortgaged real estate or leaseholds, respectively, including any improvements appurtenant thereto, and when said mortgaged property is used principally to produce through rental a net annual income, after deducting operating expenses and taxes, or has a fair rental value after deducting operating expenses and taxes, at least equal to the annual interest plus not less than 3 per cent of the principal of said mortgage indebtedness.

(4) When the mortgage is a first mortgage upon city or village real estate or leaseholds upon which real estate or leaseholds a building or buildings is or are about in good faith forthwith to be erected according to the expressed terms of the mortgage, and when reasonably adequate provision has been made for financing the full completion of said building free and clear of any lien superior to said mortgage, and when the aggregate face value of the bonds or notes, not including interest notes or coupons, secured by such first mortgage does not exceed 75 per cent of the fair market value of such mortgaged property, including the building or buildings to be erected thereon as aforesaid, and when said mortgaged property is to be used principally to produce through rental a net annual income, after deducting operating expenses and taxes, or will have a fair rental value after deducting operating expenses and taxes, at least equal to the annual interest plus not less than 3 per cent of the principal of said mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That all advertisements, circulars, and letters advertising the sale of said bonds or notes and all receipts of payments therefor shall bear in bold type upon the face thereof a legend stating that said bonds or notes are construction bonds or notes, and all other written or printed offerings of said bonds or notes shall contain a statement to the same effect.

The provisions of this subdivision (h) shall not apply in the case of bonds or notes secured wholly or partly by first mortgage on leaseholds unless all advertisements, circulars, and letters advertising the sale of said bonds or notes and all receipts of payments therefor, and said bonds and notes shall bear in bold type upon the face thereof a legend stating that said bonds or notes are secured wholly or partly by mortgage on a leasehold, as the case may be, and all other written or printed offerings of said bonds or notes shall contain a statement to the same effect.

When used in this subdivision (h) the term "mortgage" shall be deemed to include a deed of trust to secure a debt.

(i) Negotiable promissory notes or commercial paper: Provided, That such issue of notes or commercial paper mature in not more than 12 months from date of issue and shall be issued within 3 months after the date of sale.

(j) Securities issued by a corporation, firm, trust, partnership, or association owning a property, business, or industry which has been in continuous operation not less than 5 years, and which has shown during a period of not less than 3 years nor more than 10 years prior to the close of its last fiscal year preceding the offering of such securities, average annual net earnings, after deducting all prior charges, including the charges upon prior securities not to be retired out of the proceeds of sale, as follows:

(1) In the case of interest-bearing securities not less than one and one-half times the annual interest charge thereon and upon all other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of equal rank.

(2) In the case of preferred stock, not less than one and one-half times the annual dividend on such preferred stock, and on all other outstanding stock of equal rank.

(3) In the case of common stock, not less than 6 per cent upon all outstanding common stock of equal rank, together with the amount of common stock then offered for sale by the issuer, reckoned upon the price at which such stock is then offered for sale or sold: Provided, That the assets of such corporation, firm, trust, partnership, or association (not including patents, copyrights, secret processes, and formulas, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like intangible property) as of date of the close of its last fiscal year preceding the offering of such securities, together with the proceeds of the sale of such securities accruing to the issuer, shall equal or exceed—

(a) In the case of evidences of indebtedness, 125 per cent of the par value of such evidences of indebtedness, and all other obligations of equal or prior rank outstanding and not to be retired out of the proceeds of the sale of such securities.

(b) In the case of preferred stock, 125 per cent of the par value of the aggregate amount of such preferred stock and of all other outstanding preferred stock of equal rank, after the deduction from such assets of all indebtedness which will be existing and all stock of senior rank which will be outstanding after the application of the proceeds of the preferred stock offered for sale.

mon stock offered for sale: Provided, That in any proceeding, civil or criminal, arising under this act involving any sale or offer for sale, subscription, or delivery of any security hereinabove in this subdivision (f) described (made by any person other than the issuer of such securities), copies of the public financial statements of the corporation, firm, trust, partnership, or association issuing such securities, certified as being true copies thereof by any officer of such corporation, or by an executive of such trust or association, or by a member of such firm or partnership, shall be admissible in evidence in any court and shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the contents thereof.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment to correct the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 5, line 8, strike out the words "clause 4" and insert in lieu thereof the words "subdivision (b)."

Mr. DENISON. That was a stenographic mistake, and the amendment is simply offered to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out paragraph (f), on pages 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEAVITT: Page 5, beginning with line 20, strike out all of subsection (f).

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if I properly understand section (f), it means that the board of control of the stock exchanges of something like 15 or 16 of the large cities can pass upon and approve securities, and that, having done so, they can then be sent through the United States mail into any of the States of the Union, regardless of the "blue sky" laws in those States, since the States can not in any way control, through any laws that they can pass, the United States mails.

It has been said that this applies only to securities now outstanding or which will be outstanding at the time of the passage of this bill. I can not read that into this section. It says:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

(f) Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population according to the last preceding United States census. . . .

Now, as I said a few moments ago, this takes out of the provisions and restrictions of this law any security that is passed on by one of the boards of trade of a great city of half a million population or over, regardless of what action has been taken in the different States, because the law very plainly says that such securities shall not come under the provisions of this act. Those are the words at the beginning of section 4.

Now, my objection to that, as already stated, is that it throws those securities into unfair competition with other securities that have been issued in States in early stages of development. I move to strike out this paragraph, in order that all securities may be put on exactly the same footing, and that no discrimination shall be exercised toward securities sent out to the advantage of those in control of the stock exchanges and who are operating these stock exchanges for their own profit.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman think that because there may be 500,000 people in a city that they are more honest than the people in a smaller city?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not believe that for a moment. I believe that if any such provision as this is made, it should apply to any recognized stock exchange that has been in existence for the period of time set forth in the bill, regardless of the population of the city.

Now, gentlemen, I am speaking regarding this from the angle of those States that are in the process of development; that there should not be undue discrimination against the securities of companies which are formed in order to develop the resources of the great Western States in favor of securities which are already in the hands of speculators in the eastern cities. I say that simply because it is a fact that the development of the Western States depends upon the development of the resources within the States, and those companies, formed for the development of these resources, must of necessity toddle before they can walk, and they should not be choked out, as I said in my previous talk, by any such provision as this in the bill.

I am for a blue sky law which treats all alike and makes all securities pass the same test exactly. Anything else is discriminatory and unfair. No group of men interested in speculation in stocks and securities should have the power to override the blue sky laws of any State through the use of the United States mails. Therefore this paragraph giving them that power without regulation should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to say this: There is not a provision in this bill which has had more careful and painstaking consideration than this provision. Those who are interested in this legislation worked for months in an effort to solve this problem and try to stop or prevent the sale of fraudulent securities and yet not interfere with legitimate business.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I am sorry I can not yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why did not the gentleman put a provision in the bill which would permit any honest exchange to have the same rights?

Mr. DENISON. I am sorry I can not yield further to the gentleman. I would like to proceed for five minutes and explain this provision, because I know most of the Members of the House want to solve this problem if we can. I believe all the Members want to accomplish the purpose intended by this bill.

Now, let me say that the representatives of the different States which have blue sky laws came before the committee and discussed this question. In most of the State laws securities which are outstanding and are fully listed on these stock exchanges are exempted, so that this bill would not apply to those States at all in that particular. From those States which have not amended their laws recently, and which do not have an exemption of that kind, officials came before the committee and said to the committee that if such securities as are fully listed on that class of stock exchanges were brought before their commissions they would permit them to be sold in their States; and so they stated they were perfectly willing to have the Federal law contain such an exemption. Now, there you are. The administrative representatives of these various States, not only those that have a similar exemption in their State laws but those that do not, came to the committee and said they thought the Federal law should contain that kind of an exemption.

Let me call your attention to this fact: This exemption does not apply to any new issues of stock. Do not forget that. It applies only to such stocks as are already issued and outstanding at the time they are sold.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman give the language which says that?

Mr. DENISON. I will give it right here, beginning with line 20:

Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange.

Mr. LEAVITT. When is the time of the sale?

Mr. DENISON. Well, whenever it is sold.

Mr. LEAVITT. It does not say that. It says it must be outstanding at the time of sale, but it does not say it must be outstanding at the time of the passage of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that. It is not in the bill in that way.

Mr. LEAVITT. And that is what we are objecting to.

Mr. DENISON. I do not get the gentleman's point.

Mr. LEAVITT. My point is this: That the bill itself does not say that this limits this exemption to securities which are now outstanding or which will be outstanding at the time of the passage of the bill, but to securities which are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange—when? At the time of the sale thereof.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly; and that is what I have been saying.

Mr. BARKLEY. You can not make the passage of this bill the dead line beyond which you can or can not do this thing.

Mr. LEAVITT. Then in the future they can approve stock which will then be sent out into the States?

Mr. DENISON. It means this: The passage of the bill is not going to be the dividing line, but it means that whenever any security is undertaken to be sold through the agencies of interstate commerce, and if at the time of that sale that security has been issued, is outstanding and is fully listed upon any of the stock exchanges described, then it is exempt from the provisions of the act.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does that mean when it is offered for sale, and does it mean that a stock can not be offered for sale until regularly listed?

Mr. DENISON. No; it means exactly what it says. If it is issued and outstanding—and that means in the hands of the public—and is listed on any of the stock exchanges described then it is exempt from the provisions of this bill. So this exemption, gentlemen of the committee, does not apply to new issues of stock at all. And we do not want the exemption to be broad enough to include any stock exchanges that are primary markets; exchanges that can be used for stock promotions. It only applies to those securities which have been sold and are out of the hands of the issuing company and are outstanding in the hands of the public, and we must exempt that class of securities. If we do not do that, gentlemen of the committee, we might as well kill this bill, because there are outstanding securities in almost unlimited amounts that are perfectly valid and we can not close the avenues of interstate commerce to the transmission of such securities from one State to another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much discussion of this subsection (f) that I would like to supplement what the gentleman from Illinois has said by reading a part of the statement of Mr. Garfield S. Canright, director of the securities division of the railroad commission of the State of Wisconsin and president of the National Association of Security Commissioners, before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate in the last Congress. After being questioned by different Senators and making quite a lengthy statement on this particular subject—page 71 of the hearings—he says:

Naturally, we who are charged with the enforcement of State laws would like to see just as sweeping a bill as it is practicable to have, because then there would be no loopholes in the situation. But frankly, gentlemen, considering this from my standpoint as a servant of one of the States, I could not come before you honestly and ask you to exclude from the States securities with regard to which there could be no possible question.

And again, at another place, he says:

If you will look over the laws of the States governing securities, you will see that they are nearly all drafted on the same idea. They nearly all try to do the very thing you are talking about, in the first instance, and then they found that what they had to do was to prohibit all securities and then follow that prohibition by exemptions. So that in passing this law in this form you will be doing just exactly what the State legislatures themselves have been forced to do in attempting to cover this class of securities, the sale of which is to be regulated.

He sums up the difficulties of the situation, as the members of this committee are beginning to realize them, in this short statement:

We have done the best we could, and I think you will find, as you study the proposition, that we have pretty fairly covered the situation by exempting high-grade securities, in connection with which there is little possibility of fraud, and as to which the States have no objection; in fact, the sale of which they welcome; and also those securities which business necessity requires shall be exempted and in connection with which there is no great probability of fraud.

He then discusses the question of why the State laws and why this bill selects certain well-established stock exchanges and allows the securities listed upon those stock exchanges to be traded in without getting a license from the different State security commissions.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. As I understand it, if the stock is a sound stock, it may be mailed or transported from one State to another regardless of whether it is listed or not. Assuming a stock is listed under misrepresentation and under a fraudulent statement, would not this provision of the section protect that stock, notwithstanding the fact that it is a fraudulent stock?

Mr. MAPES. It is possible, of course, that a case of that kind might arise, but it is impossible to pass any workable law that will cover all possible contingencies. To do so would place an undue restriction on legitimate business. Those who have charge of the enforcement of these laws in the different States thought it would be unwise to attempt to do so in this bill.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The real evil that it is sought to remedy here is the sale of promoters' stocks. Is it not?

Mr. MAPES. That is one of the things the bill attempts to remedy.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. In other words, the sale of something which is still in the promotion stage, and not the sale of stock of companies that have been in existence and have established themselves in business, and when you refer here to outstanding stock you are referring to stock that has been distributed among stockholders and represents stock in a going business. And that is not the sort of sale which constitutes the evil which this bill is attempting to prevent.

Mr. MAPES. Not at all.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. It is the sale of promotional stock that creates the evil.

Mr. MAPES. In most cases. This bill does not propose to recommend or to tell anyone whether or not to buy any given stock.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer a substitute for the amendment. On page 5, line 23, strike out "500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "50,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a substitute for the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. LEAVITT: On page 5, line 23, strike out the figures "500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "50,000,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this substitute merely to get the floor, but my substitute or the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], either one, would do the work that ought to be done, and that is to stop these exemptions that are proposed in subdivision (f) in this bill. We might as well understand what we are doing when we come to vote on this matter, without any camouflage about it. It has been contended here that even though they get their stock listed on one of these exchanges they can not send them into your State by mail if your State prohibits it. Now let us see whether that is so or not. That is not so.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I have but five minutes and the gentleman can answer me in his own time. I want to show you what the bill provides. It is not so written in this bill.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just one minute. I did not disturb the gentleman. I want my colleagues to understand subsection (f).

Mr. DENISON. I can relieve the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. On page 3, section 4, I want you to read this language, "that the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities."

Then notice the exemptions that follow which are contained in this bill. None of the provisions of the bill applies to the following exemptions that are set forth here. One of the exemptions is (f) on page 5, beginning with line 20. Read it. I have not the time to read it, but it provides that when once listed on one of these exchanges, when it is fully issued, and when it is outstanding they can ship the stock anywhere by mail because it is excepted from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. Please excuse me now. I want to get this idea before my colleagues. We ought to understand this subsection (f) before we vote on it. We ought not to vote for this bill under a misapprehension. Under subsection (f)—and I am not afraid of being contradicted by any lawyer in this House—every State in this Union could deny circulation to securities, and yet if you could go to New York and get those securities listed, if they were outstanding, if they were fully issued, they could be shipped by mail or expressed to every State in the Union under the provisions of this bill. That is what the bill says. That may not be the opinion of the committee, but that is what the bill says.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not.

Mr. MAPES. Nobody has attempted to deny that statement of the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Then at last we understand each other. Now that we understand each other, and we vote for this subsection (f), we are doing it with our eyes open, and we are responsible to our constituents for it.

Let me show you what I can do under this subsection (f). I can organize the most fraudulent oil company you ever heard of. I can capitalize it for $5,000,000. I need not have a thing of value behind it. I can be denied circulation in every

State of the Union, and yet if I am slick enough, if I have enough standing with the powers that be on Wall Street, I can go to New York and, if I can get by their committee, have my stock listed. It is outstanding. I have had so many directors take so much of it and I have sold so much of it to the widows that were eloquently defended here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], author of this bill. It is outstanding, it is fully issued, it is listed. The bill does not provide "when sold"; it says under subsection (f) "when offered for sale." I can get it listed on Wall Street, and I can send advertisements of that worthless stock into every State in the Union that had denied me circulation, and impose upon the helpless public. Gentlemen, we do not want to do that. We do not want to vote for this subsection (f). We ought to take it out of the bill. We must support the amendment to strike it out. We are all in favor of a blue sky law. I have not heard of any Member contending that this law goes too far. Every Member that I have heard, who has spoken here, says that it does not go far enough. I ask the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] if it does not go far enough, why do we not stand up here and make it go far enough? If subsection (f) is improper, why not vote it out? Now is the time to do it. Are we passing the buck to the Senate? Why do we not do our duty? We are the real legislators of the people; we come fresh from them every two years; we do not come here every six years. We have to go back this year and answer to our constituents, and if this law does not go far enough, let us cut out these exemptions in subsection (f) and make it read as we want it to read, for now is the time and the opportunity and the place. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] will prevail, and I will ask to withdraw my pro forma substitute.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the passage of this bill will not take from any purchaser of stocks any protection which the laws of his State now give him, but that apart from the exemption and other features of this bill it is intended to give to the various States a field for the operation of their blue sky laws upon interstate transactions, in which their citizens may become the purchasers of stock. That is all it is.

The blue sky laws of the various States are not drastic but mild. None of them, so far as I know, goes too far. They are properly based upon the principle stated by the member of the Security Commission of the State of Wisconsin as being based upon prohibition with exemptions. It is entirely proper that such laws shall carry all exemptions which are proper and reasonable and which will facilitate business. I think we may trust the people of the various States to pass such laws as suit their ideas along that line.

As stated, the purpose of this bill is to make those laws applicable to interstate transactions. For the reason that those laws carry all the necessary and proper exemptions there exists no necessity whatsoever for any additional exemptions in this bill. To the extent that the blue sky laws of the States exempt certain securities from their operation, they will be exempted after this bill becomes a law. What we are proposing to do by the exemptions carried in this bill is to force them on these people of the States whether they want them or not. We deprive the States of the opportunity to enforce their blue sky laws against stocks and securities of the classes exempted by this bill.

The effect of this bill is to make the blue sky laws of the State applicable to interstate transactions, except in those instances where powerful interests want to force their securities into a State in violation of the principle of its laws and as independent entirely of their jurisdiction. I submit that we ought to allow each State to govern itself. We ought to allow each State to say what kind of securities shall be sold, whether by mail or otherwise, in that State. We ought to give full operation and effect to the laws which a State has passed for the protection of its people. If the States do not want a certain kind of security sold there, they ought to be allowed to say so and to keep them out.

It is a gross injustice to other security holders that we shall say to them, "You shall not sell your securities in a State unless you submit them to the security commissioners of that State and comply with its laws," and then say to the other classes of security owners mentioned in these exemptions, "You may sell your securities in any State you want to without consulting the officials of those States or attempting to comply with their laws."

I submit that every man who is a dealer and wants to sell securities in a State, if he is an honest man, ought to be willing to comply with the laws of that State, and the people of that State ought to be permitted to exclude him from that State if they want to. Yet they can not do this with these exemptions appearing in the bill.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The gentleman would like to strike out the whole section?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There is a bare possibility that one or two of the subsections should be permitted to remain, but certainly this wholesale exemption of all kinds of securities that may be listed by a stock exchange ought to go. A number of other subsections, I think, should be stricken out. In fact, I would be willing to say that even a United States bond ought not to be allowed to be sold to the people of a State, if the owner of it, being a dealer, is not willing to comply with the laws of that State. I would be willing to go that far. That is what it would mean to strike out all the exemptions.

Mr. DENISON. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. I will limit it to this paragraph.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think this is the most crucial section of the bill and gentlemen may require some explanation to clear away some of the cobwebs that seem to have crept into the Chamber this afternoon; and if we limit the debate to five minutes, and I should have the five minutes, you might not get much of an explanation.

Mr. DENISON. I will say 10 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Reserving the right to object—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is not the way he stated it, Mr. Chairman; he said the subsection.

Mr. DENISON. Paragraph (f).

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have three or four questions I would like to have somebody answer and discuss, one of which is in reference to the 500,000 limitation; and I desire to know the reason for fixing it at that number, and if the gentlemen to be recognized are not to discuss this I would like to have some explanation before it is passed over.

Mr. DENISON. I will explain that.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Reserving the right to object, do I get three minutes?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield the gentleman three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rose particularly to address myself to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. He seems to have expressed some objection to most of the subsections, and especially to the sections granting these exemptions. Now, let us see what they really do. First comes section (a):

Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory or insular possession thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State or political subdivision or agency thereof.

Certainly there can not be any legitimate objection to the exemption given to any security issued by the United States or any State or Territory or any political subdivision thereof like county bonds issued by a vote of the people. Certainly they are presumed to be legitimate securities when they are placed upon the market. The same would apply to subsection (b) in reference to foreign securities. Now, national banks are all regulated and controlled by the United States Government and the issue of securities by them is strictly supervised. In reference to (c)— any security issued or guaranteed either as to principal, interest, or dividend by a corporation owning or operating a railroad or any other public service utility.

Now, all securities issued by railroad companies are supervised by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the manner of issue. It is not necessary to pass this law in reference to those securities. (e)— any security issued by a corporation organized exclusively for educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes, and not for pecuniary purpose.

Now we come down to (f):

Securities which at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof are issued, outstanding, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment. It developed in the hearing that what was undertaken was to protect the public against stocks which might be listed by stock exchanges which had not over a long period of years established their reliability, and at first it was thought it would be better to name the stock exchanges that had established a reputation for reliability throughout the country, but on an investigation the prima facie evidence was that there are several of these stock exchanges of a very substantial character; and, recognizing that fact, we thought if we did that hereafter other cities might establish stock exchanges that might later qualify, and if we named them we would have to pass another act in order to admit them. So that the only way by which that could be done was to provide that hereafter automatically other cities might come in under the exemption and qualify as stock exchanges that had existed for 20 years and had established a reputation for reliability; and therefore it would not be necessary to pass another law, but automatically the stock exchanges of such cities which have established through a period of years—as many as 20 years—their reputation for reliability would come under the operation of this law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will it include the curb exchange?

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not include the curb, because that market does not come within the description of having existed 20 years, which has been fixed in the bill as reported.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand that they have recently selected a place of meeting. Would not that bring them under the provision?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it would not bring them under. The fact is that they have a rather pretentious building now, but they have not been in existence for the time provided in the bill so as to admit them.

Mr. JONES. There is still just this question: The gentleman mentions 500,000 as the required population and goes to the length of time. Why not strike out the 500,000 and still have the limitation as to time? What is the reason for that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because the committee felt that it would not be wise to grant these exemptions to all the stock exchanges that might be established throughout the United States. There are a few recognized standard stock exchanges in the country, recognized for many years by business people throughout the country as having established a reputation for reliability and responsibility, and it has fixed regulations in some cases more strict than those fixed by any State. We thought it was not wise to let the bars down to any exchange that might be established in any little city throughout the United States.

Mr. JONES. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that everything the gentleman has discussed will still be in the paragraph.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to explain the amendment I have offered. In making this provision, section (f), to apply only to those securities which have been issued, and which bars out those hereafter to be issued, I am opposed in general to the entire section, because I do not believe that any private organization should have such complete control over the postal laws of the great Government of the United States. I do not believe that a private organization even that investigates stock shall have the power to say that that stock shall be sold only through the medium of the postal laws of this country. We all know that the gambling and the fraud in stocks is not because the stocks have no intrinsic value, but because of the price at which the stocks are sold and the way in which the stocks are juggled. And when you give the stock exchange or anybody else the right to say that the Federal Government approved of it and that their transactions are made with the approval of the Federal Government I do not believe that any such organization should be allowed to have any such control over what shall be passed through the United States mail.

The chairman of the committee says that the provision is intended to affect only those stocks and securities which already have been offered for sale and the sale of which has been closed, but no new issues shall be listed on the exchange.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman mean that this shall apply only to stocks issued prior to the passage of this act?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then you will have set up a standard by which, no matter how legitimate the stock is, it shall not be transmitted.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I understood the gentleman to say that that was the purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. We had no idea except to carry out the purpose. The object is, if the gentleman will permit me to say, that at the time the stock is offered for sale—it may be 50 years at that time—although that stock may not be in existence at the time this law passes, yet at that time it shall be existing and listed on this stock exchange.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. That is different from what I understood the chairman to say.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. Mr. JONES. I have been waiting for some time to have some one explain why you fix 500,000 population as the standard and say that if the exchange is located in a city larger than that it may have all its securities exempted under this law, and if in a town of less than 500,000 none of them can be exempted. If the exchange has been running for 20 years and has established a reputation for honesty and fair dealing—I do not know whether any of them have established that—but if they have I do not see why, if this is to be permanent law, an exchange which deals squarely, according to the gentleman's definition, should not be allowed the same rights after 20 years' service in a town of 300,000 as one which may have located in a larger place. I do not see why it should not have the same privilege as in a city of 500,000.

I doubt whether these exemptions should be made at all, for the reason that, according to the terms of this bill, when they are listed on the exchange it may be a fake mining stock and have all the objections that you try to reach, and yet if it is listed in one of these exchanges located in a city of 500,000 people there is no State in the Union which could make a law providing that it shall not be sold or prohibiting its sale.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JONES. In the first place, I do not see why that section exempting such exchanges from the operation of this law should be in here; but inasmuch as it is, I think I shall offer an amendment to perfect the paragraph. Let us have no favoritism. If you strike out the 500,000 you still leave the limitation that it must have been established 20 years and have a regular meeting place, and it could not claim these privileges unless it be an exchange having all the merits required of any exchange. In other words, your real safeguards lie in the other conditions that you have in the paragraph and not in the geographical location of the exchange.

Mr. DENISON. There are exchanges in this country that have been running more than 20 years and they are known to be nothing more nor less than exchanges for the promotion of certain classes of stocks.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman does not refer to the New York Stock Exchange, does he?

Mr. DENISON. No.

Mr. JONES. It might be said that that is their principal function.

Mr. DENISON. We have to deal with conditions as they are to-day, and if all the provisions are not kept in the bill you might as well not pass the bill, because if you permit certain other exchanges to be exempted beyond those exempted here, you will simply be opening the door and letting all securities go through.

Mr. JONES. I am not in favor of exempting any of them. I am trying to abolish what I conceive to be a discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, may I not have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been allotted by agreement.

Mr. JONES. Can it not be extended by unanimous consent?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What has been done by unanimous consent can be undone by unanimous consent, can it not? My colleague ought to be able to get unanimous consent now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why a body which can do one thing by unanimous consent can not do a subsequent thing by unanimous consent—when it is the same body. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, if unanimous consent is granted in one instance, why can it not go on forever?

Mr. JONES. It can by unanimous consent, but if anybody objects it can not. The gentleman is on guard—standing at the bridge, like Horatius.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think if the gentleman from Texas is going to have an extension of time to urge the elimination of this language there ought to be a further extension of time in order that somebody may have an opportunity to oppose it. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of making a limitation if it can be extended?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that the time for debate on this paragraph be extended 10 minutes?

Mr. WINSLOW. As long as we have entered into this I will not object, but I reserve the right to object hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Texas is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I do not see why a stock, simply because it may be listed on the New York exchange or some other exchange, should be licensed, if it is a fake stock, to be sold in the State of Texas contrary to the laws of that State, or similarly with reference to any other State. I just can not get it through my head, although I have been sitting here for a long time trying to get at the philosophy of this paragraph. I know this committee has tried to do the right thing about this bill; but if these stock exchanges are so reputable and if they have rules which are as strong and rigid as the laws of any State in the Union, then it should be no trouble to them when trying to sell these stocks to comply with the laws of the particular State in which they are trying to consummate the sale.

If, according to the rules of the stock exchange, some fake stock is permitted to be listed on that exchange—it may be oil stock, it may be mining stock, or it may be any other kind of stock; still, if this paragraph remains in the bill, regardless of how great a fake it may be, its promoters may transport it by any of the means mentioned in this bill, or they may use any of the agencies of this Government, and they may convey information into the States in soliciting the sale of that stock, and no State can say "nay." Why license anyone or any organization to do that? Should not the people of any State be permitted to safeguard that State's citizens against those who would defraud?

If the House should take the other horn of the dilemma and say we must make some exceptions, then why should special privileges be extended to a city of 500,000 people? What peculiar charm is there to an organization that happens to be in a city of 510,000 people that does not inhere in the people who live in a city of 490,000 people, when they are Americans all? What is the basis for this arbitrary limitation of 500,000 people?

The measure has other provisions to the effect that it must be a regularly organized exchange; that it must have operated for 20 years, and a number of restrictions which are intended—and I think rightly intended—to safeguard the operation of these exchanges. But if those things are true, and you can so safeguard an exchange, those same limitations will safeguard an exchange and the people from fraudulent activities on that exchange in a city of 250,000 people just as much as in one of 500,000 people. [Applause.]

There is not a member of this committee who has answered my questions, and I have asked questions here for the last half hour. When I would ask them they would go off to the 20-year provision and other stipulations, which will still be in the section if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. For a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, it may be more than a question.

Mr. JONES. I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. You must either have that restriction written in or no restriction at all.

Mr. JONES. No; I can strike out the 500,000 and still have restrictions in this paragraph. Let me call your attention to the following:

And provided further, That such stock exchange requires financial statements to be submitted at the time of such listing and annually thereafter.

Then here is the restriction that the stock exchange must have been in existence during the preceding 20 years and operated each of those years, and all of those restrictions will still be in the paragraph and be just as effective.

I say that any exchange, whether it is a town of 50,000 people or 100,000 people, which has been in business for 20 years, that has done business every year for 20 years and requires financial statements to be submitted, is just as likely to be as honest as the Wall Street Exchange. No gentleman can answer that proposition, and when I attempted to ask the question the gentleman would go off to another limitation in the bill. I want to destroy the discrimination, and then I would like to strike out the entire paragraph so that none of the exchanges would have any exemptions, and so that no exchange and no one else could use the facilities of interstate commerce for transporting or selling fraudulent stocks or securities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas says no one has answered that proposition, but I will try to do it, if I can. Those who have investigated this subject, including the officers of the different States who are interested in these matters, have found, on an examination of the different stock exchanges of the country, that there are certain stock exchanges which have very high listing requirements.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I am sorry I can not yield, because I want to answer the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to ask a question which the gentleman can answer when he answers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. What assurance has the gentleman that they will not change those requirements?

Mr. DENISON. Well, I have the same assurance we have that any of the large banks of the country will be honestly managed.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But they are regulated by law.

Mr. DENISON. I am trying to answer the gentleman's question, and I can not yield any further, because I have not the time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is there any regulation of these stock exchanges by this bill?

Mr. DENISON. We found, gentlemen, that there are certain stock exchanges—I do not want to mention them, and we had to make the terms of the bill general—which have very strict listing requirements, and those listing requirements are so rigid that there is no probability of fraudulent stocks being listed. If you will get the listing requirements of the New York Stock Exchange—and I am referring to the New York Stock Exchange proper—or of the Chicago Stock Exchange or the Boston Stock Exchange and, perhaps, of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, you will find that before any security can be listed on those exchanges it must undergo a very thorough examination and exhaustive information must be furnished to the listing committee of the stock exchange, all of which will generally prevent, as far as the judgment of capable and experienced business men can do so, any fraudulent or worthless security from being listed for trading. There are only three or four of the stock exchanges that are really national in character and that have such rigid listing requirements.

We selected 500,000 population as an arbitrary number in order to exclude exchanges which do not have these high listing requirements, and that is the only reason for doing so; and I will say to my friend from Texas that if you strike that out of the bill you might as well strike out the entire section of the bill, and if you strike out the section you might as well kill the bill, because this matter has been so thoroughly investigated by the officials of the different States who are responsible for the good-faith execution of their own laws that there can be no mistake about it, and they say that this provision ought to go into the bill.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Did the committee find that the cities of 500,000 and over that would be exempted by paragraph (f) were the only ones that measured up to the standard set by the committee?

Mr. DENISON. They did. That is exactly what we found, and that is why we put that provision in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman have any assurance that some city, if this becomes permanent law, in 10 or 20 years, with a population of less than 500,000, might not be able to comply with the requirements and have the same high listing requirements?

Mr. DENISON. If we should find that to be the case, the law can then be amended to meet those conditions, but we have to legislate with a view to present conditions.

Mr. JONES. That might happen next week. Some of them that do not have the high listing requirements referred to might change their requirements.

Mr. DENISON. But the gentleman understands that we have to legislate in the light of conditions that exist to-day.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I would suggest that no city could qualify by having an overnight change in its requirements.

Mr. DENISON. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. These requirements must be established by long years of usage.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly. The exchanges this will apply to have established by long years of business custom and business dealings a reputation that guarantees—

Mr. JONES. I beg to differ with the gentleman. He has misconstrued this section. They must have done business for 20 years, but there is no requirement as to how long their rules must have been in force or their requirements as to their own operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a perfecting amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DENISON. Is that an amendment to the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers a perfecting amendment which would have preferential right over a motion to strike out the section.

Mr. DENISON. There has been a limitation on any further amendments by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that just applied to debate and did not apply to amendments.

Mr. DENISON. That is true, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JONES: Page 5, line 23, after the word "place," strike out the remainder of line 23 and line 24 down to and including the word "census."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were—ayes 32, noes 23.

Mr. DENISON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw that for the present.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers report ayes 35, noes 34. The Chair votes in the negative, making it ayes 35, noes 35. So the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Chairman can not vote from the chair. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us decide this question first.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum. We do not want the Chair killing an amendment in that way. I make the point of no quorum on that vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, what is the status?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair quotes the following precedent:

On February 18, 1904, the fortifications appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Choice B. Randell, of Texas, proposed an amendment, and a vote thereon was ordered by tellers. The tellers reported ayes 79, noes 78. Thereupon the Chairman announced he voted in the negative, and the ayes were 79 and the noes 79, and the amendment was disagreed to.

That is what the Chair did in this case. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana to strike out section (f).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 41, noes 31.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DENISON and Mr. LEAVITT to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 21, strike out section (b).

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this is another well-considered exception to this bill. Section (b) provides:

Any security issued or guaranteed by any foreign government with which the United States is at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof maintaining diplomatic relations, or by any State, Province, or political subdivision thereof having the power of taxation or assessment.

It is proposed to prevent the citizens of the United States from issuing securities and selling them, but you are going to give all of these foreign countries and their citizens an opportunity to sell their securities without any sort of guard in respect to the question of their responsibility or validity.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The gentleman is making a very interesting speech and I think the Members ought to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-two Members; not a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON), there were—ayes 43, noes 33.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DENISON and Mr. BLANTON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON, having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday night, March 21, 1924, between the hours of 8 o'clock p. m. and 11 o'clock p. m., it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, and no other business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Friday night next, between the hours of 8 o'clock p. m. and 11 o'clock p. m., it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, and no other business. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 6925. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Calumet River at or near One hundred and thirtieth Street in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois;

H. R. 5737. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River at or near the State line, between section 19, township 31 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and section 1, township 31 north, range 10 west of the second principal meridian, in the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana;

H. R. 5683. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Pearl River in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 6420. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 7039. An act to amend section 72 of chapter 23, printing act approved January 12, 1895, relative to the allotment of public documents.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 22. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITHWICK, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 20, 1924, at 12 o'clock p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

407. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a report for the month of February, 1924, showing the condition of railroad equipment, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 20, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we bless Thee for all the privileges of life, and ask from Thee help that we may so appreciate them as to live according to Thy good pleasure. May we find that the ends we aim at are our country's, Thyself, Thine own, and Truth. So enable us to walk in every pathway of duty that when the record is made up we shall hear the "Well done" from Thy gracious lips. Hear us! Be with us, O God! Keep us from going into wrong paths when so much is necessary in these days of tremendous issues. We ask always in the name of Jesus. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER, a Senator from the State of Missouri, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SPENCER thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1924, for the maintenance of public convenience stations, in amount $3,000, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. (S. Doc. No. 76.)

DEBT STATISTICS.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have some statistics from the United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, giving the total gross and net debt of the National Government and of State, county, and city governments, and all other civil divisions having power to incur debt. It is a very instructive table, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington.

PUBLIC DEBT.

TOTAL GROSS AND NET DEBT OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT, OF STATE GOVERNMENTS, OF COUNTIES, OF CITIES, AND OF ALL OTHER CIVIL DIVISIONS HAVING POWER TO INCUR DEBT, 1922 AND 1912.

[This preliminary statement will be followed by a detailed report giving the statistics of debt by counties, incorporated places, school districts, townships, and all other civil divisions having power to incur debt.]

SCOPE AND SUMMARY OF THE STATISTICS.

PUBLIC DEBT.

The statistics in this summary relate to the gross and net debt of the National Government for the year which ended June 30, 1923, and to the gross and net debt of the 48 States and the District of Columbia, all cities, towns, villages, school districts, townships, drainage districts, and all other civil divisions having power to incur debt, for the fiscal year which ended in the calendar year 1922. A summary is also presented of the debt of the National Government for the year which ended June 30, 1922. All other references to the years 1922 and 1912 relate to the fiscal years which ended June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1913, for the National Government.

The gross debt reported for 1922 represents all of the public indebtedness, including funded or fixed (long-term and serial bonds), special assessment bonds, temporary loans, outstanding warrants, and other debt of every character, and amounted to $32,786,922,000, or an average for each person of $301.56. The annual interest on this gross debt outstanding, computed at the rate of 4 per cent, would amount to $1,311,476,880, or $12.06 per capita. At 4½ per cent and 1 per cent sinking fund the total charges would be $1,803,280,710, or $16.59 per capita. The actual amount lies somewhere between these figures. Of this total debt the National Government represented 68.7 per cent, the State governments 3.5 per cent, the counties 4.2 per cent, incorporated places 17.8 per cent, and all other civil divisions 5.8 per cent.

The net debt reported for 1922 and for 1912 represents the gross debt less the sinking fund and other assets held for the retirement of such debt. The net debt amounted to $4,850,461,000 in 1912 and $30,852,825,000 in 1922, representing an increase of 536 per cent. The average for each person was $49.97 in 1912 and $283.77 in 1922.

The gross debt of the National Government was $22,525,773,000 for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1923. The indebtedness of other countries to the United States November 15, 1923, was $11,800,010,245, and of this total $4,600,000,000 represents the amount owed by Great Britain. The gross debt of the National Government was $23,260,543,000 for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1922, $734,770,000 greater than for the year which ended June 30, 1923. The net debt, being the gross debt less cash in the Treasury, amounted to $22,996,416,000 June 30, 1922, as compared with $22,155,886,000 June 30, 1923.

GROSS AND NET DEBT.

In the table which follows is presented the gross and net debt for the National Government June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1913, and for the States and all other civil divisions, 1922 and 1912, the debt being classified by character and by civil divisions issuing—

Gross and net debt of the National Government, State governments, counties, incorporated places, and all other civil divisions having power to incur debt.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions of the Woman's Clubs, of Lake Hamilton and Oldsmar, in the State of Florida, favoring the restriction of narcotic production to medical and scientific needs, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON. I present a number of petitions and letters from citizens of Arkansas, praying that no amendments shall be made to the transportation act. The communications are numerous signed by employees of various railroad companies. They reside for the most part at Little Rock, North Little Rock, El Dorado, and Booneville, in the State of Arkansas. I ask that they may be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of members and friends of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Kelso, Wash., praying an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Topeka (Kans.) Industrial Council, favoring the restriction of narcotic production to medical and scientific needs, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Lions Club and Post No. 34, the American Legion, both of Kingman, and of numerous other citizens of St. John, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of legislation more stringently restricting immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FRAZIER presented a resolution adopted by members of Herman-Schlinker Post, the American Legion, at Ellendale, N.

Dak., favoring the passage of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Arthur Nelson and 9 other citizens of Courtenay, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation increasing the tariff duty on wheat, also repealing the drawback provision and the milling-in-bond privilege of the Fordney-McCumber tariff act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of H. H. McNair and 4 other citizens of Portland, and of John E. Roe and 5 other citizens and of C. A. DeFoe and 19 other citizens of Turtle Lake, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of the so-called Norris-Sinclair bill providing aid to agriculture, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

STATEMENT BY J. W. GIBBONS.

Mr. CAPPER. I present a letter from J. W. Gibbons relative to a statement to the Santa Fe Railway shop employees' associations of Kansas, which I ask be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 17, 1924.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,

Senator from Kansas, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On page 3125 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 25, 1924, I find you had entered into the records a statement from Mr. C. A. McDonald, who signs himself secretary Federated Shop Crafts, Missouri Pacific Railroad, and a clipping which he inclosed which was cut from the Kansas City Star of February 10.

The clipping from the Star is an absolute misrepresentation of any statement or speech that I have ever made to the Santa Fe shop employees or any other body of citizens. I have asked the Kansas City Star to correct it. Their representative informed me that the information was gathered from some one who represented himself to be a railroad employee, but he could not remember just who the man was.

The only speech I have made to Santa Fe employees this year was in the city auditorium of Topeka, Kans., on January 14, on the occasion of a public entertainment given by the seven shop crafts associations whose members are employed in the Santa Fe shops. The invitation was not extended to me to address this meeting as a foreman but as the system secretary-treasurer of the supervisors' association, which is a kindred organization of the craft associations, which is especially interested in maintaining fair conditions for labor.

What I said, in substance, stated briefly, is as follows:

"Commerce is the lifeblood of the Nation. The railroads are the arteries that convey the blood to all parts of the body (nation) and keep it in good, healthy condition. Anything that weakens or obstructs these arteries is a detriment to the health of the body (nation)."

I stated that—

"Lack of nourishment or congestion due to unhealthy or weak arteries (railroads) stops the flow of lifeblood (raw materials) from the producers to the industrial centers and the manufactured article to the consumer."

The only reference I made to the transportation act of 1920 was to the point that after years of quarreling between capital and labor employed on railroads, which had resulted in great injury to the public as well as to those directly engaged in the quarrel, the Esch-Cummings bill has provided a means whereby labor could take their grievance to an impartial tribunal for adjudication, and this law materially assisted the employees to maintain their present standard of wages.

I never mentioned the prosperity of railroads or overtime work by men. In fact, the Santa Fe Railroad has worked its men but very little overtime in the past three years. I did urge everyone to exercise their rights of citizenship and acquaint the public with the facts and thus mold public opinion, to the end that no substantial change be made in the present laws.

This meeting was open to the public and attended by a large per cent of business men and city officials of Topeka. Neither the officials of the Santa Fe nor the officials or any other railroad company were consulted as to what I would say. I was asked by the members of the entertainment committee to make a talk on the "Purpose and progress of these associations."

With reference to the last paragraph of the article referred to, I wish positively to state that members of the association with which I am connected or members of any of the Santa Fe shop crafts associations have any knowledge whatsoever of such a meeting being contemplated, and it is certain that the funds of our respective associations are not to be used as suggested in said paragraph.

In the fifth paragraph of Mr. McDonald's letter he suggests that some law should be passed prohibiting employers of labor from in any way trying to influence their employees in regard to their duty as American citizens. In regard to this, I wish to say my record of political action is well known to all and proves that I have never been dominated by any individual or class, and I believe that some law should be passed to protect the individual from misrepresentation of this kind.

Your honorable body should also be acquainted with the fact that Mr. McDonald does not represent the employees of the Missouri Pacific Railroad but only a small fraction of the former employees of this road who are still on strike, which was called July 1, 1922.

The Santa Fe shop employees' associations represent 10,934 out of a total of 17,300 men employed in the seven crafts of the Santa Fe Railroad shops, and they wish me to state that their loyalty to the Government and to the public is best expressed by the service that the railroad which employs them gives to the public compared to the roads formerly controlled by the Federated Shop Crafts Mr. McDonald represents.

I want to say to the honorable body that we, as a class, are willing to be judged by the efficiency of the railroad that employs us and the economical record made by the management, and that we would be traitors to ourselves and to the public if we were not loyal to our employer.

I respectfully request that this statement be given the same publicity that was given to the statement of the Federated Shop Crafts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 25.

Yours sincerely,

J. W. GRABOWA.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 285) thereon. I give notice that I shall ask permission to call the bill up for consideration to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 7) granting permission for the erection of a monument to symbolize the national game of baseball, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2704) to amend paragraph (3), section 16, of the interstate commerce act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 286) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2512) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Sibley and Scott, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River (Rept. No. 287); and

A bill (S. 2507) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River in St. Charles Township, Kane County, Ill. (Rept. No. 288).

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6943) granting the consent of Congress to the village of Port Chester, N. Y., and the town of Greenwich, Conn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Byram River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 289) thereon.

NATIONAL MCKINLEY BIRTHPLACE MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 2821, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill (S. 2821) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association," approved March 4, 1911, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association," approved March 4, 1911, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the management and direction of the affairs of the corporation and the control and disposition of its property and funds shall be vested in a board of trustees, five in number, to be composed of the individuals named in section 1 of this act, who shall constitute the first board of trustees. Vacancies caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, shall be filled by the remaining trustees in such manner as shall be prescribed from time to time by the by-laws of the corporation. The persons so elected shall thereupon become trustees and also members of the corporation: Provided, That if the interests of the association hereinbefore named shall at any time in the judgment of the incorporators named in section 1, their associates and successors, require the services of an additional trustee, said incorporators, their associates and successors, shall have authority to elect an additional trustee, so that the total number of trustees at any time may not exceed six."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this organization is incorporated by act of Congress. It holds the title to the memorial at the birthplace of President McKinley. The executive or administrative body is a board of five trustees. The only purpose of this measure is to give to the existing trustees, who are self-perpetuating, the right to increase their number to six in case it becomes necessary to do this in the interest of making it feasible to assemble a quorum. At the present time, with the number of trustees so limited, it is found difficult or impossible to get quorums at meetings, and therefore difficult to transact the necessary business of the organization. It is a formal matter merely, and I venture to hope that it will meet with no opposition.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to say only this: I have personal information about this matter and the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated it accurately. I trust that the bill will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the construction of a vessel for the Coast Guard, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill making appropriations for the construction of certain public buildings. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed in full in the Record.

The bill (S. 2882) making appropriations for the construction of certain public buildings was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

(A) For increase in the limit of cost of construction of those certain public buildings, heretofore authorized by Congress to be constructed and for which appropriations were made, referred to in Senate Document No. 28, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, $15,130,780, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

(B) For the construction of public buildings on those certain sites heretofore acquired, but for the construction of which buildings no appropriations were made, referred to in Senate Document No. 28, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, $23,557,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed very briefly to explain the bill, the reason I have for introducing it, and asking that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Florida is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is proper that the bill should be referred to and considered by the Committee on Appropriations, for the projects covered have heretofore been investigated in whole or in part and approved by Congress, so that all that is now necessary is to appropriate funds with which to carry on the work. I do not make this request because of any doubt that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—of which my good friend, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], is chairman—would fail or refuse to report it, but I do fear that if the bill is referred to that committee the members would be swamped and perhaps harassed by those desiring to amend it by the inclusion of new projects which, if included, would, in my opinion, jeopardize the final passage and approval of the measure. And so, Mr. President, I am certain it would be better to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, for that committee would not, or should not, consider such amendments, and is in position to obtain any additional information that may be desired direct from the Secretary of the Treasury. Furthermore, the bill calls for appropriations and must be considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I hope the bill will be carefully considered, favorably reported, passed, and approved in the near future.

It is understood that members of the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds are now giving consideration to the matter of framing and reporting a general public building bill providing for the acquisition of additional sites throughout the country and the construction of suitable buildings thereon in order to relieve, in so far as may be possible, the congested conditions existing and where the need of buildings or enlarged quarters is greatest; and while it is uncertain that such a bill would meet the approval of the President at this time, yet there is no reason why this bill introduced by me should not be approved by the President, for its object and purpose are to carry out the contracts heretofore entered into by and between the Government and the people. There is a moral obligation of long standing involved and the Government should not further delay fulfilling its part of the contract.

The Senate document referred to in the bill is a letter addressed to the President of the Senate by Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, under date January 24, 1924, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution No. 94, submitted by me, information relative to sites acquired and appropriations necessary for the erection of certain public buildings, and I request that the document be printed in the Record in connection with my remarks, and also a letter addressed to me by Hon. McKenzie Moss, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of public buildings, under date February 27, 1924, in order that Members of Congress and the public may be informed of the facts and the reasons which prompt me in urging that favorable action be taken on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document and letter are as follows:

ERECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 94, information relative to sites acquired and appropriations necessary for the erection of certain public buildings.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 24, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In response to Senate Resolution 94, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain data in reference to public buildings, I have the honor to submit the following:

The information desired, together with certain additional data not specifically called for by the resolution, but without which the statement in regard to the status of authorized buildings and sites would not be complete, is set forth in Exhibit A, as follows:

(a) Name of each city or town (by States) where authorizations have been made for acquisition of a site, construction of a building on site already owned, or for site and building.

(b) Date site was acquired; or, if not acquired, its present status.

(c) Consideration paid for each site.

(d) Amount authorized for site, site and building, or for building only.

(e) Balance available for building.

(f) Estimated cost of building on site authorized.

(g) Amount of increase required where existing authorization is insufficient.

There is also submitted Exhibit B, which includes the names of certain projects, mentioned in Exhibit A, where drawings have been prepared, or are contemplated, for buildings of a very simple type that may possibly be provided within the existing limit of cost by the adoption of much cheaper methods of construction than has been the practice heretofore of this department; or by furnishing space to satisfy present needs only, without room for future expansion; or by not including accommodations for Government activities that may be located in the places named but where the legislation is for a post office only.

Respectfully,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

EXHIBIT A.

Names of cities where sites only or sites and buildings have been authorized, limit of cost of each project, amount authorized in each case, cost of land where sites have been acquired, date of acquisition by Government, balance available, estimated cost of project, and increase in limit required.

Place.	Date site acquired.	Cost of site.	Amount authorized.	Balance available.	Estimated amount.	Increase.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
 OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
 Washington, February 27, 1924.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter of February 22 asking to be furnished with certain totals of the amounts in connection with authorized public buildings and sites contained in Senate Document No. 28. These amounts are as follows:

- (1) The total amount of appropriations available for the construction of certain buildings (col. e)..... $9,280,822
- (2) An estimate of the total additional amount necessary for Congress to appropriate in order that those buildings may be constructed (col. g)..... 15,130,780
- (3) The total amount estimated necessary to be appropriated for the construction of buildings on sites heretofore acquired for which no appropriation was made for the construction of a building (col. f)..... 23,557,500

Very truly yours,

McKENZIE MOSS, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it will be noted from the document and the letter that in order to carry out the intent and purpose of Congress—expressed in previous legislation—to construct buildings on those certain sites mentioned it will be necessary to pursue the matter further by enacting legislation making appropriations available in the sum of $15,130,780 to supplement the unexpended appropriations heretofore made amounting to $9,280,822—that being the balance on hand in the Treasury—before those buildings can be constructed, due to the increased cost of labor and materials, and it will also be necessary to make available the sum of $23,557,500 in order to construct buildings on those certain sites for which no appropriations were made for the construction of buildings. It is now necessary to appropriate or make available a total of $38,688,280 in order to carry out the intent and purpose of Congress that suitable buildings be constructed on all those certain sites mentioned in the document.

To illustrate the situation I refer to the fact that the Government acquired a site at Cheboygan, Mich., on October 2, 1906, at a cost of $7,900. The appropriation for site and building was $70,000, but it was found that a suitable building could not be constructed on that site for the balance of the appropriation—$62,100. That was almost 20 years ago, yet no building has been constructed and the site is vacant; and in order to carry out the intent and purpose of Congress that a suitable building be constructed at Cheboygan it will be necessary to appropriate or make available the sum of $25,000 additional, for it is now estimated by the Treasury Department that it will cost $87,100 to construct the building. I note from the document that a number of sites were acquired during 1909, 1911, and 1912 on which no buildings have been constructed. It is to be hoped that Members of Congress will give careful consideration to the matter in order that the general situation may be better understood and appreciated.

As I stated on a former occasion, there has been no general public buildings appropriation legislation since 1913 due to the fact that the World War came on soon afterward and practically all activity in that direction ceased, but that condition does not obtain at this time and Congress should go ahead and provide suitable buildings on all those sites heretofore acquired and relieve the inadequate and unsightly conditions that exist in many, if not all these cities and towns. In this connection I am advised that the rental charged the Government for some quarters amounts to 25 to 30 per cent interest on the estimated cost of the building that could be constructed by the Government. Furthermore, the business of the Government can not be satisfactorily transacted in inadequate quarters, and it is a poor policy to delay action longer.

Mr. President, while it is understood that this administration is for the time being, at least, opposed to the enactment of a general public buildings bill, this bill introduced by me is not such a bill. It can not be termed "pork barrel legislation." It provides (a) for covering the increase in the limit of cost of construction of those certain public buildings heretofore authorized by Congress to be constructed and for which insufficient appropriations were made, and (b) for the construction of public buildings on those certain sites heretofore acquired but for the construction of which buildings no appropriations were made. Its object and purpose is to carry out the intent of Congress expressed from time to time, written into the law and never repealed, that those buildings should be constructed, and we should now keep faith with the people and appropriate the money in order that the work may proceed in an orderly manner. If it is feared that to engage upon an extensive building program at this time would disrupt the business and economic condition of the country then why not provide for the construction of these certain buildings and provide for the construction of other buildings at a later day? That would be dividing up the work and make it possible to continue it over a period of years rather than all at one time and not disrupt conditions.

It may be that to undertake a "very extensive building program" would be disadvantageous at this time, but that is not what I propose. And so I say, Congress should appropriate the thirty-eight-odd million dollars now in order that the construction of those buildings referred to in the document may be undertaken, and later provide funds for the construction of suitable buildings in other cities and towns where the need is most urgent. Let us complete the present program which has heretofore been mapped out, and then take up something else along the same line. I wish to remind Senators that the estimated cost of constructing these buildings is perhaps 50 per cent greater than when the appropriations were originally made some years ago, and that unless prompt action is taken the original estimate of cost may be doubled; and so I feel it will prove more economical to proceed immediately.

I addressed the Senate about two weeks ago on this same subject—"brought the Members a message" as one correspondent expressed it—and since then I have received a number of letters, telegrams, and newspaper clippings from over the country expressing approval of my efforts in that direction and urging that I introduce this bill. I am not disposed, Mr. President, to burden the Record with those communications, but do ask that a letter received from the Chamber of Commerce of Lewistown, Pa., be printed in connection with my remarks to-day, for that letter refers to a situation there similar to that in other localities, especially with reference to the enhanced value and the condition of Government-owned sites.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the letter will be printed in the Record.

The letter is as follows:

LEWISTOWN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Lewistown, Pa., March 14, 1924.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: We note with interest an article in our local newspaper, the Sentinel, pertaining to your effort toward providing for the erection of Federal buildings on sites now owned by the Government.

We are aware of the President's attitude in respect to a general public buildings bill and your action is of unusual interest to our community. The situation in Lewistown differs slightly from the situation in De Funk Springs, Fla. While the Lewistown site was not donated to the Government, it was sold to the Government for $16,500 and to-day is worth $80,000. The man who sold this property was actuated by public spirit and named a price that is considered unusually fair by everyone. At the time of sale a three-story hotel building occupied the property. This building was razed and the property has stood vacant for a number of years. We can safely state that had this hotel property been allowed to remain standing it would have been put to excellent use during the past several years, as our community is rapidly growing and hotel facilities are greatly needed.

Our Representative, Hon. EDWARD M. BURNS, has introduced a bill providing for $100,000 additional appropriation for our Federal building, and on January 16 a committee from this organization, conducted by Mr. BURNS, was granted interviews with Mr. James A. Whitmore, Supervising Architect for the Treasury Department; Representative JOHN W. LANGLEY, chairman of Buildings and Grounds Committee; Senator GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER; and others, in behalf of Congressman BURNS's bill. This committee met with encouragement from these officials, and it was the opinion that if a general building bill was passed Lewistown would be included.

Your action in asking for erection of public buildings on sites already owned by the Government brings our community within its scope, and we trust it will meet with success. We note your action in the nature of a message to the Senate. Should you introduce this matter in the form of a bill, we will be very glad to ask the support of our Representative and Senators in its behalf.

Very truly yours,

LEWISTOWN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
R. P. FOLTA, Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will be noted from Secretary Mellon's letter that the site for a public building at Lewistown was acquired May 15, 1917—almost seven years ago—the Senators from Pennsylvania will keep that in mind, I am sure—for $16,500, out of the appropriation of $75,000 for site and building; that there remains in the Treasury of the United States $58,500 of that appropriation, and that it will now be necessary for Congress to provide an additional appropriation of $45,000 in order to construct the building. I dare say that if the appropriation is not made very soon it will be necessary for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury to revise his estimate and increase the amount to perhaps $50,000 or $60,000, and that per cent of increase would no doubt apply in all other cases. I refer to the Lewistown, Pa., case, because it is typical.

The letter from the chamber of commerce states that the building on the lot was torn down and that the property has stood vacant ever since—some six or seven years—and yet the value of that vacant lot has increased to $80,000.

It cost the Government $16,500, and has increased in value to $80,000. I assume that similar conditions in regard to increase in value and unsightly conditions of the lot apply to all the sites acquired on which no buildings have been constructed. Just think of the Government owning a vacant, unsightly, unproductive building site, from which no one derives revenue! The property is not subject to tax by the city, county, district, or the State, and the Federal Government is not even liable for the cost of improving the streets about it. That must be done at the expense of the community, the taxpayers.

That letter states that the gentleman who sold the lot to the Government was actuated by "public spirit" and agreed to accept $16,500 for it. Perhaps he was put to the expense of tearing down the building on it, and now the unimproved lot is worth $80,000, which is quite an increase in value. The seller has lost and the Government has benefited, but the city of Lewistown has not gained anything by reason of that transaction. No doubt that gentleman conceived the idea that he would live to view a fine Federal building on the lot once owned by him and be able to refer and point with pride to his contribution to the community; but that man may have already gone to his reward or, if not, may go before Congress acts. I hope not.

It will be noted from Secretary Mellon's letter that several of the sites were "donated" to the Government. I recall that one was donated by public-spirited citizens of my State. At De Funk Springs a site was donated in 1917 by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Murray, sr., of that place, but on account of the fact that no building has been constructed the donors have been seriously considering requesting me to introduce a bill providing that the property be reconveyed to them. That lot has also increased in value. The Government required that the building on it be removed; it has remained vacant ever since, and does not yield revenue to anyone, so far as I am informed. The Government is not liable for taxes or assessments of any nature against it.

I say, Mr. President, that is not a fair and just way to treat our citizens and these communities. There was an excuse for delay just prior to, during, and for several years after the World War, but there is no justification for delaying action further.

It will be remembered that during the campaign of 1922 the voters were given to understand that if the Republican nominees were elected, if that party maintained a majority in the House, a general public buildings appropriation bill would be enacted almost immediately upon the convening of the next Congress. I believe it was the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Mr. LANGLEY, of Kentucky, who let that be understood. It begins to look as if that "understanding or promise" might become a slogan on the part of the Republicans during the approaching campaign. It is my opinion that the good people at Lewistown and elsewhere who have been promised reasonably quick action in the matter of having a suitable building constructed in their respective communities have a right to complain and are justified in feeling they have not been justly treated. Certainly there can be no excuse whatever for longer delay of wise economy, and it does mean the people will get something for their money.

I submit, Mr. President, that we ought to act in this matter. We ought to take care of those buildings that have been authorized, but for which insufficient appropriations have been made, and erect buildings on those sites which have been donated to the Government but which have remained vacant and in an unsatisfactory condition ever since, yielding no revenue for the benefit of anyone. While the enactment of the bill I have introduced would not mean a direct reduction of taxation, it would mean the wise practice of economy, and it would also mean that the people would be getting something for their money.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Florida. Has he made any estimate as to the probable appropriation that will be necessary to provide the buildings to which he has referred?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is all set out in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the Senator state the total amount, for information?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have it here in this statement. An appropriation of $15,130,780 will be required to supplement the unexpended appropriation already made and now in the Treasury to complete the buildings, and an amount of $23,557,500 will be required in order to construct the buildings on the sites which the Government now owns, either by donation or by purchase.

Mr. WILLIS. So the amount involved will be approximately $40,000,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amount will be $38,688,280.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if it is the request of the Senator from Florida that the bill be referred to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is. It has been referred to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad that course has been taken, because I was going to make the suggestion that this is really in the nature of a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is. That is the reason why I wanted to present these thoughts, to justify its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARMS AND MUNITIONS SOLD TO MEXICO.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 193) was read, as follows

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the particular statutory authorization by virtue of which he is reported to have sold and delivered, or engaged to sell and deliver, arms and munitions to the Government of Mexico; and to furnish also copies of the particular instruments embodying the agreements of sale; and to furnish also copies of all opinions as to the lawful nature of the transaction furnished to him by his own law officers or by those of other departments of the Government; and to furnish also all memoranda, interdepartmental communications, correspondence with persons not in the Government service, and other relevant documentary material, notes of conversations and similar material concerning the sale of arms; and to furnish also a complete and detailed list of all precedents for his action and of all inquiries ever received by the War Department, so far as its files disclose, concerning the transfer to foreign governments or factions, for money, of arms and munitions of the United States; and to furnish also a description of the materials actually delivered, or in process of delivery, classifying the arms and munitions as to their immediate availability and relative degrees of obsolescence.

The Secretary of War is directed to furnish the material requested herein as rapidly as it can be secured, submitting each variety of data according as it is brought together.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish we could incorporate in that resolution also an inquiry as to how long the arms remained in the possession of those to whom we delivered them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS OF THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 194), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Whereas the eleventh general council of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota on July 10, 1923, unanimously passed the following resolution:

"Whereas pursuant to the authority contained in the act approved January 14, 1889, the Chippewa Indians occupying or belonging on reservations located within the limits of the State of Minnesota entered into agreements with the duly authorized representatives of the United States for the allotment of their lands in severalty and the cession of all the residue property and its sale and disposition upon specific terms for the exclusive use and benefit of a designated class of people, namely, all those members of the different bands or tribes occupying or belonging to reservations within the limits of the State of Minnesota and entitled to allotments of land and their issue thereafter born, said funds to be paid to them at stated times and in stated amounts; and

"Whereas the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior has had direct and immediate charge of the administration of said estate for a period of nearly 34 years; and

"Whereas the administration of said estate by the said Bureau of Indian Affairs has been characterized by inefficiency and by great abuses resulting in the despoliation of said estate entailing great losses running into millions of dollars upon the said designated class of persons and from which estate they have and are now receiving no substantial benefits; and

"Whereas the more flagrant violations of said agreements by the said Bureau of Indian Affairs and its officers may be specifically enumerated as follows:

"1. Said agreements provided for the immediate preparation of complete allotment and money payment rolls of all the Chippewa people entitled to share in said estate. Said rolls have not yet been completed.

"2. The illegal patenting of the State of Minnesota, without a dollar of consideration therefor, of large bodies of valuable timber and other lands, causing a loss of somewhere between $4,000,000 and $10,000,000.

"3. The illegal issuance of patents to lands classified as 'agricultural lands' in violation of the plain terms of said agreements without the payment of a dollar therefor and which has resulted in a loss of more than $2,000,000.

"4. The illegal disposition of the lands classified as 'pine lands' under said agreements, which were to have been disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder, and which lands have been disposed of at the arbitrary price of $1.25 per acre, only a fractional part of their true value, resulting in losses of several million dollars.

"5. The illegal inclusion of the ceded trust lands in the Minnesota National Forest Reserve in violation of the plain terms of said agreements, the taking of the timber thereon at only a fractional part of the compensation agreed to be paid therefor, and the taking of the land at the arbitrary price of $1.25 per acre, which was only a small fractional part of the amount agreed to be paid, resulting in losses of several million dollars.

"6. The attempt to confer exclusive ownership of all the property on the diminished Red Lake Reservation upon the members of the Red Lake Band to the exclusion of all the other Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, who are entitled to share therein, after allotments are made to the members of the Red Lake Band, under the agreements, resulting in a loss to all the Chippewas of Minnesota, exclusive of the members of the Red Lake Band, of several million dollars in property heretofore disposed of and now remaining.

"7. The illegal creation of the Red Lake Forest Reserve and the diversion of the proceeds received therefrom from the fund standing to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota to the exclusive credit of the members of the Red Lake Band, resulting in a loss to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, exclusive of the members of the Red Lake Band, of several million dollars.

"8. The refusal of the Indian Bureau to carry out the agreements of 1889, supplemented by positive acts of Congress directing that allotments should be made to the members of the Red Lake Band. Under the agreements the trust period of 50 years does not commence to run until allotments to all the Chippewa Indians have been completed. By refusing to make the allotments on the Red Lake Reservation the bureau has held up the commencement of the running of the trust period for 33 years, and improperly and illegally prolonged its administration of the trust, at a heavy annual expense to all the Chippewa people, and has at the same time denied to the members of the Red Lake Band allotments of land to which they were and are lawfully entitled. Forty per cent of those Indians who were entitled to allotment in 1889 on the Red Lake Reservation have since died without receiving their allotments. The conduct of the Indian Bureau with reference to the Red Lake situation is inexcusable and has resulted in great financial loss to all the Chippewa people and great loss to the Red Lake Indians, in that they have been deprived of all the advantages that would have flowed from the allotment of the lands, the sale and disposition of the residue lands, and the establishment of schools, churches, roads, and all those other attributes of civilization.

"9. The use by the Indian Bureau of the school funds of all the Chippewa Indians in the maintenance of boarding schools for the benefit of a few in violation of the terms of the agreements, and its failure and refusal to intelligently use and expend the school fund so as to afford proper school facilities for all the Indian children.

"10. The insistent demand of the Indian Bureau that the expenses of its service in Minnesota should be paid out of the trust funds of the Chippewas, which is in violation of the terms and provisions of the agreements creating the trust fund. The policy inaugurated in 1911 by the Indian Bureau in disregard of the terms of the agreements, and approved by Congress at its insistence, has cost the Chippewa people several million dollars. The service maintained has been primarily for the benefit of the Indian Bureau with only incidental benefits to the Indians, and the maintenance of said service out of the trust funds has been and is a flagrant abuse of power.

"11. The inclusion in State drainage districts of the ceded Indian lands under the act of Congress approved May 23, 1908 (33 Stat., 169) from which the Indians have received only incidental compensation, the State of Minnesota being the main beneficiary, and all of which was in violation of the terms of the agreements and has resulted in great losses.

"12. The illegal inclusion of Indian allotments in State drainage projects, the assessments upon many of which have resulted in confiscation of the allotments.

"13. The frauds practiced by the employees of the Indian Bureau in the estimation and appraisal of the timber on the ceded lands shown in the report of Inspector J. George Wright submitted in 1897 (S. Doc. No. 85, 55th Cong., 1st sess.). These frauds cost the Indians millions of dollars for which they now have only a claim against the United States and were the direct result of inefficient administration.

"14. The unlawful use of the trust funds in the payment of tuition of Indian children in the public schools of Minnesota, fostered and promoted by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Under the law every Indian child is entitled to free admission to its public schools. The payment of tuition, except in exceptional cases where it is necessary to extend aid to the school districts of the State in order to provide proper school facilities for Indian children is a flagrant abuse of official power.

"14a. The inclusion of children in mission and Government boarding schools who have adequate public schools at their homes. The mission and boarding schools should be open only to Indian children who are without public-school facilities.

"15. The removal of the agency from White Earth to Cass Lake. Seven-twelfths of all the Chippewa people were allotted on the White Earth Reservation. Upon that reservation are suitable accommodations for the agency and its employees, erected and maintained in part out of the funds of the United States and in part out of the funds of the Indians. Cass Lake is situated about 70 miles by direct line from the White Earth Reservation and within the ceded territory. Only a comparatively few Indians were allotted land or reside in the vicinity of Cass Lake. From White Earth to Cass Lake by railroad is a distance of about 130 miles, with no direct line, necessitating transfer at intersections of railroads and long delays. There are no public buildings at Cass Lake that can be used for agency purposes. They are now located in rented quarters, the expense of rental and maintenance being paid out of the trust funds. The removal was the direct result of protests filed with the department by the White Earth Indians against conditions in and about the agency that had become intolerable. As a rebuke to the Indians for their attempt to bring the true situation to the attention of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs secured the approval of an order by the President of the United States for the removal of the agency. The location and maintenance of the agency at Cass Lake is of no benefit to the Indians allotted on the White Earth Reservation and operates as a distinct hardship, entailing useless and unnecessary expense.

"16. The repeated donations of the trust lands to various institutions without a dollar of consideration therefor;

"17. The failure or refusal of the Indian Bureau to classify the Chippewa people so that the competent and incompetent might be known, and so that Congress in making appropriations might know the number of Chippewa people who needed any supervision or aid; and

"Whereas each and every one of said acts under which said authority is now being claimed by said bureau was enacted upon its recommendations; and

"Whereas, had the Indian Bureau performed its proper duty and correctly advised Congress of the effect of the legislation it has been asked to enact by the Indian Bureau, said legislation would never have been enacted to the great loss and injury of the Chippewa people; and

"Whereas it has only been since the creation of the General Council of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and through its efforts, that said vicious legislation, confiscatory of the property of the Chippewa people, has ceased; and

"Whereas the General Council of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota is the only representative body through which the Chippewa people can give a dependable expression of their views relative to the administration of their estate to the officers of the United States charged by law with its administration; and

"Whereas the said Indian Bureau did, in 1921, in order to prevent the true situation with reference to the Chippewa estate from becoming public and in order that it might cover up its mistakes, protest against further appropriations by Congress for the maintenance of said general council, and did, by misrepresentation of fact, induce Congress to discontinue said appropriations for said general council; and has ever since pursued the same course; and

"Whereas since said time said Indian Bureau has used its influence to promote strife and discord among the Chippewa people and has refused to accord the Chippewa people an opportunity to meet under governmental supervision and give a dependable expression of their views relative to their estate; and

"Whereas said Indian Bureau through its present officials has exerted its influence to break up the General Council of the Chippewa Indians and to leave them and retain them in a position where they had no official organization and could give no dependable expression of their views to the officers of the United States charged by law with the administration of their estate, and to put them, and retain them in a position where they could make no official protest against the improper administration of their estate that has been, and is now, going on; and

"Whereas notwithstanding the confused conditions relating to said estate and the imperative necessity of the Chippewa people having a proper representative to speak and act for them, said Indian Bureau has refused, and still refuses, to permit them to employ an attorney of their own selection and to pay said attorney out of their own funds; and

"Whereas while denying to all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota the right to employ an attorney to represent them in the adjustment of their matters with the Government of the United States the said Indian Bureau has sanctioned and approved the employment of an attorney to represent the Red Lake Band for the sole purpose of perpetuating the present unlawful conditions existing on said reservation; and,

"Whereas the present officials of the Indian Bureau have and are now, with full knowledge of the facts, retaining in office an employee who, while an employee of that bureau and intrusted with the preparation of legislation vitally affecting the rights of the Chippewa people, demanded of their representative a division of any compensation he received for his services or from the prosecution of any claims of the Chippewa people against the United States, and which employee is to-day, with full knowledge of his misconduct by his superiors, being retained and is passing upon and submitting recommendations on many, if not all, matters passing through the Indian Bureau pertaining to Chippewa affairs; and

"Whereas the despoliation of said estate is now going on under the present administration of the Indian Bureau, the consummation of Minnesota National Forest Reserve matter, as a result of which the Chippewa people sustained a loss of from three to five million dollars, being a single instance; and,

"Whereas throughout the entire history of the administration of said estate by said bureau extending over a period of 34 years no reform ever been brought by said bureau on its own initiative; and,

"Whereas every reform that has been accomplished has been directly due to the efforts of the Chippewa people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to place in charge of the affairs of the Indian Bureau, honest, capable, and efficient officials who will honestly and efficiently administer the affairs of the Chippewa people and of all other people coming under its control; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, requested to make a complete investigation into the affairs of the Chippewa people; to accord them a representative; to correct the abuses now present; to adjust these matters in which the Chippewa people have sustained great losses, either through direct negotiation with the representatives of the Chippewa people or by reference to a court of competent jurisdiction, to the end that the Chippewa estate may be wound up; the trust funds segregated; the Indians classified so that the competent and incompetent may be known; the funds of the competent Indians paid to them, and the funds of the incompetent held for their use and benefit": Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is directed to investigate the allegations contained in the foregoing resolution of the general council of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and report to the Senate its findings in the premises, together with such recommendations as to action on the part of the United States which said committee shall be advised to make.

Such committee, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Sixty-eighth Congress, at such times and places, to employ such counsel, experts, and accountants, and clerical and other stenographic assistants as it may deem advisable. The committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents, to administer oaths, and to take testimony, as it may deem advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. Subpoenas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be liable to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the construction of a vessel for the Coast Guard was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PULLMAN SURCHARGE.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have to leave the Chamber in a few minutes to keep an engagement, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate just for a few moments to call the attention of the Senate to the question of the Pullman surcharge.

A month or two since the Legislature of South Carolina passed a bill abolishing the Pullman surcharge. I am sorry to notice in the papers that the officials have been enjoined from putting that act into effect. An injunction was granted by the judges of the United States courts. This shows how little the rights of the States are regarded.

This matter is receiving very great attention at the hands of the public. Something like 117 bills have been introduced in Congress trying to accomplish this purpose. That is almost a bill by every fourth Member of the House and the Senate. It is greatly desired that we get some legislation at an early date, as it seems that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not or does not take steps to abolish the surcharge. It is a very serious matter. In my State, for instance, we have trains with no day coaches on them, and for short distances, even between some of our magnificent cities, a distance of 30 miles, for example, I believe the minimum surcharge is 75 cents. The people either have to pay that surcharge or wait for some other train, and it delays and inconveniences the transportation of passengers greatly.

I understand that just this week Canada has restored the pre-war rates both on passengers and on freight. It seems to me that we might begin to emulate Canada in that respect. I believe that this amount could be made up to the railroads by reason of the additional number of passengers that would travel if the surcharge were removed. I sometimes travel on these trains, and I see oftentimes that the coaches are almost empty. I believe that if a proper rate were in effect it would encourage travel, and the roads would lose nothing.

However that may be, I do not favor any kind of camouflage. If the rate is not sufficient, then the railroads ought to be allowed to increase their rates; but they should not be permitted to collect money from the public under any misapprehension.

If they can not exist on the rate that is allowed, they should be allowed to increase the rate; but I do not believe that is the case. This is a long time after the war, and all these nuisance taxes and unusual taxes should be abolished, and it seems to me it is high time for us to take steps now to relieve the public. Anyone who travels on the trains or sits around hotel lobbies will hear this question discussed as one that is uppermost in the minds of the traveling public.

I know that it took us a good, long time here to get our Committee on Interstate Commerce functioning, and I am glad that it is making progress, as I learn, along this line; and I trust it will soon bring in a bill abolishing this surcharge, so that we can get our country and travel and trade back to normal conditions. I am sure there is nothing that would please the public more, and I feel at the same time do justice to the railroads.

I am urging the Interstate Commerce Commission to act, and sincerely hope relief will be speedy, not only regarding Pullman-car surcharges but also as to passenger and freight rates.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate, I desire to make a brief statement respecting the subject just discussed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

During the last session of Congress I presented a bill to eliminate the Pullman surcharge. Other bills for the purpose were presented in both Houses of Congress. During the present Congress a large number of measures on the subject have been introduced in the Senate, and a very large number in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

The subject has been under consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is expected that action will be taken upon the measure in the early future. A request has been made of the Interstate Commerce Commission for information respecting the effect of the passage of such a bill upon the revenues of the railroads. I am also informed that measures are pending before the committee looking to a reduction of freight rates, particularly those that relate to the transportation of farm products and of commodities that are essential to agricultural production.

BRIGHT ANGEL TRAIL, ARIZ.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon the amendment adopted by the Senate yesterday to the House action on Senate amendment No. 47 and ask a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator kindly advise us what is amendment No. 47?

Mr. SMOOT. Amendment No. 47 has reference to the Bright Angel Trail.

Mr. McNARY. I have just come into the Chamber. I would like to know what is the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment to the action of the House on Senate amendment No. 47, the Bright Angel Trail matter, and I have just moved that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

Mr. McNARY. I think that would be very satisfactory, except that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] telephoned to me that he would be here about half past 1, and said that he would like to have no action taken until he can be present on the floor. I assume he would not object to this motion, but I wanted the statement of the Senator from Arizona to be known.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to make an inquiry before the motion is submitted. We already have a conference, and the item now in dispute is in connection with a bill which is already in conference. Are we to have two separate sets of conferees and two separate reports in relation to the same bill? This item ought to be carried in the bill and re-committed to the committee of conference which is already in existence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion made by the Senator from Utah provides for a conference.

Mr. SMOOT. The same conferees will be appointed on this disagreement.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true, but it does not accord with the action taken the other day when we appointed conferees on this appropriation bill. It seems to me the proper course would be for the Senate to insist on its amendment and refer it to the conferees who have already been appointed.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me state the situation. Yesterday the Senate disagreed to the House amendment by adopting an amendment to that amendment. The conference report was only a partial report. I asked then that the House grant a conference. The action of the Senate went back to the House. The House did not appoint conferees, but they insisted upon their amendment, and therefore when the message of the House was laid before the Senate I moved that the Senate further insist on its amendment and ask for a conference upon the item. We agreed to the House amendment with an amendment yesterday, and that ended it as far as the Senate was concerned, with a request for a conference; but the House did not agree to the conference that was asked for, so that I had to move for a conference upon this item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

OPERATIONS OF UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I request that Senate Resolution 170 be taken from the table, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BURSUM. What is the resolution?

Mr. KING. Let it be read. I am asking that the resolution be taken from the table and immediately considered. It will take only a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution, which had been submitted by Mr. KING February 22, 1924, was read and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board is directed to inform the Senate whether the board, through the Emergency Fleet Corporation or otherwise, is a member of or is represented in the North Atlantic and United Kingdom Conference, Eastbound, having an office at No. 8 Bridge Street, New York City; whether said board has participated through said conference in raising the rates on ocean freight from American ports or in restricting or attempting to restrict ports of sailing of Shipping Board vessels for the purpose of diverting trade from American ports to Canadian ports or otherwise; whether said conference is maintaining charges for the transportation of ocean freight, particularly on American agricultural products, at higher charges than would be paid on open competitive rates; whether the board regards the arbitrary fixing of rates by said conference as a violation of the antitrust laws of the United States; whether the board has prevented or attempted to prevent operators of vessels owned by the board from withdrawing from said conference; whether the board has knowledge that the British Board of Trade discriminates, by rebates or deferred rebates, to British shipping through said North Atlantic and United Kingdom Conference, Eastbound; and whether the board has knowledge of discrimination against American shipping by withholding insurance from American shipping, or by granting preferential rates to British shipping by British insurance companies; and that said board is further directed to transmit to the Senate all documents, correspondence, and records in its possession relating to the premises, including the minutes of meetings of said North Atlantic and United Kingdom Conference, Eastbound, in which said board or its representatives have participated.

PENSIONS AND INCREASES OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that during the fiscal years from 1922 to 1924 the following numbers of veterans of the Civil War passed away:

1922	25,082
1923	25,452
1924 (8 months)	13,906

64,440

That during the same fiscal years widows of veterans of the Civil War passed away as follows:

1922	21,259
1923	23,947
1924 (8 months)	13,474

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is referring to fiscal years?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; fiscal years. In all, of veterans and widows of veterans, 123,120 have died since 1922.

I desire further to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that of widows of veterans of the Civil War there are 12,215 of the age of 74; there are 15,000 of the age of 75; there are 15,000 of the age of 76; there are 14,000 of the age of 77; there are 13,000 of the age of 78; there are 14,000 of the age of 79; there are 18,000 of the age of 80; there are 14,000 of the age of 81; there are 8,000 of the age of 82; there are 3,000 of the age of 83; there are 4,000 of the age of 84; there are 3,909 of the age of 85; there are 488 who are 94 years of age. There are, all told, 157,000 widows of Civil War veterans over the age of 74.

The amount of pension now being received by these people is wholly inadequate. The old veterans, and the widows of veterans, have for two years been petitioning Congress to grant them a raise. A bill was passed through the last Congress granting a raise, but it did not become a law. A bill looking to that end is now upon the calendar, and has been on the calendar for some time. These veterans are entitled to some consideration. Petitions have been sent in from every Grand Army post in the United States, and by posts of Spanish war veterans, urging the passage of the bill. The bill as reported has the indorsement of all veterans' organizations.

It seems to me that the least we can do is to bring the bill up for consideration and have it disposed of. I therefore move that the bill (S. 5), granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, be taken up for consideration at this time.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not take that bill up.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I submit that the motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is next the order. Motions to take up bills on the calendar are not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. If this motion shall not prevail, we will proceed, then, to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is the next order of business for the Senate, unless the Senate otherwise directs.

Mr. KING. Would it be permissible to move as a substitute that we proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that that would not be in order, because no such motion would be necessary, as the calendar under Rule VIII is the next order of business.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edwards	King	Robinson
Ball	Ernst	Ladd	Sheppard
Borah	Ferris	Lodge	Shields
Brandagee	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Brookhart	Frazier	McKinley	Shortridge
Broussard	George	McLean	Smith
Burce	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Bursum	Hale	Mayfield	Spencer
Cameron	Harrell	Moses	Stanfield
Capper	Harris	Neely	Stephens
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Swanson
Copeland	Hedlin	Oddie	Wadsworth
Conzans	Howell	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Phippa	Warren
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Watson
Dill	Kendrick	Ralston	Willis
Edge	Keyes	Ransdell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, there ought not to be any objection to the passage of the pending measure. The Senate a year ago passed a bill far more liberal than the one now presented to the Senate. The rates contained in the bill, to my mind, are very reasonable. For instance, in the bill which passed the Senate last year there was a flat increase given to all widows of the Civil War, making their pensions $50 a month. Under the pending bill only widows of 74 years of age are given a raise of $15 a month, which means a total pension of $45 a month, $5 less than the Senate gave when it passed the bill last year as to all widows. Widows between 60 and 74 years of age are given a $5 increase. Widows under 60 years of age are given no increase whatever. There are no additional veterans of the Civil War placed on the pension roll.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. There is no change. The date we fix in this bill is the same as the present law, namely, 1905, regarding the time of marriage of a veteran's widow. I yield now to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Did not President Harding veto the bill that we passed last year?

Mr. BURSUM. It was a far different measure. There is no connection between that bill and the pending bill. This is a far less expensive bill and far less liberal in its provisions than the other bill. I would say that this bill represents the very minimum that a policy of human decency would permit the Senate to approve.

Mr. DIAL. As a matter of fact, he did veto a bill along the same line last year, did he not?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, no; not along the same line. He vetoed a pension bill. The cost of this bill is one-half of what the other bill was. It is a far different bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it not a fact that the specific grounds alleged by the Executive for his veto of the bill then passed are omitted specifically and definitely from this bill?

Mr. BURSUM. They are definitely omitted, and none of the provisions of the former bill to which he made objection are retained in this bill. Furthermore, this bill is less liberal. It gives a less increase than the other bill did, even that portion of the bill which was not objected to by the President. It does not place an additional widow on the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator specify just the objectionable features in the other bill that are not included in this bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly. The features objected to by the President in the former bill were that it extended pensions to widows beyond 1915; that it also provided for pensions for widows for the future, with the proviso which required that the woman should have been married at least two years and should have lived with the veteran until his death. Those provisions related to pensions to those becoming widows after 1915 and even in the future. The pending bill makes no provision for placing any additional widows on the rolls. The provisions are the same as the law now in effect, namely, that a widow who was married to a veteran in 1905 or before is entitled to a pension. There is no portion of the bill to which the President found objection that is contained in the present measure.

Furthermore, the aggregate cost of the present bill is approximately one-half of the bill which was passed by the Congress last year, even though it includes and takes in all of the Spanish war veterans and Indian war veterans. The total gross cost of the bill would be approximately $55,000,000. The total appropriations which will be required would not be out of line with what we have already expended for war pensions. For instance, in 1921 we expended $258,000,000; in 1922, $253,000,000; and in 1923, $263,000,000. The total appropriation that would be required for the first year under the operation of this bill would not exceed $277,000,000.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. When was the last increase in pensions granted to these people?

Mr. BURSUM. In 1920.

Mr. DIAL. A most magnificent increase was granted then, was it not?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes; a far larger increase than we are proposing now; but it must be recalled that age is an element of disability.

Mr. DIAL. The increase in 1920 carried $65,000,000 additional, did it not?

Mr. BURSUM. The increase in 1920 was $43,000,000. This bill would only increase $14,000,000 over 1923. In fact it would be less than $14,000,000 over the amount of the appropriation for 1923. I undertake to say that by 1925 the cost will be less than it was in 1923 on account of the deaths. The death rate is very large, and while the number diminishes, yet the inability of the veterans is far greater and their needs are greater as they become older.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire of the Senator how it is that deaths are so frequent and the number so enormously diminished year after year and yet we keep increasing the amount of pensions paid? What is the increase now provided in the bill over the amount provided in the act of 1920 per pensioner?

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator mean the number?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not the number, but the amount.

Mr. BURSUM. The amount of the appropriation?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amount for each individual pension.

Mr. BURSUM. It would be approximately a little over $35,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; that is not my question. Suppose a man or widow was drawing a pension in 1920; what is the increase now over what he or she was drawing then? Under this bill what will be the amount of the increase?

Mr. BURSUM. Over 1920?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. As I said, the increase over 1920 would be approximately $40,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am speaking about each pensioner, each individual drawing a pension.

Mr. BURSUM. The widows under 60 years of age would get no increase, the widows between 60 and 74 years of age would get a $5 increase, and the widows over 74 years of age would get a $15 increase over the amount paid in 1920.

It must be also considered that since the 1920 act was passed many of the Spanish War veterans have become eligible for pensions, and it is natural to expect that there will be an increase, although there is not a net increase for 1923 as compared with 1922. There was a net decrease of all pensions, including the Spanish War veterans, Regular Army, and Civil War, and all other classes of veterans and widows. There was a net increase of 8,000 in 1923. There were large increases of veterans who served during the Spanish War. There was a large number of pensioners who had served during the Civil War who were dropped from the rolls on account of death. The death list is increasing very much.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's argument, but I am wondering whether he has available figures which show the death rate among the pensioners, particularly the survivors of the Civil War. I am impressed by the fact that if we are to have additional pension legislation it should be enacted very soon because of the rapidity with which the old soldiers are passing away.

Mr. BURSUM. I gave the figures for the last three years.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not hear them when the Senator gave them.

Mr. BURSUM. There have been dropped from the pension rolls of Civil War veterans and widows since 1922 and including eight months of the fiscal year 1924, 123,119. The estimated losses for this year are 26,000. There is no doubt, when one takes into consideration the age of the veterans and of the widows, that we may expect a far more rapid death rate than we have had at any time in the past. For instance, there are 12,000 widows 74 years of age; of widows 75 years of age there are 15,475; of widows 76 years of age there are 15,076; and so on up to the age of 81, running close on to 14,000 and 15,000. There is no doubt that the losses will be greatly increased in the very near future. The average age of the veterans is 81 years.

The widows are not young widows. There has been some talk about granting pensions to young widows who were designing women who had hooked a veteran for the sake of his pension. There is nothing of that kind covered by the bill. I may say that the talk about young widows is largely buncombe. For instance, there are 488 widows 42 years of age, which is the youngest age of any of the widows. There are 488 of respective ages, 43 to 52 years of age. The number is very insignificant.

This bill if enacted will equalize the pensions which are paid to children of veterans. At the present time there is great discrimination between the pensions which are allowed the children of veterans. For instance, the child of a veteran of the Regular Establishment is entitled to $2 a month, the child of a veteran of the Spanish war is entitled to $4 a month, the child of a veteran of the Civil War is entitled to $6 a month, while the first child of a veteran of the World War is entitled to $10 a month. This bill seeks to equalize that discrimination. Surely there should be no difference as to the amount allowed children of veterans, whether it be the child of a World War veteran or of a Spanish war veteran or of a Civil War veteran or of a veteran of any other war. This bill seeks to equalize the treatment accorded to children of war veterans, and allows $8 a month to the child of the veterans of all wars.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. DALE. Is it not a fact that the decrease in the number of pensioners caused by death in the years to come will much more than offset any increase in appropriations which may be occasioned by the passage of the pending bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly. Within three years the total expenditures for pensions under this bill will be less than what they are now under the present law. There will be no increase after the second year. That will all be taken care of by the decrease in the number on the pension roll, as it has been in the past.

I do not think that a total expenditure of $275,000,000 in order to take care of 540,000 veterans and widows of veterans is such an unreasonable amount. I think there are, perhaps, 600,000 veterans of the World War who are now drawing compensation; and, including hospitalization, if I am not mistaken, the appropriations for their payment have run from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 annually. This bill proposes to take care of twice the number of persons with less than one-half the amount of appropriations.

I submit that the veterans of the Civil War, of the Spanish war, and of other wars, and their widows, are human; they must live. If we are to take care of them we ought to take care of them decently. To fail to take care of the aged veterans of the Civil War and their widows would simply be an exhibition of inhumanity which I can not conceive for a moment would be entertained by any Member of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator that the percentage he states is not quite accurate, because the veterans of the World War who are getting compensation and hospitalization are veterans who were injured, who have suffered disability in the line of service.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; they have suffered disability; they are disabled, of course, and they are entitled to compensation; but so are the veterans of other wars disabled, and so are their widows disabled. They are unable to provide for themselves. Age is just as much an element of disability as is a wound. The question involved here is one of principle. It is a question of whether the Government will take care of its defenders, of those who bared their breasts in time of peril when we needed them most. A government which will not take care of its defenders is not much of a government and it will not long retain its prestige and power.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. This bill, as I understand, is similar to the bill which was passed by the Senate at the last session?

Mr. BURSUM. It is only similar in that it is a pension bill. It grants, however, to the veterans of the Civil War the same rate of $72 a month, as a maximum.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is this similar to the bill which failed of passage?

Mr. BURSUM. No. This bill will cost but one-half of what that bill would have cost had it been enacted. This bill gives an increase of pension to widows who are 74 years of age and over of only $15 and only $5 increase to those who are between 60 years of age and 74, and no increase to those who are below 60 years of age.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought this was similar to the bill which was introduced late in the last session and which passed the Senate after the President had vetoed the bill, which had previously passed Congress.

Mr. BURSUM. It is very similar, except that it is less liberal than was the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What I was going to say was that I do not believe there is much opposition to the bill, it having been discussed in the last session; so if the Senator would recite a few of the changes which the bill proposes in the present law, he might be able to get a vote on the bill very shortly and have the bill sent to the other House.

Mr. BURSUM. Surely there ought not to be any opposition to the bill. If the Senate was willing to pass the former bill, as it did, it ought to be willing to pass this bill.

I have stated the changes proposed to be made by the pending bill as to veterans of the Civil War and the widows of veterans of the Civil War, and I have also stated the provisions relating to the children of veterans of all wars. There is a change relating to veterans of the Spanish war; they are given an increase. Under this bill they will be given from $20 as a minimum up to $50 in proportion to their disabilities. Fifty dollars is the maximum proposed for total disability, and $20 is the minimum. That is the change which the bill proposes with reference to Spanish-war veterans. The Indian-war veterans are given identically the same increases and the same amount of pension as provided for the veterans of the Spanish war.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is very fair and just and proper. I think those veterans all ought to be on the same plane.

Mr. BURSUM. We are proposing to give them identically the same treatment as other war veterans receive.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My impression is that my colleague [Mr. McLEAN] has submitted an amendment to the Senator's bill. Has the Senator considered that amendment?

Mr. BURSUM. I have not. What was the nature of the amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I really do not know. Some one wrote me from home that my colleague had submitted such an amendment, and I did not know but that he had conferred with the Senator from New Mexico about it. I did not know whether the Senator's bill as it now stood covered the point.

Mr. BURSUM. I understood that that was an amendment to Senate bill 33, which is a different bill and relates to the retirement of emergency officers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is possible the Senator is right about that.

Mr. BURSUM. I know of no such amendment to this bill.

Mr. President, I have recited practically all the provisions which the bill covers. The bill will also take in, as is estimated, approximately 1,000 veterans who served the country in organizations known as militia. Under the bill they are placed upon the same status as Civil War veterans, but they must have served 90 days. They ought to have been pensioned long ago, and many of them were pensioned prior to 1874. The portion of the bill will probably involve approximately 1,000 additional pensions.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] called up for consideration and had passed a resolution making certain inquiries of the Shipping Board. That resolution raises some very important questions, and I think it appropriate to address some observations to the subject of ocean freight rates, trans-Atlantic rate conferences, parities, neutral and initiative commodities, with basis of rates between North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf ports. I think I am in a position to supply a portion of the information called for by the resolution, having before me reports from the Shipping Board with reference especially to the so-called conferences.

Before proceeding with that subject let me say that I noticed in the newspapers that the President has recently appointed at least two advisory committees with a view of making a study and perhaps submitting recommendations particularly on the subject of the coordination of water and rail transportation and on the subject of the replacement needs of the American merchant marine. My impression is that all of the information which it is desired to have these special committees cover is available already. I remember in the hearings last year on the ship subsidy bill it developed that the Shipping Board had spent a great deal of money employing experts, special counsel, and investigators to perform research work and collect and compile data on almost every phase of the subject of the merchant marine. I have not any doubt but what there are thousands and thousands of pages of reports resulting from the studies and research work which the board has carried on in order fully to inform itself regarding the whole subject and in order that it might be in a position to recommend legislation to Congress.

The question of replacement has all been thoroughly considered and investigated by the Shipping Board, all this at no little expense to the Government, and after great labor on the part of the board itself in these fields; so I am quite confident that all the information that the special committee now chosen have been sent out to collect and submit can be found on file in the records of the Shipping Board to-day.

Of course, I have no objection to any further studies, or to the good advice of special committees. It may be that in some way conditions have to some extent changed since the last investigations were made. It may be that all these authorities on merchant marine and shipping are somewhat out of date in some respects; but I doubt if there is anything new that can be offered and can be developed by these committees and these special inquiries. The whole collection of material, studies, and research on this subject of shipping, from Noah's Ark down to date, can be found in the Shipping Board's records and files; and I question very much if we are going to accomplish a great deal in this direction by the work of special committees.

There is, of course, no disposition on the part of anyone to minimize or obstruct any efforts that may be put forth to establish and maintain on a sound basis an adequate American merchant marine.

I find in the New York Sun of March 14, 1924, another article on the subject of ship sales. Not a great while ago I had occasion to refer to some sales that had been made by the Shipping Board, and to a certain policy which seemed to have actuated the former board, and which I hoped would not be so marked during the present administration of Shipping Board affairs. This clipping from the New York Sun is headed:

Roosevelt ships are built abroad.

Four vessels to be placed in round-world run.

In this clipping it is said:

Kermitt Roosevelt, president of the Roosevelt Lines, announced yesterday that his company is building four motor ships in England. They will be delivered this spring and placed on a round-the-world run in a joint service with a Japanese steamship company. All four of the vessels are owned by the Kerr-Roosevelt interests.

Each ship is 11,000 tons, of 3,500 horsepower, capable of attaining a speed of 11 knots an hour.

The clipping further says:

Mr. Roosevelt said his company had tried to buy some ships from the United States Shipping Board, but was unsuccessful.

The first question which suggests itself is, Why build abroad?

With American yards idle and well equipped, why should American citizens not build ships here?

I am not sure whether or not it was this company, but some company, according to information which I believe is absolutely accurate, offered the Shipping Board, for instance, for the William Penn, $606,000. This was about $75 a gross ton. The terms were one-third cash and the balance in five years at 4½ per cent interest. This was a very much better offer than they obtained for "the President" ships, which were sold to the Dollar Line. There the Shipping Board sold some of the finest ships we had at $50 per gross ton, and the terms, which were accepted, were 11 years at 4 per cent.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say something about allowing $50 pensions? Is the Senator talking about pensions?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I am talking about shipping—the sale of ships.

Mr. BURSUM. I will advise the Senator that the pension bill is up for consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am much obliged to the Senator for that information. I quite understood it. I am inclined to think that the matter I am presenting now can not very well wait. It ought to be discussed to-day. No doubt the Senator's pension bill will have due consideration. Surely he did not expect to pass it in an hour or two this morning. We will have every opportunity to vote for the bill, and to see that it is passed. I have not any question but that it will get very prompt action; but I see no reason why we can not allude to some other subjects for a very short while. There will be plenty of time for the pension bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. I beg the Senator's pardon for having suggested the propriety of considering the subject before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite understand what is before the Senate, and I think I am quite within the proprieties and within the practice and the customs of the Senate; and therefore I wish to proceed with the consideration of this matter, which I should have been glad to present immediately following the passage of the resolution offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] this morning, because I have here some of the very identical information which that resolution calls for, and I am approaching it just as rapidly as I can.

I mention the sale of these President ships at about $50 a gross ton on 11 years' time and at 4 per cent interest. No cash at all was paid at the time, but there was a two-year letter of credit for the partial cash payment. Since we are anxious to get the ships into private ownership, I can not quite understand why the board should turn down a proposition of $606,000 for the William Penn, and sell these magnificent cargo and passenger ships, "the President" ships, at about $25 a ton less than the offer for the William Penn. However, I make no criticism about it, because I understand that the policy of the board—and a very proper policy it is, too—is to reserve the right to specify and attach as a condition of the sale the placing of the ships in service which they consider important to be engaged in, and also requirements as to both flag and route; and it is perhaps those conditions that interfered with the acceptance of the offer made for the William Penn. I recognize that each transaction ought to stand upon its own merits, and that without full details as to the transaction we have no right to criticize it. I am simply calling attention to the fact, as indicated here, that an effort was made by this line to buy United States Shipping Board ships, and they say they were unsuccessful. The offer which they made for the William Penn, as I say, was $75 a ton, or about that, and the Shipping Board declined it, although they did sell the President ships to the Dollar Line for about $50 a gross ton, and although they did sell the City of Los Angeles last year for $100,000, when they had recently spent on her nearly that amount in furnishings alone, and had spent within three years over two and a half million dollars in putting her in condition.

The statement has been made, too, as I gather from the papers, that the Interstate Commerce Commission has put into effect section 28 of the merchant marine act of 1920. That is an important step. Section 28 of that act provides:

That no common carrier shall charge, collect, or receive for transportation subject to the interstate commerce act of persons or property under any joint rate, fare, or charge, or under any export, import, or other proportional rate, fare, or charge, which is based in whole or in part on the fact that the persons or property affected thereby is to be transported to, or has been transported from, any port in a possession or dependency of the United States, or in a foreign country, by a carrier by water in foreign commerce, any lower rate, fare, or charge than that charged, collected, or received by it for the transportation of persons, or a like kind of property, for the same distance, in the same direction, and over the same route, in connection with commerce wholly within the United States, unless the vessel so transporting such persons or property is, or unless it was at the time of such transportation by water, documented under the laws of the United States. Whenever the board is of the opinion, however, that adequate shipping facilities to or from any port in a possession or dependency of the United States or a foreign country are not afforded by vessels so documented, it shall certify this fact to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission may, by order, suspend the operation of the provisions of this section with respect to the rates, fares, and charges for the transportation by rail of persons and property transported from, or to be transported to, such ports, for such length of time and under such terms and conditions as it may prescribe in such order, or in any order supplemental thereto. Such suspension of operation of the provisions of this section may be terminated by order of the commission whenever the board is of the opinion that adequate shipping facilities by such vessels to such ports are afforded and shall so certify to the commission.

They have made that certificate, and the commission has ordered section 28 put into effect. That is an important step, and I think it will mean a very considerable benefit to the American merchant marine. I can very well understand how foreign lines and foreign interests object to it; but it is clearly within our rights and clearly within our duty, I think, for us to legislate in a way that will, at least, prevent preference being given to foreign lines over our own lines in the matter of foreign commerce.

The fact that the putting into effect of section 28 arouses some criticism and opposition on the part of our competitors does not particularly disturb me. It simply shows that it is a valuable piece of legislation which has stood upon our statute books without effect since 1920, which was intended to be of benefit to the American merchant marine, and will prove of benefit to the American merchant marine; and for that reason our competitors do not care to have it put into operation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not want to divert the Senator's attention from the matter which he is developing and from the purpose for which he rose; but I should like to ask the Senator, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, if there is any prospect of any shipping legislation at this session? I find the people along the Atlantic seaboard very much dissatisfied with the present policy of the Government. They consider it an unsettled policy. They think the Government is neither in nor out of the shipping business; and there is an earnest desire and wish among the business interests, the shipping interests of the country, and those interested in an American merchant marine that there shall be a definite, fixed policy. Is there any prospect whatever of any legislation to that end at this session?

Mr. FLETCHER. Frankly, I must say to the Senator that I do not see very much hope for any legislation along that line at this season. I wish I could say otherwise. Some bills have been introduced in the House and some in the Senate which embody some very important features, and some of them, I think, ought to be passed; but I have not seen indications up to this time that they are being given very serious consideration.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What is the reason? Is it because private shipping interests have influence enough to prevent our Government from declaring an independent policy of its own?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think undoubtedly that is the great influence that is being exercised.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Hidden, subtle, indirect influence?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so, in a measure, unquestionably.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Preventing affirmative action by our Government in developing a merchant marine?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not be surprised, if we could get to the bottom of it, to find that underneath and underlying that influence the Senator mentions are foreign shipping interests and foreign financial interests.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is almost incredible.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will show very shortly, when I get to it, that foreign interests control this North Atlantic conference in which we are participating, and I think it will appear before I finish that all these conferences in which we participate are dominated by foreign interests.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. With the result that we have absolutely no American shipping policy?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is about the situation. I have urged that we take our position firmly now, and let the world know that this Government is going to own and operate merchant ships to meet the needs of our overseas commerce. That is the only definite position I can see we can take now, in these circumstances.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The one lesson we ought to have learned from the war was the importance and necessity of having merchant-marine ships in time of war to take care of our trade, and to transport our troops, if necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We seem to have taken no advantage of the lesson that was brought home to us so clearly at that time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite true. I do hope, among other things, that the bill which is pending in the House, and upon which they have had hearings, with reference to a replacement policy, the "Dieselizing" of our ships, will be considered by both Houses, and it ought to be passed at this session so that we can take advantage of conditions which enable us to equip, construct, and put into service ships having the very latest and most economical type of machinery the world affords. I think that measure ought to be agreed to, and perhaps it will be. But at present, it seems to me, there is a discouraging lack of interest in outlining and writing into our law just what we mean to do with reference to our ships.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest to the Senator that I hope he will take an early opportunity to present his views in full to the Senate on that subject. I do not know of any man in this Chamber who has studied the question more intimately, who has a wider range of knowledge about it, and I really think the Senator could not render a better public service than to put before the country the present situation in regard to our shipping policy, and point out the causes of inaction upon the part of the administration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am much obliged to the Senator, and before I finish I shall endeavor to offer some thoughts on that subject. It is a most important subject. The people of this country have put $4,000,000,000 into this thing, and they want to know what is being done with it, what it all means, and what to expect from it; whether they are going to have an adequate merchant marine for their national defense, and for the handling of their foreign commerce.

The joint conference, to which I have referred, is to meet very soon, in April. As I have said, we have put into effect section 28 of the merchant marine act of 1920. It is vitally important, therefore, that the situation to which I shall refer in detail should be presented, and I feel that to-day is the time for me to make plain a condition which calls for correction, because this thing has gone on for four or five years, under remonstrances and under protests, with all the facts perfectly well known, and it is inconceivable that the discriminations which I will point out very soon should be allowed to continue any further.

I am not discouraged by reason of the fact so often referred to, which the former Shipping Board shouted from the house-tops, and almost boasted about, that our ships have lost money; that they are not being operated at a profit. I have before me some pages from Fairplay for February 28, 1924, wherein it is shown that with few exceptions all British shipping companies are losing money. Senators will probably be surprised to know that practically every voyage of the great P. & O. Line last year resulted in a loss. The P. & O. Line, running from England to the Far East and Australia, is probably the largest British shipping company in existence.

Lord Inchcape, who is chairman, stands at the very top of the shipping men in England.

That statement, at page 541, which I have marked, from Fairplay, I ask to have inserted in the Record without reading. It gives the details of the various voyages, and it shows that the shipping companies of this great maritime nation, the greatest in the world, have been losing money right along for a year past, at least on their shipping, on practically every voyage made by these steamers owned in Great Britain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From Fairplay, February 28, 1924.]

Now, seeing that in the case of the P. & O. practically every voyage last year resulted in a loss, the directors apparently—I have to put it that way, thanks to the hide-and-seek fashion in which the accounts are presented—had to make up the deficiency from the reserves included under the head of sundry creditors.

I have received statements of accounts signed by chartered accountants of the results of the voyages during the year 1923 of the whole of the vessels owned by eight different companies, and have summarized them below. I would point out that the figures as to profit or loss have been arrived at before providing for management expenses, depreciation, interest, salaries, office rent, or taxation, while as to capital employed it will be seen that, with vessels standing in the books at £10,403,000 after 5 per cent per annum had been written off for depreciation, there is a net loss of £194,646, equal to 1.87 per cent. These figures clearly show how shipowners have been hit by the depression and how essential it is that they should resist any claim which seeks to make them responsible for the higher wages demanded.

I have also had an opportunity of going through the whole of the accounts of the voyages made by the steamers owned by 50 different companies. Practically the whole of the voyages have resulted in a loss, and this is without charging anything for depreciation or interest on capital at stake. I have summarized, at random, the results of some of the trips, which include coasting vessels in the short sea trades, boats trading to the Mediterranean, and those going to America, the Plate, and Australia, and give them below. These figures could all have been placed before the court of inquiry, and could have been substantiated by auditors' certificates. In only one or two cases out of hundreds of voyages are very small profits shown—

Judging from the accounts of the Great Western Railway Co., the steamers owned by the railway companies have done badly during the past 12 months. The company owns 17 steamers, of 6,971 tons net and 59,300 indicated horsepower, and which cost £481,080. During the year the gross receipts amounted to £279,260 and the expenses, including depreciation and insurance, to £324,236, thus showing a loss of £44,976, against a loss of £81,425 in 1922. In view of the fact that the depreciation and insurance funds for steamers stand at £820,297, or £339,000 more than the vessels cost, the necessity for writing off £68,231 for depreciation and insurance was not urgent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, these are conditions which are world-wide, and we could not expect to be conducting the shipping business profitably now, because commerce is not moving. The situation is such that practically all countries have idle ships. Great Britain has something like a million tons tied up idle, and yet it is contended that because our Shipping Board has some nine or ten hundred vessels tied up and because they are not making a profit on those which are being operated—probably 300 or 400 vessels—it is demonstrated that we can not have a merchant marine in this country and that we ought to abandon this venture entirely.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If we accept the view that merchant ships are necessary for defense in time of war, the argument that the Government is operating at a loss is of no more weight than to argue that the Navy is operated in time of peace at a loss, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is undoubtedly correct about that; and if we learned one lesson out of this most gigantic and disastrous war of all time, it was the lesson which England and the whole world must have learned—that while the Royal Navy stood intact Great Britain would have been forced to her knees and out of that war within two weeks after the German submarines began their devastating work if she had not had her merchant ships.

It was the merchant ships of England which really saved her from defeat in that war. We ought to know that. We ourselves should not be left so that we will be dependent upon our competitors in foreign markets for bringing to us the things we need, in the first place, and for the carriage of our commerce overseas, and we ought not to be in a helpless condition in case war should ever come again. We must stand by this policy announced in the merchant marine act of 1920. We are pledged to establish an adequate merchant marine.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the reason for the first shipping act recommended by President Wilson, before we went into the war, was that American business could not get any ships anywhere to carry their goods, that the British ships and the other ships were taken off the sea, and we were powerless. We were without transportation facilities upon the sea, and the Government was forced into the business of building a merchant marine.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Now we are drifting into the condition from which we suffered then, so that when another war comes we will have no merchant ships, and we will be obliged to spend $4,000,000,000 or more in another useless adventure such as we have just made.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. Private enterprise could not have built those ships. The cry, not only throughout this country but all over the world, was for "more ships." The conditions were such that the Government had to go into the business of building ships. The Senator is correct, too, with regard to the increase of rates. When the German ships were tied up in the various ports of this country and abroad, and out of commission, when the British ships were commandeered largely for war uses, and the French and the Italian ships were needed at home, we had no ships to move our products, which were weighing down the warehouses and terminals everywhere on the Atlantic, Pacific, Gulf, and Great Lakes. We recall especially that the freight rate on wheat went from 8 cents a bushel to 50 cents a bushel from New York to Liverpool, and the rates on cotton went from $2.50 a bale to $50 a bale from Galveston to Liverpool. So it was all along the line.

Getting back to the subject of these ocean freight rates and conference agreements, in January I called on the Shipping Board for information respecting various rate conferences having to do with traffic to and from the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf, and the United Kingdom and continental Europe.

On January 23, 1924, Admiral Palmer, president of the Fleet Corporation, replied, and submitted data, which reply and statement I ask to have incorporated in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[See Appendix 1.]

Mr. FLETCHER. In February I requested further information of the Shipping Board, and Chairman O'Connor replied on February 23, and I ask to have his communication and statement also incorporated at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[See Appendix 2.]

Mr. FLETCHER. On March 1, at page 3405 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I made reference to the subject, and placed in the Record an extract from the Traffic World and comment thereon by Mr. R. L. McKellar, to which I would direct the attention of all concerned without repeating. I would especially pointed out what Mr. McKellar said—page 3405—in giving examples of existing distances in mileage and ocean rates as between North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf ports.

I have referred this data received from the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation to foreign freight traffic and rate experts, and obtained what would seem to be a clear and accurate analysis of that material showing the situation, which calls for correction without further delay, as follows:

TRANSATLANTIC OCEAN RATES AND DIFFERENTIALS.

An analysis of conference committee data submitted by President Palmer in his letter of January 23 reveals the following outstanding points:

1. Ocean rates to United Kingdom ports are under the jurisdiction and control of the North Atlantic-United Kingdom freight conference.
2. Ocean rates to continental ports are under the jurisdiction and control of the North Atlantic-continental freight conference.
3. Transatlantic ocean rates from North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf ports are under the jurisdiction and control of a joint conference committee composed of the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf conferences, and when changes are made in rates, differentials, or parities, the unanimous concurrence on the part of the three conferences is required.
4. To arrive at a joint working arrangement between the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf groups of ports commodities are classed as follows:
 - (a) North Atlantic initiative commodities.
 - (b) South Atlantic and Gulf initiative commodities.
 - (c) Neutral commodities.
5. North Atlantic initiative commodities are supposedly commodities largely peculiar to the North Atlantic district, and the North Atlantic district may change the rates on these commodities without the concurrence of South Atlantic and Gulf districts.
6. Gulf and South Atlantic initiative commodities are supposedly commodities largely peculiar to South Atlantic and Gulf districts, and the Gulf and South Atlantic districts may change these rates without the concurrence of North Atlantic district.
7. Neutral commodities are commodities which are not considered peculiar to any one district, and no district can change a rate on a neutral commodity without obtaining concurrence of the other districts.
8. Fixed differentials or parities have been established as between North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf districts, and when any rate is changed by the district having the initiative such change is automatically followed by the other districts in accordance with differentials as fixed.
9. No change in the differential on any commodity as between the three districts can be made without the unanimous concurrence of the three districts.
10. No provision is made for independent action on the part of any district or any member steamship line.

11. In determining rates ocean distance and steaming time are not the sole factors, but all operating costs, as well as competitive transportation and commercial conditions, are considered.

NORTH ATLANTIC-UNITED KINGDOM FREIGHT CONFERENCE.

This conference was formed in February, 1918, by the Glasgow, London, Liverpool, Manchester lines, which since 1901 had more or less operated as individual unities. Since December, 1919, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and since October, 1920, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine (Ltd.), although not members, have attended meetings and cooperated with member lines.

This conference has no officers. All matters for consideration are dealt with at meetings by the conference as a whole or referred to committees appointed from time to time as occasion requires. Sidney E. Morse acts in the capacity of secretary with offices at 8-10 Bridge Street, New York City.

Its membership is composed entirely of British lines, 15 in number, with the exception of one British-Norwegian line. Canadian Government lines and six United States Shipping Board lines are permitted to sit in and cooperate, but with no rights or voice as members.

In other words, the establishment and maintenance of eastbound ocean rates from North Atlantic ports to United Kingdom ports is wholly under the control of British lines. As American lines have no voice in the establishment of these rates from North Atlantic ports it automatically follows under the general conference plan that South Atlantic and Gulf ports have no voice whatever, which means that in the field of competition their winning chance is comparable to the proverbial wooden-legged man in a foot race.

NORTH ATLANTIC-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CONFERENCE.

This conference was formed March 9, 1922, and is composed of 10 member lines of which 4 are United States Shipping Board lines, 1 other United States ownership, and 2 other joint United States and foreign ownership. The majority membership is, therefore, foreign, and 8 out of 16 members are either British or associate British. It has no officers, with the exception of a secretary, who acts in the same capacity for the United Kingdom conference.

While American flag lines are members of this conference, with rightful voice as such, still they are in the minority, and as they are not a controlling force in establishing eastbound ocean rates to the Continent, it naturally follows that the South Atlantic and Gulf have little, if any, voice in establishing these rates.

SOUTH ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP CONFERENCE.

This conference was formed in March, 1920. The chairmanship rotates, each member acting as chairman for one week. Its secretary, with office at Savannah, is the only elected officer. Its membership is about equally divided between United States Shipping Board lines and foreign lines, but as American flag lines have little or no voice in establishing ocean rates from North Atlantic ports, it naturally follows that the South Atlantic conference lines have even less voice.

GULF SHIPPING CONFERENCE.

This conference was formed in March, 1920, and comprises a joint conference composed of a British conference of nine British lines and a Fleet Corporation-United Kingdom conference of four American lines. Its secretary is E. A. McGuirk, British, located at New Orleans, and the chairmanship alternates between British and American. A sub-conference is located at Galveston with an assistant secretary. As the majority of the membership of this conference is British and largely composed of subsidiary lines controlled by British parent companies with head offices in New York, it naturally follows that the Gulf conference has little or no voice in establishment of rates other than to adopt what is fixed at New York.

GULF FRENCH ATLANTIC HAMBURG RANGE CONFERENCE.

This conference was formed in March, 1920. Its chairman is selected each meeting by the members. The secretary is at New Orleans, and a subconference is located at Galveston with an assistant secretary, these two latter officers being the same as the Gulf Shipping conference. The Gulf French Atlantic Hamburg Range Conference is composed of 20 members, 14 foreign and 6 Shipping Board lines. Its rate-making powers, like other South Atlantic and Gulf conferences, are controlled by the unanimous concurrence of the joint conference composed of the three districts, whose action in turn is controlled beyond a doubt by the North Atlantic Conference, which, in turn, is controlled beyond a doubt by foreign lines.

Apparently, the principal function of the South Atlantic and Gulf conferences, both in the establishment of rates and existing differentials, is, in brief, to acquiesce in what is proposed by the foreign controlled North Atlantic Conference. Shipping Board operators, regardless of their individual views, must necessarily, of course, voice the policy outlined for them by the Shipping Board organization at Washington.

The pyramided control of subsidiary lines by the chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation is no more complete than the interlocking directorate control of joint conference ocean rates by the North Atlantic Conference directed from London.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah? Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. The resolution which was adopted this morning, and which I had offered some time before, called attention to alleged combinations between the Shipping Board and various other trans-Atlantic shipping lines, some of which were owned by foreigners. The question has been asked me since then whether or not I had any information to show that Gulf lines were parties to the agreement to which I have referred, or any agreement with foreign ships as the result of which higher rates were charged or rates maintained. Has the Senator discussed that question and has he answered it in the speech he is making?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am answering it now. I have heretofore referred to it. I have not read, but have asked to have inserted in the Record without reading, a letter from Admiral Palmer, president of the Fleet Corporation, dated January 23, 1924, which gives the list of those participating in the North Atlantic United Kingdom fleet conference and the other conferences. Then I have asked to have inserted in the Record also a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board dated February 23, 1924, which gives a list of parties and other data handled by the conference.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit another inquiry?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If such an agreement has been entered into, participated in by the Shipping Board, what advantage is it to the American ships to have the Shipping Board; that is to say, if our own vessels, owned by the Government, enter into combinations for the purpose of maintaining or increasing marine rates, then the advantages which some have claimed for a Government-owned and operated fleet, it seems to me, would be nonexistent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, beyond any question, marine conferences might be considered advantageous, so as to prevent anything like a rate war, for instance. I have no question that any conference is of advantage to a shipping enterprise that has already an established business, but I doubt if conferences are of the advantage to a line that has to go out and hunt business. I doubt very much if the conference would be of any advantage to the Shipping Board at all.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator appreciates that under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution we could legislate, if we had not already done so, to prevent common carriers from combining for the purpose of maintaining or increasing rates. Indeed we have taken over the control of rates by setting up the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they have established their regulations which must be complied with. If we fix rates for interstate commerce on land, does the Senator think that it is of advantage to the American exporter and the American importer and the American public generally to permit these combinations of shippers engaged in marine transportation for the purpose of maintaining rates? Do we not thereby violate the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. FLETCHER. I doubt very much if there is any violation of the Sherman antitrust law. I doubt if that law would apply to conferences having to do with overseas trade on the high seas. But we have provided the machinery in our legislation with respect to ships, that is, the shipping act, the merchant marine act, and various other laws we have enacted, which give authority and power to the Shipping Board to see that there are no violations of law in the practice of shipping lines using our ports and to protect our own shipping against combinations which existed prior to our legislation on the subject and prior to our becoming interested in ships as a Government; combinations, for instance, which resulted in the establishment of what were called fighting ships, sent out especially to prevent any independent action in the way of bringing about competition with old established lines. That authority we vested in the Shipping Board. It seems to me it is the function which thus far they have failed fully to appreciate. The main use of the Shipping Board, it seems to me, from now on will be to enforce the laws with reference to ocean rates and prevent the violation of laws such as the Senator suggests. I think instead of its being, perhaps, in conflict with the Sherman antitrust law, such a thing as he suggests is in conflict with other laws by which we have created an agency in the Shipping Board to correct; and I am trying to invoke the activities of the Shipping Board in taking steps to prevent occurring what the Senator has indicated there might be danger in.

I have heretofore alluded to the situation with reference to these conferences, and I think it is clearly shown by the analysis which I have offered here and the data which have been furnished me and the examination of that material that the North Atlantic conference is now under the absolute control of British interests, dictated from London, and that is the conference that is fixing the ocean rates.

PARITIES, NEUTRAL, AND INITIATIVE COMMODITIES.

The list of parities, neutral, and initiative commodities, as submitted by Chairman O'Connor in his letter of February 23, shows commodities taking parity rates from North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf ports as numbering 23. With the exception of tobacco, these commodities are largely unimportant, and six of them are limited to Pacific coast origin.

The list of neutral commodities on which the initiative in rate making lies with either of the three conferences but requires concurrence of other conferences numbers 14. These commodities are largely unimportant and so interwoven with parity commodities as to be confusing.

The list of Gulf and South Atlantic initiative commodities numbers 19, consisting mainly of cotton, cottonseed products, lumber, and naval stores.

The Gulf and South Atlantic districts may change rates on this list of commodities without the concurrence of the North Atlantic; but on the three principal moving commodities, namely, cotton, lumber, and naval stores, the North Atlantic has fixed differentials under the South Atlantic and Gulf which automatically gives to the North Atlantic full protection on the principal moving southern commodities supposedly within the initiative of the South Atlantic and Gulf but in reality rendered favorable to the North Atlantic under the differential adjustment fixed by the North Atlantic; as, for example, the rate on cotton from the Gulf is 25 cents per hundred pounds higher than from the North Atlantic, which at times results in a higher ocean rate from Gulf to European ports than the combination from the Gulf to New York plus the differential rate New York to European ports.

NORTH ATLANTIC INITIATIVE COMMODITIES.

The North Atlantic conference does not list the commodities on which it has the initiative in rate making, except by process of elimination. Its initiative covers all commodities, regardless of origin, not included in the parity, neutral, and Gulf and South Atlantic initiative lists, and includes practically all the actively moving commodities from competitive territory except certain leading southern commodities on which the North Atlantic is protected by favorable differentials so adjusted as to operate automatically; as, for example, under the blanket inclusion of all other commodities the initiative on carbon black from Louisiana oil fields, at the back door of the Gulf, rests with foreign lines in New York the same as on any commodity manufactured in the New York metropolitan district. Another illustration is that last year southern mills adjacent to southern ports manufactured 64 per cent of the cotton manufactured in this country, and on this manufactured product the trans-Atlantic rates from South Atlantic ports were 7½ cents per hundred pounds and from Gulf ports 15 cents per hundred pounds higher than from North Atlantic ports.

In short, the progression of trans-Atlantic ocean rate control is substantially as follows:

1. On commodities originating in competitive territory in the Middle West and far West, the initiative and control is with the North Atlantic Conference and the North Atlantic Conference is controlled by foreign lines.
2. On important moving commodities originating in the South and peculiar to South Atlantic and Gulf ports, the initiative is with southern ports. This initiative, however, is nullified by differentials in favor of North Atlantic ports fixed by the North Atlantic Conference under control of foreign lines.

Prior to the war there was no American flag trans-Atlantic steamship service from South Atlantic ports and service from Gulf ports was largely subsidiary lines service controlled by foreign lines with main offices in New York. Therefore, it quite naturally followed that ocean rates were so adjusted as to favor North Atlantic ports, and primarily New York, from which the main trans-Atlantic foreign line service was operated.

After the war when American flag service was established from both South Atlantic and Gulf ports, the Shipping Board apparently adopted and published substantially what was offered by the North Atlantic Conference in the way of both rates and differentials, and after having done this it closed the door to the removal of discriminations against southern ports by entering a joint conference obligated to make no changes in existing rates or differentials without the unanimous concurrence of the three district conferences, with result that the North Atlantic Conference, having its own basis adopted by the Shipping Board for the South Atlantic and Gulf, occupies a fully protected position that can not be changed except by its own consent, whereas the South Atlantic and Gulf, with a grossly discriminating adjustment saddled upon it, is powerless to protect its interests, except by independent notice which is prohibited.

At the close of the war when cargo offerings from all ports were largely in excess of ship tonnage a differential of 15 cents per hundred pounds from the Gulf over the North Atlantic represented only about 15 per cent of the ocean rate and was readily paid, but to-day when ship tonnage is in excess of cargo offerings the same differential represents from 30 per cent to 40 per cent of the ocean rate and can not be paid. Such a condition should not be permitted to continue any longer than the time required for the Shipping Board to serve notice upon all at interest that this discrimination will be removed at once.

The North Atlantic argument that the distance from southern ports is greater is completely annihilated by past and present practice in that rates from all Atlantic and Gulf ports to the Far East are on a parity, and in some cases cargo is actually carried to Yokohama at a lower rate than to Liverpool, notwithstanding that the distance is more than twice as great to Yokohama and, in addition, the Yokohama carrier has to pay Panama Canal dues. The general cargo rate from New York to Sydney, Australia, a distance of 9,704 miles, has been the same as from New York to Algiers, a distance of only 3,621 miles, while the rate to Cape Town, a distance of 6,795 miles, has been actually less than the rate to Algiers. The rate from New York to Tampico is the same as from New Orleans, although the steamer from New York must cover a distance three times as great.

SUGGESTED READJUSTMENT.

Three alternate plans of needed readjustment are offered, as follows:

1. Place all commodities originating in competitive territory in the Middle West and Far West on the parity list and agree upon fair and reasonable differentials on such essentially southern commodities as cotton, cottonseed products, lumber, naval stores, and phosphate as will primarily protect southern ports but without closing the routes through North Atlantic ports from reasonable participation in the movement of these commodities.
2. Dissolve the joint conference of the three conference districts and continue separately the North Atlantic, the South Atlantic, and the Gulf conferences, with full rate-making authority vested in each, but with an arrangement for exchanging information as to rates agreed upon in the several conferences, without obligation on the part of any conference to base its rates on those of any other conference.
3. Make ocean rates from South Atlantic and Gulf ports to Cuba and other Gulf and Caribbean ports based on the lesser mileage from southern ports. It is not likely that trans-Atlantic lines will agree to this, as they have no interest or control in these particular Gulf rates.

Ocean rate conferences may be considered essential to the stability and regulation of ocean rates and, it may be thought, should be, therefore, continued in some form or other, but they surely should not be permitted to create and perpetuate discriminating adjustments as between ports.

Such an adjustment as proposed in paragraphs 1 and 2 will insure to the ports of each section business originating in territory contiguous to such ports and an equal chance to secure business in what may be termed "common" territory competitive to all three districts.

The whole of the Pacific is on a parity with reference to interior points, and there is no reason why the same should not be the case with the whole Atlantic coast. This differential mentioned to European ports in respect to the North and South Atlantic coast can not be ascribed to distance nor port conditions merely, as it applies to European points generally. Moreover, the same rate is given by the Shipping Board from Boston and New York to South America and Cuba as from Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, Tampa, Pensacola, Mobile, and New Orleans, although the distance is in some cases double.

Take Charleston, for comparison, although the difference is more marked in the case of each of the other ports named:

	Liverpool.	Gibraltar.	Colon.	Habana.
Boston, 3,058 miles ¹		$3,064	$2,177	$1,418
Norfolk, 3,367 miles ¹		$3,369	$1,779	$1,085
Charleston, 3,613 miles ¹		$3,665	$1,585	$846

² Same rate.

If there is to be a genuine effort to build up a permanent service from the various coasts of the country, differentials ought to be removed.

If no readjustment can be effected as I have indicated, then, it seems to me, it would be advisable for the Shipping Board to withdraw from all conferences.

The truth is a conference is desirable for those lines which are established and have the business; they are not advantageous to those who must go after and build up their business.

For some four years this unjust discrimination has again and again been complained of, and it is amazing that it has been allowed to continue.

I again appeal to the Shipping Board to put an end to it.

Mr. President, that is all I care to submit for the present.

APPENDIX 1.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, January 23, 1921.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring further to your letter of December 28, addressed to the Shipping Board, requesting information in connection with various rate conferences.

It is assumed that your letter has reference only to trans-Atlantic lines (United Kingdom and continental Europe), and I take pleasure in advising that the data desired by you has now been compiled, as per copy attached.

If there is any further information you desire relative to this subject, I will be very glad to furnish same.

Yours very truly,

L. C. PALMER, President.

NORTH ATLANTIC UNITED KINGDOM FREIGHT CONFERENCE.

OFFICERS.

There are no officers. All matters for consideration by the conference are dealt with by the conference as a whole at meetings or referred to committees appointed from time to time as occasion requires. Mr. Sydney E. Morse acts in the capacity of secretary, with offices located at 8-10 Bridge Street, New York City.

MEMBERS.

LENGTH OF TIME CONFERENCE IN EXISTENCE.

In February, 1918, the Glasgow, London, Liverpool & Manchester Lines, which since 1901 had more or less operated as individual units, formed what now is the North Atlantic United Kingdom Freight Conference (eastbound). Since December, 1919, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and since October, 1920, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine (Ltd.), although not members, have attended the meetings and cooperated with the members.

EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION OPERATORS.

A list of the operators attending the above conference is as follows:
Baltimore Steamship Co.
W. A. Blake & Co.
Export Transportation Co.
Moore & McCormack Co. (Inc.).
United States Lines.
J. H. Winchester & Co.

PROCEDURE FOR ESTABLISHING AND CHANGING RATES.

Unanimous concurrence.

INDEPENDENT ACTION.

No provision for independent action.

METHOD OF FIXING RATES.

Ocean distances and steaming time are not the sole factors in determining rates. All operating costs are considered, as well as competitive transportation and commercial conditions.

NORTH ATLANTIC CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CONFERENCE.

GENERAL EXPLANATION.

The above simply outlines the conferences from a local standpoint. The conferences of the three districts cooperate in the establishment of rates as outlined below.

To arrive at a joint working arrangement, commodities are classed as follows:

1. North Atlantic initiative commodities.
2. South Atlantic and Gulf initiative commodities.
3. Neutral commodities.

North Atlantic initiative commodities are commodities largely peculiar to the North Atlantic district. The North Atlantic district may change the rates on these commodities without the concurrence of the South Atlantic and Gulf districts.

Gulf and South Atlantic initiative commodities are commodities largely peculiar to the South Atlantic and Gulf districts. The Gulf and South Atlantic districts may change these rates without the concurrence of the North Atlantic district.

Neutral commodities are commodities which are not considered peculiar to any one district. No district can change a rate on a neutral commodity without obtaining the concurrence of the other districts.

In further explanation of above there is a fixed differential or parity on all commodities, and in making rate changes the procedure works out as follows:

For example—cotton: Cotton being a Gulf and South Atlantic commodity, the southern districts initiate the rate changes and the North Atlantic district automatically follows this rate based upon the fixed differential on same.

No change in the differential on any commodity as between the three districts can be made without the concurrence of the three districts.

APPENDIX 2.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Washington, February 23, 1924.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Acknowledging your letter of February 18:

I have had the Fleet Corporation obtain from the various conferences a statement covering parities, neutral and initiative commodities, with basis of rates as between the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf, and take pleasure in quoting you a copy herewith.

If any further information is desired, I will be very glad to obtain same for you.

Yours very truly,

T. V. O'CONNOR, Chairman.

PARITIES.

The North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf apply the same rates on these commodities:

Asphalt, barytes, beans (Pacific coast), borax, coffee (green), cooperage, dense weight, fruit (dried, Pacific coast), goods (canned, Pacific coast), grain, honey (Pacific coast), hops (Pacific coast), litle, logs (except pitch pine and cypress), lumber (except pitch pine and cypress), milk (condensed), molasses, peas (Pacific coast), shocks (box), slant, sulphur, sirup (sugar-cane), and tobacco.

NEUTRAL COMMODITIES.

The initiative in rate making lies with either of the three conferences, but concurrence must be obtained from the other conference, and if not obtained rate changes can not be made.

Alcohol, antimony, coffee (green), cooperage, grain, logs (hardwood, except pitch pine), lumber (hardwood, except pitch pine), barytes, borates, dense weight, molasses, shocks (box), spelter, and sirup (cane).

GULF AND SOUTH ATLANTIC INITIATIVE COMMODITIES.

Cake (cottonseed), cotton, cotton linters, garbanzos, hulls (cottonseed), litle, logs (pitch pine and cypress), lumber (pitch pine and cypress), meal (cottonseed), oil (cottonseed), pitch, rice, phosphate rock, rosin, sisal, sulphur, tar, timber (pitch pine and cypress), and turpentine.

NORTH ATLANTIC INITIATIVE COMMODITIES.

The North Atlantic conference has the initiative in rate making on all other commodities.

On Gulf, South Atlantic, and North Atlantic initiative commodities, it is not necessary to obtain concurrence from other conferences, but they are immediately advised of any rate change.

FREE LIST.

Hay, oil (crude), and staves.

BASIS OF RATES BETWEEN DISTRICTS.

Except in the case of parities, the agreed basis between the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf conferences are as follows:

	Per 100 pounds.
Cotton:
North Atlantic.....	$0.00
Norfolk.....	.10
South Atlantic.....	.17
Gulf.....	.25

Lumber (when rate applied per 100 superficial feet):		Per 1,000 superficial feet.
North Atlantic		$0.00
South Atlantic		3.00
Gulf		6.00
Turpentine:		Per 100 pounds.
North Atlantic		$0.00
South Atlantic (by agreement the Gulf applies 30 cents per barrel higher than South Atlantic on turpentine)		.07½
Gulf (by agreement the Gulf applies 30 cents per barrel higher than South Atlantic on turpentine)		.15
All rates shown per ton of 2,240 pounds:		Per ton.
North Atlantic		$0.00
South Atlantic		1.50
Gulf		3.00
All rates shown per cubic foot:		Per cubic foot.
North Atlantic		$0.00
South Atlantic		.02
Gulf		.05
All other rates shown per hundred pounds:		Per 100 pounds.
North Atlantic		$0.00
South Atlantic		.07½
Gulf		.15

During Mr. FLETCHER'S speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate Joint Resolution 4, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. For a question; but I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily for the purpose of continuing the consideration of Senate bill No. 5.

Mr. DIAL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to make another request. I ask unanimous consent that when the unfinished business shall have been disposed of, Senate bill 5 shall follow for consideration and thus become the unfinished business.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. DIAL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

After the conclusion of Mr. FLETCHER'S speech,

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. WADSWORTH suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dial	Jones, Wash.	Robinson
Ashurst	Dill	King	Sheppard
Ball	Edge	Ladd	Shipstead
Borah	Ferris	Lodge	Smoot
Brandeggee	Fletcher	McKellar	Spencer
Brookhart	Frazier	McKinley	Stanfield
Broussard	George	McNary	Stephens
Bruce	Gerry	Mayfield	Swanson
Bursum	Gooding	Moses	Wadsworth
Cameron	Hale	Neely	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Harris	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Harrison	Oddie	Warren
Copeland	Hedin	Pepper	Watson
Curtis	Howell	Philips	Weller
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Pittman	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the Record an editorial from the Florida Times-Union of March 14, entitled "Saving the Constitution." It bears on the question now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

SAVING THE CONSTITUTION.

Congress has under consideration a bill that is intended to save the Constitution of the United States from the assaults of those who would destroy its power and its usefulness, although they pretend, in most instances by amendment, to be acting in the interests of the people. There is ample proof for saying that many proposed amendments, and some adopted in the recent past, solely are and were conceived and intended to serve special interests or purposes, some of them fanatical and others purely selfish.

Under the law as it is at present it is too easy to "put over" amendments to the Constitution. The Wadsworth-Garrett amendment proposes to make Constitution tinkering more difficult, to take the power of making changes out of the hands of those who have selfish interests to serve, away from the professional reformer and the agitator, and restoring to the people the power that originally and justly was intended by the framers of the Constitution they should have, under that righteous fundamental that all just government must rest on the consent of the governed, not by or with the consent of this faction or that.

Tinkering of the Constitution, and recent attempts thereat, justly cause alarm on the part of all sober-minded, liberty-loving people. The purpose of the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment, as proposed, is to quiet this alarm and at the same time provide for the safeguarding of the Constitution in the interests of all the people. The bill's sponsors and those who understand its purpose and who give it their hearty approval believe the time has come to call a halt in proposals for changing the Constitution by amendment to suit every wind that blows. The proposed amendment continues the original text of Article V of the Constitution, with reference to two-thirds vote in the Houses of Congress and approval by three-fourths of the States, in the process of amending the fundamental law of the land, and then stipulates further that ratification of proposed amendments shall be effective—

"Provided, That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote; and that until three-fourths of the States have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States have rejected or defeated a proposed amendment, any State may change its vote: And provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of equal suffrage in the Senate."

Here are three distinct steps in the Constitution amendment process: Requiring legislators of at least one house of each legislature to be elected after an amendment has been proposed gives the people an opportunity to express directly their will in the matter. Action by the legislature is the second step. The next is by the people, permitted to vote "Yes" or "No" on that which it is proposed to take from or add to their Constitution, their organic law, the first words of which are, "We, the people of the United States."

The Wadsworth-Garrett amendment is intended to deliver the Constitution "back to the people," where rightfully it belongs. Powerful lobbies, liberally financed organizations or groups of individuals, propagandists, and the like, under this amendment will find their work of Constitution tinkering more difficult, if, indeed, it is not made impossible, because the people by their votes, variously provided for, will have the final and deciding expression and action. And this, in the final analysis, is democratic government, government by and with the consent of the governed.

In conclusion, it may be called to mind that the constitution of Florida provides that—

"No convention nor legislature of this State shall act upon any amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by Congress to the several States unless such convention or legislature shall have been elected after such amendment is submitted."

thus giving to the people of this State the very opportunity of voting on any and every proposed constitutional amendment, as is proposed in the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment. The people of every State in the Union should have and enjoy this method of safeguarding their rights under the Constitution. Florida, therefore, has seen the need of doing, and has done, what the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment proposes shall be done by all the States.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, a considerable group of Maryland citizens, including George Stewart Brown and Thomas F. Cadwalader, two of the leading citizens of Maryland, have been active supporters of the joint resolution which is now under consideration. I share their convictions in relation to it, and I feel that I should not let the occasion pass without saying a few words with respect to it.

That the principle which underlies the resolution is one that commends itself strongly to approval is shown first of all, of course, by the fact that it has been reported favorably, though with an amendment, by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and also by what has already been said touching it upon this floor; so, really, the question here is not whether the primary object of the resolution itself is a good one, but whether or not the amendment offered to it by the Judiciary Committee looking to the direct action of the voters upon amendments to the Federal Constitution when submitted to the people, is a judicious one. In other words, the question arises between the resolution as it was originally framed and introduced into this body and the committee amendment.

Of course, I realize as clearly as anyone can that there is a very strong trend in the current of political thought at the present time in favor of pure democracy that is in favor of the submission of all important political questions as far as possible to the direct action of the voters; and that tendency I approve, and I may say strongly approve; subject, however, to some material qualifications.

We all know that the attitude of the founders of the Republic toward pure democracy, or, as we now say, the direct action of the people, was in many respects not very friendly. Our American ancestors cherished a profound distrust not only of kings and kaisers but also of the great mass of the electorate except under carefully guarded conditions. They believed with Pope, that the worst of tyrants at times is the mob.

In other words, they kept their eyes no more on the possibility of oppression in high places than they did upon what they conceived to be the caprices, the passions, the sudden gusts of impulse in one form or another to which men en masse are subject. They believed in representative government rather than in pure democracy.

We are all thoroughly familiar, too, I am sure, with the historic circumstances which, as time went on, brought about a change in the attitude of the American people and its leading statesmen in this respect toward government. Great party organizations sprang up, and they produced powerful party machines; and party spirit and party effort became so highly developed that finally the very electoral system that had been devised by the Federal Constitution for the election of the President became a mere automaton. Then, later on, other circumstances arose to make the people feel more and more that it was important that the mass of the voters in their primary character should have some sort of check upon the action of their representatives, too often controlled or strongly influenced by political bosses or cliques. Consequently such devices as the initiative and the referendum were adopted throughout almost the entire country and became formally embedded in the constitutions of the different States.

As I have intimated, I approve to no small extent of the alteration that has taken place in the popular attitude toward representative government as distinguished from pure democracy. I do not think that representative government in the main should ever be superseded by the direct action of the people, because I believe that the people never act so wisely, except under circumstances wholly extraordinary, as when they have lodged their powers of action in selected agents, in whose integrity, ability, and experience they entertain a high degree of confidence. I do think that the popular initiative or referendum is a good gun, as has been happily said, for the people to keep behind the door for use in emergencies. Those devices are not good if made the daily bread of the Constitution, but they are good if resorted to as its occasional medicine.

Of course, the amendment offered by the Judiciary Committee looks exclusively to the direct action of the people. Under it amendments to the Federal Constitution are to be proposed by Congress, and then they are to be passed upon by the voters of the States in their primary capacity. No provision is made in the committee amendment for the interposition of the legislature at all. In other words, to the extent to which it goes, it contemplates only such public action as belongs to a pure democracy.

I approve of the committee amendment in principle, for I think that it would be a great improvement over the existing Article V of the Federal Constitution, in that it provides for the submission to the people of proposed amendments to the Federal Constitution. If I had to take my choice between the present Article V and the committee amendment, I would without the slightest hesitation fix my choice upon the latter. I think that it is better that we should have exclusive popular action on constitutional amendments than that we should have exclusive legislative action upon them.

It seems to me that unquestionably, so far as a certain class of amendments to the Federal Constitution are concerned, the people themselves in their original character are not the best instruments for ratification. They undoubtedly are the best when some great question going down to the very roots of our institutions, and profoundly affecting the welfare and happiness of the people, is under discussion, such a question, for instance, as the prohibition question or the woman-suffrage question. It is eminently proper that an issue of that kind should be passed upon by the voters themselves rather than by the State legislatures. But all who are familiar with the electoral history of amendments to State constitutions know how perfectly careless, unreflecting, and perfunctory is the attention that is often given by the voters to them. All of us, I am sure, have had our attention called to the very small votes cast for or against such amendments as compared with the vote for candidates.

Mr. President, I trust that Senators will defer their conversations until I can conclude my brief remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BRUCE. The murmurs about me remind me of something which once happened when I was a youth. Governor Whyte, of Maryland, who was at one time a Member of this body, was addressing an audience, and he was constantly interrupted by an Irishman, one Larry Finnegan. Governor Whyte was a good-natured man and bore the interruptions for a time patiently; but finally he turned and said, "Larry, please be aisy, and if you can't be aisy, be as aisy as you can." So I will ask my friends to try to be as "aisy" as they can until I am through.

A most striking illustration of the unthinking and often confused manner in which the electorate often deals with ordinary propositions submitted to its approval is furnished by the State of Oregon. Some years ago two propositions affecting the salmon industry of Oregon, one of the great industries of that State, as we all know, diametrically opposite in their nature, were submitted to its voters and both were ratified. That incident seems to me to supply apt proof that, so far as ordinary amendments to constitutions are concerned, the people are not the best instruments for passing upon their merits or upon their demerits, though, of course, as I have said, where the question is vital or fundamental there can be no better instrument for the purpose.

There is a class of constitutional amendments which it is almost absurd to submit for approval to the mass of the people. For instance, take such constitutional provisions as those which you find in many of the State constitutions in this country; that every bill shall be read three times before its final passage; that every bill shall contain but one subject matter, and that shall be reflected in its title; that no act shall be revived by a mere reference to its title, and that where an act is repealed and reenacted with amendments the language of the amendments must be set forth verbatim in the bill. Or take the amendment to the Federal Constitution which we approved a day or so ago fixing the first Monday in January and the third Monday in January as the days, respectively, for the convening of Congress and the inauguration of the President. I do not think that anyone could successfully contend that the American voters generally are the best agency for passing upon questions of that kind. Some of them are purely technical in their nature and far more proper to be passed upon by State legislatures, which are largely composed of lawyers, than by the people themselves.

So it seems to me that the Senator from New York has been peculiarly happy in the form that he has given to his proposed amendment to the Constitution. It secures, first of all, deliberate, thoughtful action by the State legislatures.

At the same time it provides that the States may make such provisions as they choose in their constitutions or statutes for the confirmation by the people themselves of all amendments to the Federal Constitution which have received the approval of their legislatures. So we not only have the deliberate action of the legislatures, but, in addition to that, we have a supreme popular check upon anything which may be of real detriment to the welfare of the people in the fact that the approval of the State legislatures is to be subject to the confirmation of the voters themselves. If the coachman on the box proves drunken, faithless, or careless, the people can resume the reins.

Then, of course, a very admirable feature of the resolution introduced by the Senator from New York is the provision that an amendment to the Federal Constitution shall not be passed upon by a legislature, one branch of which has not been elected by the people since the submission of the constitutional amendment by the Congress to the people.

Another provision in the resolution settles the vexed question as to how far a State, after once giving its assent to an amendment to the Federal Constitution, can retract that consent.

So it seems to me that in many most important particulars, when all the aspects of the case are duly regarded, the resolution originally introduced by the Senator from New York is decidedly preferable to the committee amendment.

All the benefits of the latter are conserved by the original resolution, and at the same time we have also this other machinery, afforded by State legislatures or conventions, for thorough, searching, deliberate consideration.

If the constitutional amendment brought forward by the resolution goes into effect, it will operate, I think, as a very great check upon precipitate action on amendments to the Federal Constitution when submitted to the States. Everybody knows that there is all the difference in the world between the amount of discussion which under ordinary circumstances usually precedes the handling of an amendment to the Federal Constitution by a legislature and that which precedes the action on such an amendment by the people themselves in their original capacity as voters. Usually, before a constitutional amendment comes up in the legislature, it is fully discussed in the press; then when it reaches the legislature it is carefully examined by the appropriate committee and public attention is pointedly drawn to it, and at times drawn to it for weeks before the legislature convenes and for weeks after the legislature convenes. There is undoubtedly, it seems to me, a most important point to be gained by preserving legislatures and conventions as a part of the machinery for the ratification of amendments to the Federal Constitution by the States.

Then, as I said before, there is the gun behind the door; that is the power of the State, if it sees fit, after the legislature has given its approval to an amendment to the Federal Constitution, to subject that approval to the final test of popular revision.

Nothing remains for me to add except to say in conclusion what I said in the beginning, that in my judgment the original resolution in this case secures all the advantages that could possibly be secured by the committee amendment and secures other and additional advantages of the very highest degree of significance besides.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not believe there is any occasion whatever for this amendment to the Constitution. I do not believe there is any public demand for it. If it has been the subject of any considerable discussion in the public press of the country or in the journals, the fact has entirely escaped my attention. The entire indifference to it throughout the country, or at least the lack of apparent interest in it, is manifested, I think, sufficiently by the fact that no one is paying any attention whatever to the debates in the Senate upon the joint resolution, which is a joint resolution to amend our fundamental law.

I may be wrong about the matter and I may do the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the author of the joint resolution, an injustice, but I can not help feeling that he is suffering from some considerable disappointment over the adoption of two amendments to the Constitution—the eighteenth and nineteenth—both of which were opposed by him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senator has a right to attempt to read my mind. He was not here yesterday when I commenced my remarks, at which time I begged the Senate to believe, and I beg him to believe, now that he is present, that I had no thought whatsoever about the merits or demerits of the eighteenth or nineteenth amendments. My only thought is that certain incidents occurred in connection with the ratification of those amendments which are worthy of the consideration of the American people, and which incidents should not be permitted in the future.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not the slightest doubt about that, and I have not the slightest doubt, either, if the Senator will permit me to say it, about the entire honesty of his conviction with reference to the matter—

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator could not resist expression of his opinion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And that his conviction arose out of his disappointment at the adoption of those two amendments, I entertain not the slightest doubt.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is entitled to his own opinion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course I am. I just merely express it as my belief.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator could not resist expressing it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, I could, but I see no reason why I should not.

Mr. President, the provisions of the Constitution of the United States by which its terms may be amended necessarily imply, almost, that the amendment proposed shall have been extensively debated before the people of the country prior to the time it takes form at all.

The distinguished Senator from New York, in his very able argument against the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, expresses some apprehension that an amendment being offered to the people by a joint resolution of Congress during the month of June would be voted upon by the entire electorate of the country at the succeeding November in the midst of the general election when no opportunity would be afforded to give calm consideration to the question. No such precipitateness as that is to be apprehended at all, but the Senator overlooks the fact that in all reasonable probability an amendment that can command a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress must necessarily have had some considerable discussion before the people and through the press and upon the stump before it ever is submitted for ratification.

Why, Mr. President, take the amendments to the Constitution following the fifteenth. The sixteenth amendment gives the Congress power to lay and collect taxes on incomes. How many years, indeed decades, was that matter agitated before the people of the country? It was talked about in every campaign for at least 20 years before it was adopted. It took form in an act of the Congress of the United States, which was subsequently declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and finally, when the force of public opinion assumed such proportions and such strength as to be utterly irresistible, the Congress of the United States, by a two-thirds vote, then passed a joint resolution, and just as quickly as the legislatures of the various States could get at it, it was ratified. So with the next amendment, providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, in exactly the same way. That was canvassed from one end of the country to the other.

Of what significance is it that the prohibition amendment was ratified very promptly after it was submitted. Had it not been the subject of discussion before the people of the United States during the entire generation through which we have lived? I do not believe that by reason of anything that happened in Tennessee in connection with the woman's suffrage amendment, or anything that happened in the State of Ohio with reference to the prohibition amendment, there is any such general demand throughout the country, passing through such a period of time and such active discussion as the income-tax amendment passed through, or the amendment providing for the election of United States Senators went through, or the prohibition amendment went through. I undertake to say that the discussion in the country, so far as there has been any, of this particular amendment bears no relation whatever in point of volume or intensity to the great debates through which those other amendments passed.

But if there were going to be an amendment to the Constitution I do not think that any superiority can be claimed for the joint resolution as originally introduced over the joint resolution as it was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. If I were engaged at the present time in writing the Constitution of the United States I would have any proposed amendment submitted to a vote of the people, as is provided for in the amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary. But I would not make any change at all, not because I am not in favor of having these matters passed upon by the people rather than having them passed upon by legislators who are elected oftentimes without any reference whatever, and usually, I might say, without any reference whatever to the particular amendment to the Constitution of the United States which is submitted to them—not at all. So that if we were now engaged in writing the Constitution of the United States I would not have any hesitancy at all in my choice. But we are not so engaged. We are proposing an amendment to the Constitution as it stands now.

As I said in the course of a colloquy with the Senator from New York the other day, there are scores of provisions in the Constitution which might possibly under conceivable circumstances result in disaster to our Nation. Of course, the Constitution of the United States was an illogical compromise between two contending forces, and hence many of its provisions can not be defended upon the basis of reason; but of what consequence is that? They worked out all right. We have lived through 135 years under the existing instrument and we have gotten along pretty well notwithstanding there are perils lurking in the language in one respect or another. If we went to work to pick out all of those which might possibly under some conceivable circumstances result in injury to the United States, we would not be doing much of anything else.

I listened with much interest to the able argument and admonition of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who does me the honor to be among the few who listen to my remarks this afternoon, urging the Congress of the United States to get down to the business of legislation, and particularly to legislate upon the subject of reduction of the burden of taxes and to do something to relieve the awful situation, the desperate condition in which the industry of agriculture in this country, and particularly in the Northwestern States, finds itself. We could,

I think, much more profitably be engaged in that work than in an endeavor to amend the Constitution in some particular in which experience has shown no injury has ever come.

I remember that in Bryce's American Commonwealth that distinguished author and great statesman indulges in some reflections upon the superiority of the English system of appointing judges for life as against the prevailing American system of electing judges for limited terms. He goes on to say how under an elective system the decisions can scarcely ever be expected to be as free from the influence of local prejudice, as free from political considerations, as under the system of which he is so proud. Indeed, he expresses surprise that we could tolerate the elective system at all so far as judges are concerned, and he denounces it roundly as contrary to good reason and to the experience of the world. But he said, "The thing seems to work all right in America." In some of the States they do appoint the judges—Massachusetts, for instance—but other States, like New York and California, elect their judges. He said:

I do not say, by any means, that the decisions of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York or of the Supreme Court of the State of California are inferior in any respect to those of the Supreme Court of the State of Massachusetts.

Then he said that it can often be reasoned out that a particular institution of government is not logical or is not sound and yet it works out admirably in practice, and he instances the royal family in Great Britain, which, he said, subserves a very useful purpose in the State and yet logically nobody can urge any particular sound reason for it.

So let us not spend our time in trying to pick out things in the Constitution which will not stand before the light of reason and sound analysis and endeavor to correct them, unless some evil is likely to ensue by reason of those defective provisions. Take the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. It was not a mere theory that the existing system was likely to involve the country in injury or damage, but it was demonstrated that under the then existing system of electing Senators by the legislatures of the various States corruption of the most disgraceful character had entered into our system, and that men were elected to public office and to seats in this body who did not represent the prevailing sentiment of their States at all and who never could have been or would have been chosen had they been submitted to the judgment of the people whom they were supposed to represent. That thing went on for years until grievous evils in the body politic ensued, and therefore it was wise to change it.

So exactly with the income tax amendment, it was not a mere theory. But just consider for one single moment what we would have done when the great World War was upon us and we were obliged to assume all the responsibilities of that great contest if we were not able to bring the great fortunes of the country to the service of the Government in order to carry on that war. The necessities of the case compelled us to give our adherence to the proposition that the Congress of the United States ought to have power to levy income taxes. So on down the list.

But here what harm has resulted?

What amendment has ever been adopted to the Constitution of the United States that did not reflect the sober and settled judgment of the people of this country? I know very well that the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] thinks that is not the case as to the prohibition amendment and the woman's suffrage amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President, I hope the Senator will qualify that and will be quite certain when he again attempts to read my mind that he is correct. I made no such assertion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I know the Senator did not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not believe that to be the fact.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am glad to be reassured.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But if the Senator will pardon me, I do look toward the future, and if the incidents that occurred in connection with those two amendments are to be repeated in the future, on a magnified scale, God help the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; of course that is what I say, if it is going to be repeated in the future on a magnified scale; but what has happened? Down in Tennessee they were a little bit uncertain about whether they would vote for the amendment or vote against the amendment, and of course the advocates of both sides were there lobbying as best they could.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all I know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator had better read the history of the Tennessee case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It may be that there are some details that I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has not described one-tenth of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suppose so; there are lots of details that I have not undertaken to state. So in the case of Ohio. In the Ohio case the courts held that it was not of any consequence that the amendment was not submitted to the people of the State for ratification. Of course, that is one State in each particular instance. In order to be of any consequence whatever there would have to be 12 times that number.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Tennessee was not the only State that sinned in the way that Tennessee sinned. There were four other States which acted similarly on the same amendment; and those five States—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, just what does the Senator from New York mean when he says that there were four others?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There were 38 States which through their legislatures ratified the nineteenth amendment. Five of them did so in violation of their own State constitutions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, well; but the Supreme Court of the United States declared that it was not in violation of their own constitutions, because their own constitutions were contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Have the people of the States no right to expect their own legislators to abide by their oaths of office?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, well; that does not bother me at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. "Oh, well."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What the Senator means is that in five States it was provided, as in the case of Tennessee, that the ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution must be submitted to a legislature, one branch of which has been elected after the submission?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And that five States did not thus ratify?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; five States that had such constitutional provisions did not observe them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of what consequence is that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, every member of the legislature in those five States had taken an oath when he took his office to be faithful to the constitution of his State.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; and the Senator will remember that the members of the legislature did not take only such an oath. They took first an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and if any provision of the constitution of Tennessee was in violation of the Constitution of the United States, that member did not take an oath to support that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it was not in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Supreme Court has held that it was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Supreme Court has not held that the constitution of Tennessee was in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court has merely said that Tennessee, having certified to the ratification of the amendment, there was nothing further to be said about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, well; what is the difference?

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the difference? Are we not to have any morality in connection with this matter in the discussion and consideration of constitutional amendments? The Senator asks, What is the difference when scores of representatives of the people violate their oaths to the people who elected them?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no use haggling about this matter. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was to the effect that the State can impose no conditions whatever upon the ratification of an amendment by the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator cite that decision?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have it in mind perfectly well. The decision was to the effect that it is beyond the power of the State by its constitution to put any limitations whatever upon the act of the legislature in ratifying a constitutional amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the Ohio case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the doctrine in both cases.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would be interested to see the decision in reference to the Tennessee case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I repeat, that is the doctrine laid down in both cases; so the Tennessee legislator did not violate his oath of office at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator from Montana would not apply that rule of conduct to all political activities. These men said they would not do a certain thing when they were elected by their people.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; they did not say anything of that kind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, they did.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When they took their oath of office and accepted election, they swore to support that provision of their State constitution which had been adopted by the people of those five States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I simply do not agree with the Senator from New York. It does not make any difference. If such a provision was in the State constitution and it was violative of the Constitution of the United States, it was no part of the law of Tennessee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator like to see that condition corrected?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no objection at all to anything that the Senator may care to submit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator think that that situation should be corrected?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not see why the situation should be corrected at all. The Constitution of the United States provides how it shall be amended; and I fully agree with the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that, the Constitution of the United States having prescribed how it shall be amended, no State has a right to prescribe any other way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was asking this question: Does not the Senator think that that situation should be corrected in the Constitution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is nothing to correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think that the people should be deprived of all influence, direct or indirect, in the matter of the ratification of amendments to the Constitution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly not; so I have proposed an amendment giving the people an opportunity to express themselves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I thought the Senator said there was no necessity for any amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; that is what I do say. I think that the people, so far as amendments to the Constitution are concerned, by an experience of 135 years have shown themselves sufficiently expressed through the action of their legislatures. It is just simply a matter of how you will do it; that is all. Now, as I have stated, if I were framing the Constitution, I should not hesitate in my opinion at all; I would submit the question of ratification directly to the people.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Does the Senator not think, however, that it is rather a suggestive thing that the action of the State legislatures and of the people in their primary capacity with reference to the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments should have been so absolutely opposed? In both of those instances, under the present system, the people passed on the amendment in one way, while the legislatures passed on it in the other. Does the Senator not think that is an unfortunate state of affairs?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorry. Perhaps the Senator is not familiar with the history of the ratification of those amendments in some of the States. Take, for instance, the history of the action of Maryland on the eighteenth amendment. By an overwhelming popular vote the voters of Maryland declared against prohibition, yet the legislature ratified the eighteenth amendment. So in other States the legislature acted counter to the action of the people themselves in their primary capacity with regard to this subject of supreme importance.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree that the legislature does not always accurately represent the views of the people.

Mr. BRUCE. That is it exactly; and therefore, if I may say so, it does not seem to me entirely logical for the Senator to contend that the present system of ratifying amendments to the Federal Constitution is so faultless as he appears to believe it is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has not interpreted me right, but I think it rather significant that the outstanding representative of the antiprohibition forces on the Republican side and the outstanding representative of the antiprohibition forces on the Democratic side should be both urging this amendment. Let me say with reference to the illustration of the Senator that I do not think—

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to interrupt him for just a moment again?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will yield in just a moment. In the case of the prohibition amendment, which, with three exceptions, was ratified by the legislatures of every State in the Union, including the legislature of the State of the Senator who has just interrupted me and the legislature of the State of the Senator who introduced the joint resolution and who is its chief protagonist, if the fact is that the Legislature of Maryland did not accurately represent the sentiment of the people of the State of Maryland, that would increase the number in opposition so that there would be four; and if the people of New York were not accurately represented by the action of the legislature the number in opposition would be increased to five, but we would still be a long way from the 12 which would be necessary to defeat the amendment. Now I gladly yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I wanted to say that the Senator is entirely mistaken in imputing to me any bias arising out of my aversion to prohibition in principle.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was merely referring to the coincidence, that is all.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, but sometimes coincidences, like other things, are extremely misleading.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite true.

Mr. BRUCE. Now, if I were influenced by my profound aversion to prohibition in principle, I would support the amendment of the Senator from Montana, because if the question of prohibition or nonprohibition ever came up under his amendment, it would come up before the voters and not before the legislatures, and, of course, it is my conviction that if the question of prohibition could be fairly submitted to the voters of the country as distinguished from the legislatures of the States, there is no doubt but that the popular fiat would be against prohibition, whereas legislatures, of course, are subject to the pressure of highly organized minorities, to do away with which is one of the very objects of this joint resolution. So the Senator will see—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand perfectly well—

Mr. BRUCE. So the Senator will see that my idea is that this compound system of having amendments to the Constitution ratified both by the legislature and the people does not rest at all upon my convictions in relation to the subject of prohibition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand perfectly well that the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New York—I beg pardon; the Senator from New York has repudiated the idea; but the Senator from Maryland is profoundly convinced that the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution does not reflect the sober judgment of the people of the United States and therefore he wants to amend the Constitution.

Mr. BRUCE. I am so convinced at the present time, and I may say to the Senator that during the last election in Maryland, for instance, which I imagine is merely typical of all the States on the Atlantic seaboard, our Democratic candidate for governor, who ran on that issue almost exclusively, was elected by the largest popular majority that has ever been cast in the State for any candidate for governor since the Civil War.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but let me remind the Senator that the Atlantic seaboard is not the United States.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, it is not; but so far as the question of drinking liquor illicitly is concerned I think it is not a little typical of much of the rest of the country, so far as my limited observation has gone.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the Senator's opportunity for observation has been limited.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not know as to that. I do know that Virginia, with which I am familiar, is supposed to be a State in which prohibition is the most rigidly enforced, but I see that the chief of police in the city of Norfolk has just reported that there never was so much drunkenness in the city before prohibition as there is at the present time, and I see that in Lynchburg also there has been a marked increase in unlawful drinking.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not intend at this time to engage in discussion or controversy with the Senator from Maryland about the success or failure of prohibition or the wisdom or unwisdom of that movement.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Montana provoked the discussion, however.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am merely reminded, however, that in the interesting address delivered by the Senator from Maryland a few days ago he referred to the fact that during a recent visit to the State of Virginia he was hospitably offered some of the good liquor of that State.

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I was, and I enjoyed it to the very highest degree, and hope to repeat the experience just as soon as possible. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am reminded that I was honored by an invitation to address the Bar Association of that distinguished State a year ago, and was treated most hospitably by the gentlemen, but I do not remember that I was offered anything to drink.

Mr. BRUCE. The same honor, I am happy to say, was paid to me only a few weeks ago.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word or two about the substitute. I have expressed my view about it. I do not think there is any occasion for any amendment to the Constitution on this subject; but, if there is, I think that the obvious tendency of the times and the wisdom of our age suggests that the matter be submitted to the people of the State. Indeed, I understand that the purpose of the amendment as it is proposed by its author, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], is to bring the thing back to the people; and it provides that the amendment shall not be subject to ratification by the legislature of the State unless or until at least one branch of the legislature shall have been elected, so that the people themselves will have an opportunity to pass upon the question by the election of one branch of the legislature.

Of course, we all appreciate that in all reasonable probability the matter of whether a candidate for member of the legislature does or does not approve of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States will be not the paramount issue, but will be one of the collateral issues of such insignificant moment that the ordinary voter will not have it in his mind at all; but it will be observed that the very essence of the thing is to get an expression from the people themselves upon the subject. Of course, if we are going to do that, the way to do it is to submit the proposition to them as is proposed in the amendment.

The Senator, however, as I have heretofore suggested, is apprehensive that action will be precipitate under that system; that, as heretofore suggested, the amendment might be submitted by action of both bodies of Congress in the month of June, say, and voted on inconsiderately and hastily at the following November election. As I have heretofore indicated, it is in all reasonable probability likely that before two-thirds of both Houses can be induced to submit the matter at all it will already have been the subject of earnest discussion in the press and upon the stump.

The fact of the matter is, however, that there is no reason to apprehend that all the States will vote on the subject at exactly the same time. As indicated, in some States they have annual elections, in some other States biennial elections, and in some other States only quadrennial elections; and of course the amendment will be submitted to the legislature next after the joint resolution has the approval of both Houses of Congress, and will not be voted upon at the same time at all, in all reasonable probability, although it may be. All States, of course, have congressional elections every two years, and a presidential election every four years; so it might come, as is suggested, within a few months, but the probability is the other way, and in any case, as I have suggested, it will have had consideration before the people theretofore.

But, Mr. President, if there were anything to that objection it would lie equally well as against the amendment as it stands, because in practically every State one branch of the legislature is elected at least every two years, and in some of the States every year; so, upon the assumption made by the Senator from New York, it would go to the legislatures of the States as precipitately as it would go before the people in their election. That is to say, the legislatures ordinarily would assemble immediately after the 1st of January, while the election would be held the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, and there would be a matter of two months' difference, and that is all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the Senator makes that comparison, is he referring to the present situation or the situation proposed in the original joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am suggesting now that the same danger which the Senator feared would be involved in the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee—that is to say, precipitate action—is just as tenable against the amendment which the Senator himself proposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not see how the Senator works that out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is the way I work it out: We will assume that this joint resolution now passes both Houses of Congress. It would then be submitted to the people of the States, under the amendment proposed, next November. If the joint resolution passes as the Senator proposes it, it can not be submitted until after the election of one branch of the legislature. In nearly every State one branch of the legislature will be elected next November.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is referring only to presidential years when he says that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all. I think the rule in most States is that members of the lower branch hold either one or two years, and members of the upper branch hold either two or four years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that, if they hold two years, members of the lower branch will all be elected at the November election.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the November election of 1924—not in every November election. There is another November following.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why, certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose the amendment should be submitted next year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well; suppose it is submitted next year. The general election would then occur in 1926. Under the amendment proposed it would go before the voters in November, 1926. Under the original resolution, if it were adopted, it would go before the legislature one branch of which would be elected at the election in November, 1926. In other words, there would be just two months' difference between the two.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two months measuring only from election day and the first day's meeting of the legislature.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that a fair measure?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think the legislature would act conclusively the very first day it met?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; certainly not, but the legislature would be at liberty to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly at liberty, but is it humanly possible for it to do so?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is humanly possible, but of course we understand—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it politically so?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is not; certainly not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The purpose of that clause of the original print of this joint resolution is to get the thing into a legislature, one house of which has been elected by the people at a time when the people know that such an amendment is being submitted, and that after the legislature meets it shall, at an appropriate time in its session, debate the question. Much more than two months will go by subsequent to that election day in November before any legislature takes final action in ratification. It is not fair to say there is only two months' difference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Well, suppose we put on two months more. Most legislatures are limited to 60 days. The difference between one and the other, then, is four months, we will say—four months at the outside.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is twice as long.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is twice as long.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield; yes.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that the mere question of time is not so important as the fact that the branch of the legislature which is to be elected after the submission of the amendment will be a branch of the legislature which is elected at a general election; and there would not be, it seems to me, one instance in five hundred where the constitutional amendment would be anything like a controlling or a dominating issue in the campaign. The local legislature will be almost inevitably elected upon local questions, and there will be practically no debate or discussion of the constitutional question involved in the election of the legislature; so you practically have no discussion at all of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that is a sweeping assumption. It depends somewhat upon the nature of the amendment proposed. I can think of amendments, some of which are now pending in the Congress, which, if once submitted to the people of the several States, will arouse nation-wide interest and constant discussion.

Mr. BORAH. If that is true, then let us not have homeopathic doses. If that is true, and it would become of such prime concern to the people as to arouse their interest, I think it is better to have a direct vote upon the entire proposition. There you get it recorded in the booth, without the exercise of the influence which accomplished what was accomplished in the Tennessee Legislature.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, just another thought.

The Senator from New York was desirous of having greater deliberation in the matter of the adoption of amendments to the Constitution, and it was suggested to him by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that if the matter were submitted to the legislature instead of to the people, as proposed in the amendment offered by the Judiciary Committee, the matter would have more careful and more thoughtful consideration. That was the argument which for years was offered to support the original plan of the Constitution for the election of United States Senators—in other words, that the members of the legislature were wiser than the body of the people; that they could make a better selection than could the people in the booth. I think that idea is exploded.

Mr. President, the real fact about this matter is that some one wants to make it a little harder to amend the Constitution. I think it is hard enough as it is. Let us see.

In the first place, with respect to all very important amendments, as in the cases to which I have referred—the election of Senators by direct vote of the people, the income-tax amendment, and other amendments of that character—a campaign will go on in the various congressional districts. Let us take prohibition for the purpose of illustration. Members of Congress will be elected or rejected upon the question as to whether they are for prohibition or against prohibition. Those who are against the proposition will have one inning there. Then they come before the House of Representatives, if the joint resolution is introduced first there, or the Senate, if the joint resolution is introduced first there, and they fight the thing in that body. Then they come before the other branch of the Congress of the United States, and they fight the thing there, and finally they get whipped by a two-thirds vote in both Houses. Then they go to the legislatures of the various States, and the thing is fought out then before the legislatures of three-fourths of the various States—36 out of the 48.

They have to make the fight one after another in every one of these, sometimes with such varying prospects as were indicated in the State of Tennessee with reference to the woman suffrage amendment; and then finally the thing goes through by the votes of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. When there is such an overwhelming opinion in the United States as to enable the proposition to run that kind of a gamut I think it is about time that we have that amendment.

But that is not quite enough. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, when the thing comes before the legislature another fight will ensue as to whether the legislature shall itself immediately act upon the matter, either ratifying or rejecting, or whether it will submit the matter to a vote of the people. There is another chance.

So the opponents of the amendment will move in the legislature that the resolution be submitted to a vote of the people, and there goes on another fight—shall it be submitted or shall it not be submitted? They then are able to muster enough votes to submit it, and then you go back again to the people the second time, after it has run the whole gamut, to fight the thing out before the people. That is the purpose of this thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, may I say that is not the purpose of this thing, and that can not be read into the language. Let me read the language of the second sentence:

That any State—

Not any legislature, any particular session of the legislature, but—any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote.

What does that comprehend? Just what was attempted by the people of Ohio. They required, under certain conditions, that Federal amendments acted upon by the Legislature of Ohio should be confirmed by popular vote. It was a part of their State constitution. The discretion was not left with the legislature itself, and under this language is not left with the legislature. It says, "Any State may require that ratification"—not any one ratification, but ratification generally—"shall be submitted to popular vote."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What does that mean? It simply means that the people may by their constitution take away from the legislature the power they would have under this, if they desired to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly; and I want them to have that power.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator wants them to have that power so they will go through the same form I have indicated. But you will bear in mind, Mr. President, that only a few of the States have such a provision in their constitutions. As to every other, it would of course be acted upon in the manner which I have indicated, unless the people of the various States should go on and change their constitutions accordingly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is exactly what I apprehend will be done within a very short period. The people will not deny themselves the exercise of this power as soon as they know they can get it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am of the opinion that the people have not waked up to the proposition at all. They have no interest in it whatever, if I have been able to judge by the public press. That is all I care to say about this—that the amendment ought to be adopted and that then the joint resolution should be defeated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can say in a few moments, I think, what I desire to say with regard to this amendment, and what I have to say shall be addressed principally to why I favor the committee amendment rather than the original proposition.

The Constitution ought to be regarded as the people's law, the people's charter. I think just so nearly as is practicable and possible the judgment of the people, direct and immediate, should be taken as to what should be found in the Constitution. Certainly, if we were making a constitution or rewriting the Constitution and resubmitting it, we would feel under obligation to submit it as directly to the people as practicable, and I feel that in incorporating amendments we should observe the same rule.

There are a number of reasons for this, but one of the reasons is, largely what you might call a sentimental or psychological reason, that is, I feel that people ought to be permitted to feel that when this Constitution is completed from time to time, and as it stands, it is their expression, an instrument which they have made; that it is their charter; that upon them it depends largely for its existence, and I should therefore want to bring home to them as nearly as possible the changing of it or the amending of it or the modifying of it in any respect.

Again, if there is any political act of a people which ought to be free from—stripped of—all sinister influence in its performance, it is the making of a constitution or the amending of a constitution. I have always been, and I am still, a very firm believer in representative government. Of course, in a country like this, as large as ours, we can not have any other kind of a government than a representative republic. But there are exceptions which should be made, and instances in which we should adopt the principles of complete democracy as nearly as it is practicable to do so, and I think one of them is in the instance of making the fundamental law or of modifying it.

There is another reason why I am particularly in favor of the amendment or the substitute. I think the most dependable and the most responsible force in American politics to-day, the one which can be most thoroughly relied upon to preserve our institutions as we would like to have them preserved, is the voter in the booth, alone with his conscience and his God. It is about the only influence in American politics that is left that is not subject to the modern system of controlling legislation and public affairs through what is known as propaganda. Propaganda has become a menace to representative government. The scheme of organizing to put through legislation in the name of the people but too often solely in the interest of a selfish few is one of the evils of modern legislation.

In my opinion, the things which the able Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would avoid would be accomplished under his amendment, perhaps not so easily, but nevertheless with marked success. I conceive, for instance, if one body of the legislature were elected after an amendment were submitted, and assuming that it was only one of the factors in the election, that the same influence which exercised sufficient power—in the Tennessee Legislature or elsewhere—could again exert its influence upon that body after it was elected. In the making of the Constitution or in amending it I should like for us to get back to the individual who is casting his ballot in the booth, in so far as we can do that, as a practical proposition.

I was at one time very much disturbed over the question of the initiative and referendum, but as I have observed its working in Switzerland and elsewhere, I find, instead of its being a radical proposition, it is an extremely safe and conservative proposition. In my opinion a constitutional amendment which was submitted direct to the people and finally approved by the people would come more nearly to being a true expression of what the people desired in their charter than if it were ratified by a legislature or by legislatures, subject to the same influences which caused to be adopted the amendments which have been criticized, and to which some felt a keen objection.

As I said a moment ago, the election of one branch of the legislature would not, in my judgment, be a sufficient guaranty against what this amendment is designed to prevent. In the first place, in all probability the legislature would be elected upon different issues, and therefore we would not get a true expression of the people upon this one proposition. In the second place, if the constitutional amendment were an issue, and if that was the controlling proposition upon which they were elected, there is no reason why their voice should not be recorded as conclusive, as it is registered in the booth, instead of trusting it to an agent, which, as we have found in the past, does not always record according to the pledge which it made to the people.

As I understand the proposition submitted by the Senator from New York, it is desired to get back closer to the people upon this proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The next sentence following the one just being discussed by the Senator discloses that, not the one the Senator has been discussing so much.

Mr. BORAH. Let us take it up. The language is:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of each House shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by three-fourths of the several States through their legislatures or conventions, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress or the convention: Provided, That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote.

If it is to be assumed that this second proposition is to become the controlling proposition—and, as the Senator from New York said a few moments ago, the States finding and the people finding that they have an opportunity for a popular vote upon the proposition, they will naturally call for that right and exercise it—we will have arrived at the same conclusion and the same destiny that we would arrive at by the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is true—and I am glad the Senator has said that—we have arrived at the same objective, but the road traveled in arriving at that objective is different in the original resolution, which the Senator has just read, from that suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], in this, that it shall go through the legislature for debate, and give the people of the States an opportunity to have that matter threshed out in the only arena competent to discuss it. Then the people have the right to say "yes" or "no" to it, as they please. I want simply to preserve the legislature as a part of the machinery. I do not believe in casting it out altogether. The principal object of my amendment is to bring this thing back to the people.

Mr. BORAH. What would be the virtue of having the legislature discuss it? What would be attained by that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Publicity, a general understanding of its terms, the significance of the amendment, and the furnishing of information to the public generally before they vote.

Mr. BORAH. I think that could all be secured, and ought to be secured, by the discussion in the campaign in which the popular vote was to be recorded.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But, Mr. President, the Senator has said that in campaigns those things are not discussed.

Mr. BORAH. If the only discussion which takes place is before the legislature, and if, the legislature having adjourned, it then goes to the people without any further discussion, certainly there would be no real presentation of it to the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To that I can not agree. I think any discussion of it, even though it be small or for a short time, is to the good.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand it to be the Senator's idea that each amendment to the Constitution, when submitted to the States, would first go to the legislature and then the legislature would discuss it, and if they saw fit then they would submit it to the people?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. If the people saw fit to amend their own statutes or Constitution, as the case might be, the legislature would have to submit it. It is not to be left to the discretion of the legislature. Note the phrase, "The States may require."

Mr. BORAH. I understand that. That is precisely what I had in mind. If, for instance, the State of Ohio should have incorporated in its constitution a provision that all constitutional amendments should be submitted to direct vote of the people, that would be an expression on the part of the State. The State would have spoken upon the proposition. Then the legislature, under the provision of the constitution of the State of Ohio that it must go to direct vote of the people, would have nothing to do with it except such cursory discussion as they might see fit to give it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They must vote on it. That is what happened in Ohio.

Mr. BORAH. But that would not be what would happen here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; "the legislatures which may ratify" is the language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand that under the provisions of the joint resolution the action of the State legislature would be perfunctory in any sense whatever.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not perfunctory.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No matter what the State provided concerning submission to the people, under this amendment ratification would have to come from the legislature, but it would be ineffective unless afterwards ratified by the people. In every case under this amendment ratification must be by the legislature, one branch of which was elected after submission of the proposed amendment, but the people of the State might go further than that and say even that would not amend the Constitution until the action of the legislature was ratified by the people.

Mr. BORAH. Am I to understand it is the Senator's construction of the proposed amendment that if a State should put into its constitution the proposition that the amendment should be ratified by direct vote of the people, it would still have to come back to the legislature for a vote?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And if the legislature turned it down the popular vote would have no effect?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would be canceled.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, that presents an almost insuperable obstacle to the proposition, because the idea of permitting the people to vote upon it would be a perfectly idle matter unless the legislature should see fit to conform its ratification to that of the people. In other words, the legislature could absolutely annul the popular vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the plain language of the joint resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Then under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York the people really have no voice in it except as that voice may at last be heeded by the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The people have a complete veto under a strict construction of the language.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But suppose the legislature rejects it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand, and I was coming to that. The Senator from Idaho said they have nothing to do with it at all, and I wanted to correct the impression.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He does not say so now, I think.

Mr. BORAH. I was trying to put a construction upon it which would justify the idea put out in favor of this amendment that it was "back to the people." As it turns out, it is not back to the people in any practical sense at all. It is back to the legislature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is back to the people in the sense that their consent must be obtained before the amendment to the Constitution is adopted, if they want to exercise their right to consent.

Mr. BORAH. The language is:

That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed.

That is in case the legislature ratifies.

That any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote.

May I ask the Senator again just what he understands by that language? Suppose the constitutional amendment goes to the State legislature and the State legislature rejects it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then under a strict construction of the amendment I do not believe there is opportunity for action by the people. That is well worthy of consideration. We are discussing making it double-handed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Furthermore, if the Senator will pardon me, unless the legislature ratifies it, it can be acted upon and rejected by a legislature, one branch of which must have been chosen since the amendment was submitted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut to state his observation again?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Under the language of the amendment, in line 11 of the proviso, it is provided:

That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed.

Suppose there is a legislature that is not ratifying but is rejecting? A legislature, the members of one house of which have not been elected since the amendment was proposed, could reject the amendment finally under the language of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe the Senator would want that to happen. I do not think he wants a legislature to act upon it at all either way, in that event.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Legislatures should not be permitted to pass upon it unless the members of one house have been elected subsequent to submission of the proposed amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language could be improved there to make that clear, possibly, and in the other case that follows.

Mr. BORAH. As it is written now, it is almost a certainty for rejection, but when it comes to ratification the people could pass upon it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they may pass upon it with full force and effect.

Mr. BORAH. I am sure the Senator would want to amend that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am perfectly willing to accept any suggestion along that line.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator would not have rejection made easy, as it now stands, and ratification made exceedingly difficult?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Whatever is done, I want done deliberately.

Mr. BORAH. The substitute provides:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, upon the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution when ratified by a vote of the qualified electors in three-fourths of the several States, said election to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe, and that until three-fourths of the States shall have ratified or more than one-fourth of the States shall have rejected a proposed amendment any State may in like manner change its vote: Provided, That if at any time more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the proposed amendment, said rejection shall be final and further consideration thereof by the States shall cease: Provided further, That any amendment proposed hereunder shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution as provided in the Constitution within six years from the date of submission thereof to the States by the Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The first word in line 16, on page 3, should be "thereof" instead of "hereof."

Mr. BORAH. Yes. That submits the question directly to popular vote in the States. Whether it is ratification or rejection, the people have the first and final and only say in regard to it. It seems to me that in making the Constitution, in changing the fundamental law and making the charter, which is the people's charter, the question ought to go directly to a vote of the people. If it is of sufficient importance to warrant discussion and to call forth general public interest, the direct vote will really and effectually record the desires of the people in regard to it. No constitutional amendment is likely to be submitted to the people, requiring a two-thirds vote of the Congress before it shall be submitted, until it shall have become of sufficient importance and of sufficient concern to elicit the approval or disapproval of the people as nearly as any popular question can.

I favor the substitute for the reason that it is a direct appeal to popular vote upon a constitutional question. I think that ought to be as nearly true as can be made true under our system of government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute. On page 2, in line 22, after the word "whenever," I move to strike out the words "two-thirds of both Houses" and insert in lieu thereof "a majority of the Members elected to each House," so as to read:

The Congress, whenever a majority of the Members elected to each House shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution.

And so forth.

Mr. President, I think one great process of evolution in the Government of the United States has been the change from the original theory that the people should not participate in the Government. We started out by providing that only one branch of the Congress should be elected by direct vote of the people. Senators were elected by the legislatures. The President was elected and still is elected by an electoral college and not by direct vote of the people. Perhaps that method was wise at that time. Perhaps our people in those days had not reached the stage where they were entitled to self-government. But there has been a constant process of evolution to get away from that idea.

The first great amendment that enfranchised a great portion of our people was that abolishing slavery. Then we had that followed by the amendment providing for direct election of United States Senators, and by the nineteenth amendment giving the right of suffrage to women. George Washington said in his farewell address:

The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.

We have fenced around the amendment of our Constitution by so many barriers that it is only after a generation of campaign and of education that we are able to get an amendment at all. It is defeated over and over again by the different political influences that arise in our country. I think that while the people should have the sole power as provided in the substitute for the ratification of constitutional amendments, they should really have the power to initiate amendments to the Constitution. The amendment I have proposed only goes to the extent of permitting the Congress of the United States, by a majority of those elected in each House of the Congress, to submit a constitutional amendment to the people. It requires two-thirds at the present time and would require two-thirds under the amendment or substitute if adopted.

I fully agree with the argument of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as to the difference between the substitute and the original joint resolution; but I think that the people are entitled to have submitted to them for their consideration amendments to their fundamental law on the vote of a majority of their Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Several years ago, Mr. President, I introduced an amendment proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States along the lines of the Walsh amendment to the Wadsworth joint resolution; that is, I introduced an amendment providing, in effect, that the constitutional amendments proposed to the several States should be submitted to the electors of the States for ratification instead of to the legislatures. That amendment was reported favorably by unanimous vote of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, but at a time in the session when it could not obtain consideration and action. It was debated on several occasions for short periods, but intervening business came up, and so many other amendments designed to carry it further and to enlarge it and to change the Constitution in other respects were introduced to it that it failed to come to a vote at all in the Senate. So I was very glad to see the Senator from New York introduce his amendment, which brought the subject again before the Committee on the Judiciary.

I have given the matter the best consideration which I am capable of giving to it, and after such consideration I voted in the committee, and feel constrained to vote here, in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the amendment introduced by the Senator from New York.

The amendment of the Senator from Montana proposes to submit proposed constitutional amendments which shall receive favorable action of two-thirds of the Members of both Houses of Congress directly to the electors of the States under such rules and regulations as the States themselves may provide.

I favor the Walsh amendment for this, among other reasons: As I stated several days ago in a colloquy on the floor, the matter of amending the Constitution of the United States is no different nor other from the subject matter of amending the constitution of a single State. They are both amendments to the organic law of a government. It requires just as much brains and just as much consideration and wisdom to act upon one as it does to act upon the other.

The constituency in a State which acts upon an amendment to its own constitution is already authorized under the constitution of every State to be the judge of whether that amendment shall take effect or not after it has been recommended to it by the legislature. If the constituency of a State is capable of considering and acting upon an amendment to its own State constitution it is equally capable of deciding whether or not it wants the United States Constitution amended. Indeed, the question of amending the Constitution of the United States, if it differs from the constitution of a State, is the same question as amending the constitution of a State, because when the Constitution of the United States has been amended, ipso facto, by that very act, automatically, the constitution of every State which conflicts with it is amended so as to accord with the Constitution of the United States; so that there can be no difference in the demand upon the intelligence or the character and quality of the mind or capacity of those who are to act upon constitutional amendments, whether to State constitutions or the Federal Constitution. Therefore, why should there remain in the Constitution any provision for the submission of amendments to the legislatures of the States?

I am not criticizing the existing system in the sense of saying that we have not gotten along under the present Constitution and the methods provided for its amendment fairly well for 135 years, but I do say I think the method can be improved upon; and I think it can be very much improved upon. I do not see why the people themselves should not have submitted to them as electors of the States the question of amending the United States Constitution.

I see very little to commend in the process suggested by the Senator from New York. The object of his amendment and of his proposed change is really, as the Senator from Idaho has suggested, to bring the question, so far as possible, back to the people instead of to the legislatures. If it be correct that the legislatures are the better qualified to decide such questions and that we shall get better results by letting the legislatures ratify an amendment which is proposed to the Constitution, then we ought to leave the Constitution alone. If the object is to get the real judgment of the mass of the people, I do not see but that we should get it better by submitting the question directly to all the people than we should by submitting it to legislatures which have been chosen by the people, thereby removing it one step from the people. I know the Senator from New York thinks it would receive better consideration in that way and better explanation and debate; but, Mr. President, that is only a matter of opinion.

It seems to me it can be said with a great deal of force that where the amendment is submitted to the people themselves, there will be a great deal more debate upon it, more explanation to the people, than there would be where it was only submitted to the legislature, after that legislature had been chosen. I think some such feeling as that must lie at the base of the action of the Senator from New York himself, in view of his argument in justification of his process of submission to the legislatures. The Senator from New York said that we are only going back to the people with proposed constitutional amendments, in so far as one branch of the legislature which is to consider them shall have been elected by the people since the amendment was submitted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All I want the legislature to do is to help inform the public before they vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree to that, but the Senator in providing that at least one branch of the legislature acting upon the ratification of a proposed constitutional amendment must be chosen after the amendment was submitted to the States, thinks that he would get a better debate upon the amendment, because he says it would be an issue in the election of the candidates for representative and State senator running in the campaign. There is where I differ with him. It might be alluded to, and it might be an issue, but it would not, in my judgment, be half so much of an issue as if the amendment itself was submitted to all the people, because then that topic would be squarely in print in the newspapers, and there would be a campaign upon that amendment. If it were a very immaterial amendment there would not be much campaign about it, no matter who considered it; it would go as a matter of course, but any vital amendment affecting a fundamental right of the people, if submitted to the people themselves, could not help being a cause of discussion and a subject of debate, not only by the candidates but by the speakers in the campaign, and by the newspaper press all over the country. Furthermore, I think that it would be a valuable educational process for the people themselves.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I have been listening with the greatest pleasure to his pointed and instructive observations about this matter and have obtained a great deal of help and much light from the Senator, but does he not think that the reference of an amendment to the judiciary committee of the State legislature, which is, of course, composed exclusively of lawyers, men who not only have a good knowledge of the law but are more or less trained in political history, would result in a very searching examination of the amendment in all of its bearings and that the discussion that would follow would be of great advantage in diffusing general knowledge of the amendment and of its merits and demerits? I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator says about the possibility of constitutional amendments sometimes being overlooked in political campaigns. The people as a rule are more interested in the rivalries of candidates than they are in constitutional amendments—that has been my experience—unless the constitutional amendments are of a very vital and fundamental character. I certainly think it would be of very great advantage to have a constitutional amendment first strained, so to speak, through the sieve of the legislature before it reaches the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I admit freely that there are two sides to this question. We have had one side for 135 years. If it can not be improved, I am sure I do not want to make any change. I do not believe that the public interest is advanced by multiplicity of laws, nor that progress consists in mere motion, although it may be in the wrong direction. This matter is a serious matter.

I admit freely that the statement made by the Senator from Maryland has been the theory upon which the constitutional provision has been based hitherto—that there would be a straining of the matter by the legislature, who were themselves a selected body, and by the judiciary committee, which is, so to speak, a second strainer of the legislature composed of lawyers supposed to be skilled and qualified in the discussion of such questions, and that they would get better results in that way than by a submission to the people themselves. But the Senator, in order to make up his mind which of the two methods is preferable, must consider the results that we have been getting and that this proposed amendment is an attempt to cure. Although the members of the judiciary committee of any legislative body have more technical knowledge, perhaps, and are better qualified from their knowledge of legal history and or governmental questions to judge of such a matter, that does not avail them when pressure is put on them, when the organized minority with its fund and its finance and its appeal to the public and its avenues of publicity and its worked-up artificial enthusiasm gets going. The Senator himself this afternoon has been recounting the results that have come from the very judiciary committees to which he refers now as a safeguard, and it does not work; it does not prove that it is a safeguard.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator a moment, in that case the legislatures were not subject to popular referendum. I think that would have a powerful influence over the legislature.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What does the Senator mean when he says the legislature was not subject to a popular referendum?

Mr. BRUCE. The legislature had the exclusive power to ratify or reject the constitutional amendment. They did not have the possibility, in fact, the certainty, of a revision by the people hanging over their heads.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. One reason, also, why the legislatures as at present constituted, and without a referendum, are inclined to ratify too easily is this:

In the first place, before the proposed amendment gets to the legislature it has the moral effect of a two-thirds vote of both branches of Congress, which is quite persuasive with the ordinary legislature, most of the members of which are new men, with a few scattered older members. When you say to a small State, with a green legislature, that "the great Congress of the United States, by a two-thirds vote of both Houses, have thought that a certain amendment was necessary"—as the language of the Constitution provides when we submit it—it is a very persuasive thing to a legislature. When that is backed up and fortified by the influence produced by the organized minority and the nationally organized propaganda which has been powerful enough by its organization and resources all over the country to obtain two-thirds votes in both branches of Congress; when it precipitates itself in mass attack upon the green legislature of a single State, moving from one to the other seriatim as they take up the matter, the sweep is irresistible and the legislatures are stampeded. They are stampeded largely by our action, and we do not wholly perform our duty, because when we hear an insistent call, a persistent propaganda for a constitutional amendment, and it is sustained, year after year, we finally begin to take the view that although individually we may not think it is the best thing to do, we ought not to stand in the way of the legislature of our own State saying whether they want it or not.

As the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] says, it is very easy to "pass the buck." When you get a great constituency at home, when you are yourself a candidate, shouting for some constitutional amendment which is artificially propagated and maintained, perhaps by your opponent, with a lot of newspapers shouting for it, backed up by organizations of all kinds of well-meaning people who you think are on the wrong track, perhaps, it is very difficult for a Senator to stand up on his own individual opinion and vote "No" on a thing that they are demanding simply to have submitted to them.

We can not prevent the pressure on us, of course, by any constitutional amendment; but I say that inasmuch as so many things go through Congress by reason of that artificially generated pressure, I would rather trust the conservatism of all the people than I would the conservatism of such portion of the people as happen to be members of a legislature that year when they are to be beset in each State by the forces that have made Congress itself surrender to their demands.

As I said in starting, we admit the capacity of the people to deal with their own constitutions, and not one of them can be changed unless a majority of the electors of the State who care enough about it to go to the polls approve of it. The Constitution itself states that the people made it. It does not say that "We, the sovereign States," or "We the legislatures of the States," or "We, the State governments," but "We, the people of the United States," made that Constitution; and it was ratified by conventions elected directly by the people for that particular purpose and no other. If a legislature of a State were elected for that particular purpose and no other, it would be like a convention. The convention, at least, is elected upon that specific issue. I think, of the two systems or choices between a legislature and a convention, I would infinitely prefer the judgment of a convention elected upon that issue; but if the judgment of a convention elected upon that issue is to be taken, you had better take the judgment of the people who elected it upon that issue. They are the ultimate source of authority who elected the delegates to the convention.

There is no surety about these changes. They are matters of opinion.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has just offered an amendment to the Walsh amendment proposing that instead of two-thirds of both branches of Congress being allowed to submit an amendment to the several States a majority of both branches shall be allowed to do it. Mr. President, I do not think that is wise at this time. It may be that the country will want to come to that. They have majority rule in most other things, not in all. We require two-thirds in the ratification of treaties and other important things of that kind.

Here is an amendment of the fundamental law. I suppose the thought in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when they required two-thirds of both Houses of Congress in order to propose an amendment was to prevent a political party who happened to be temporarily in the ascendant by a mere majority, by mere arbitrary action, out of political spite or seeking political advantage, to be allowed to recommend an amendment to the Constitution.

It may be in the future, if it is tried, that the amendment of the Constitution by the suggestion of a mere majority of the House and the Senate may work better than to require two-thirds, but as at present advised I would not touch that part of the Constitution, and I would not try to complicate this amendment—which I think is a wise one—by introducing that additional feature of contention into it. As I say, we lost the previous amendment to the Constitution in this respect by the offering of amendments seeking to carry it further and further, and every such amendment which is offered tends to raise more opposition to the good that you are already trying to get through.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I appreciate the argument which the Senator makes, but this amendment incorporates the old two-thirds proposition; and it seems to me that when we are requiring three-fourths of the States to ratify we have an abundance of safeguards to prevent any mere arbitrary action of a majority upon the adoption of amendments to the Constitution. I think one of the great causes of unrest among our people is these restraints that prevent them from having, in a reasonable time and way, a direct voice in their Government. Whatever might have been the intelligence of our forefathers, I believe that at the present time the American people are equal to the occasion. Of course, the Senator's argument has been along that same line, and therefore it seems to me that the time has come when the proposing of amendments for the consideration of the people should be easy, so that they may more readily have something to say about their Government in a direct way.

I do not want to do anything hastily about the situation; but when I read the history of how slow we have been in the income-tax amendment and the woman-suffrage amendment and all these other amendments I think it is time for us to speed up and get a little abreast of the progress of the times.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course, I understand that the Senator who offered the amendment to abolish the two-thirds rule and substitute the majority rule in this respect believed in it. I did not expect to change his view about it. I was simply suggesting that I thought those of us who were interested in getting the case decided by the right tribunal were more interested in getting that thing through than in making other changes and experiments; and the more changes and experiments you heap together in the same joint resolution, of course the more difficult you make it to get the two-thirds vote which is required to get it through both Chambers of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am so strongly in favor of direct ratification or ratification by direct vote that I myself do not want to embarrass it by doing anything else. I think that is an important step toward progress, and in that respect I am in complete accord with the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I understand that the Senator would not propose this amendment if he thought it would tend to defeat the main proposition, and perhaps it will not. I mean, if it were attached to it, and a majority of the Senate voted to put it on, then we might not get a two-thirds vote for the complete joint resolution. I do not say that by way of threat, but simply to show what the parliamentary situation is that this proposed amendment can be amended by a mere majority vote of the Senate now acting in Committee of the Whole, but if amendments are put on which two-thirds of the Senate do not believe in, we may not get anything out of this procedure.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say upon this occasion. I could talk longer, and answer more of the points which have been made, but for the present I yield the floor.

BIRTHDAY OF NEAL DOW.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall take but a few moments of the Senate at this time, but I rise to call attention to the fact that to-day is the anniversary of the birth, 120 years ago, of General Neal Dow, of Maine. While he was a citizen of Maine he was even more a citizen of the United States—we of the Pacific coast claim him as one of our very greatest benefactors and so I am glad to do what I am doing. General Dow was one of the most striking personalities in a century conspicuous for pioneers and discoverers in every field of research and invention. He was born in the city of Portland, lived there through all the labors and battles of an eventful and heroic life, and honored and respected for his sturdy character and his moral and physical courage in the stirring period of the Civil War and the testing times of conflict in promotion of the temperance reform; he died there at the ripe age of 93, as the best known and most highly honored citizen of a State conspicuous for the number and character of its great men.

Neal Dow is chiefly known for his part in the adoption of what is called the Maine law, of which he is "The Father."

This was the original State prohibition law. Such had been its influence for the moral and material welfare, in spite of all opposition and at times poor enforcement, that Maine has maintained this policy unbrokenly for almost two-thirds of a century, and other States, convinced of the righteousness and expediency of the policy, one after another since Kansas, in 1882, and North Dakota, in 1889, have voluntarily adopted prohibition until 33 out of our 48 States had enacted prohibition laws for themselves before the eighteenth amendment was adopted.

Neal Dow's name and fame are known throughout the civilized world where an ever-increasing warfare is being waged against the arch destroyer of the human race—alcohol.

The following quotation relative to the Maine prohibition law, its effects and enforcement, is taken from a volume of reminiscences of General Dow, and contains much of value to be remembered in the situation with which we are confronted in the nation to-day:

Ever since the enactment of the Maine law, the liquor interests in and out of Maine, through every agency it has been able to control, has insisted that prohibition has increased the sale and consumption of liquor; and many individuals, above suspicion of any interest in the traffic, have been misled by that clamor, though the constant and virulent opposition of the trade to prohibition should suggest that in such assertion as the liquor sellers and their sympathizers are stating what they know to be untrue.

To all such declarations, coming from what source they may, I enter a general denial without fear of contradiction by any honest, observing citizen of Maine, and maintain that whenever and wherever any reasonably active and earnest effort has been made to enforce prohibition in this State the results have amply justified the hopes of its friends. That such has been the case as to a very large portion of the State has been publicly certified to again and again by large numbers of our clergymen and by others among our best citizens, including men as widely known as are ex-Governors Lot M. Morrill, Sidney Perham, Nelson Dingley, jr., Selden Connor, and Frederick Rolfe; by United States Senators Eugene Hale and William P. Frye; by ex-Governor and ex-Vice President of the United States Hannibal Hamlin, and by James G. Blaine.

A volume might be filled with the testimony of these and other citizens of Maine to the great benefits the State has derived through the policy of prohibition, but I will content myself with quoting from a recent letter of James G. Blaine, which has been extensively circulated, in which he said:

"The people of Maine are industrious and provident, and wise laws have aided them. They are sober, earnest, and thrifty. Intemperance has steadily decreased in the State since the first enactment of the prohibitory law, until now it can be said with truth that there is no equal number of people in the Anglo Saxon world among whom so small an amount of intoxicating liquor is consumed as among the 650,000 inhabitants of Maine."

If the absolute suppression of the liquor trade all through our territory were required to prove the usefulness of prohibition, it might be said with truth that it is a failure. But such a test is applied to no other statute in the criminal code, and there is no reason for its application here. It may be admitted that in some places, most of the time, and in others, at various times, the enforcement of the law has been lax, and that as a consequence the traffic in a more or less unattractive form has obtained a foothold in such places. But, on the other hand, at times in substantially all of the State, in a great portion of it for most of the time, and in some of it for all of the time, the traffic has been practically extinct, while scarcely anywhere for any portion of the time has such of the trade as has existed been conducted with the seductiveness of surroundings that gives to it its greatest power for harm.

A magnificent steamboat is lying at the wharf. What is her purpose? To carry tons of valuable freight worth many thousands of dollars and hundreds of precious lives across the seas. She is constructed to safely ride the stormiest waves with power sufficient to breast the fiercest storms, but she is lying there idle. Her propeller is not moving. She is a steamboat, to be sure, but some one tells us that she is a failure. Why? Because she is not moving; she is doing nothing. And persons standing by, persons professing to desire that freight and passengers shall be safely carried across the ocean, and who would gladly approve of steamboats, so they say, if they could do that, applaud the man who says she is a failure. Well, after a time the wheels begin to revolve, the ropes are cast off—

"She walks the waters like a thing of life."

She is no failure now, though she is the same steamboat that an hour ago was idle, denounced as a failure by the loungers on the wharf. All that was necessary was an order for the engineer to move the throttle valve and let on the steam.

If anywhere in Maine there has been a failure under prohibition to enjoy the advantages always to be expected from the absence of the liquor traffic, it is due not to prohibition but because some one whose duty it was to apply it has failed so to do, or, if it is preferred, because the people have not insisted that only those who could be trusted to perform their official duty should be vested with official power. There is no more difficulty with prohibition than in the case of the steamboat.

With the consent of the Senate, I ask that there may be added to my remarks appraisements of General Dow and his work by ex-Governor and ex-Senator Morrill, of Maine; Reverend Doctor Tyng, Henry Ward Beecher, and Reverend Doctor Cheever, of New York; and also a letter just received from the president of the Neal Dow Association for World Peace and Prohibition, Mr. Arthur C. Jackson, of Portland, which speaks of a plan to place a memorial statue of General Dow in National Statuary Hall, a project which I hope in the near future may be successfully carried out.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In regard to Mr. Dow, he is one of the best men that ever lived. He is warm-hearted, generous, and candid. No man enters the legislative hall, no man goes to a mass meeting and is received with such enthusiasm as Mr. Dow is. Whatever he says is listened to with profound respect. (Governor Morrill, of Maine.)

I would rather go with Neal Dow's reputation to posterity and to have to meet at last the gathering up of the influence of his life in the noble contemplation of an eternal world than be any other man who lives or has lived in this country, the magnificent Father of his Country not excepted. (Reverend Doctor Tyng, of New York (Episcopal).)

THE MAINE LAW.

It is a legislation of consummate wisdom, thoroughness, and energy. Maine is worthy, if her course from this step is straightforward, to direct the legislation of the whole world and the policy of all civilized communities. (Reverend Doctor Cheever, of New York, pastor of the Congregational Church of the Puritans, New York, 1846 to 1898.)

Referring to the Maine (prohibitory) law, Henry Ward Beecher said:

We ask that liquor dealers and their dwellings be treated as we treat counterfeiters and their shops or houses. We propose to treat men who secrete liquor for sale just as we would a smuggler who stored contraband laces and silks for sale. We propose to treat men who keep, for illegal and criminal traffic, the implements of death to the citizen just as in time of war we would treat those suspected of treasonable intercourse with an enemy and of keeping arms and provisions in their dwellings for the aid and comfort of an enemy.

THE NEAL DOW ASSOCIATION, FOR WORLD PEACE AND PROHIBITION,
Portland, Me., March 19, 1924.

HON. WENLEY L. JONES,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Thursday, March 20, 1924, is the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the birth of Neal Dow, the author of the Maine law and father of prohibition, one of the greatest benefactors of mankind.

The Neal Dow Association for World Peace and Prohibition requests your good offices in placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the purposes of this beneficent organization as formulated in its brief constitution, and invites the further attention of Congress and all believers in the potency and power of peace and prohibition to eventually achieve through education the inestimable blessing of world sobriety and brotherhood to the intention of the association to secure the presentation of a worthy statue of Neal Dow for Statuary Hall, under the provision of the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, which reads:

"The President is authorized to invite each and all of the States to provide and furnish statues in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof, and illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civil or military service, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives—which is hereby set apart as a national statuary hall."

Prominent in this old House of Representatives, where Webster, Clay, Calhoun, and a host of other leading American statesmen aroused the patriotism of a former generation, now stands among 50 others from the several States a striking statue by Simmons of Maine's first Governor—William King. It was provided nearly 50 years ago, and you will surely agree that no other among the long list of illustrious citizens of Maine is quite as worthy to fill the quota of its national commemoration as Neal Dow, or any other time more peculiarly fitting than the present.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR C. JACKSON, President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

REFUND OF INCOME TAXES.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Secretary Mellon in reference to refunds of income taxes for the years 1921 and 1922, and also the figures in reference to those two years taken from the record furnished by the Secretary.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 17, 1924.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of March 11, with reference to the publication of refunds of income taxes, I beg to advise you that the annual report covering refunds of taxes illegally collected for the fiscal year 1921 was submitted by me to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of December 5, 1921. The annual report of refunds for the fiscal year 1922 was submitted by me to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of December 4, 1922. This report was returned by the Ways and Means Committee for insertion of addresses and redelivered to that committee in two supplements under date of January 19, 1923. The annual report of all refunds for the fiscal year 1923 was submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of December 3, 1923.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I had risen with the expectation of making a suggestion designed to meet the criticism of the joint resolution of the Senator from New York made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in the course of his remarks. The Senator from New York tells me that he himself has prepared a form of words which he thinks meets the difficulty, and therefore what I was going to say upon that point would be unnecessary to inflict upon the Senate.

I have followed this debate with a very great deal of interest and attention. I am unable to share the view of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that this subject is one unworthy of consideration at the present time. It seems to me that while the experiences incident to the adoption of recent amendments are fresh in our minds, and at a time when we are not distracted by the pendency of any great amendment involving a question of policy upon which the country is divided, is the ideal time to propose for consideration a measure designed to prevent in future the evils which have been incident to the process of amendment in the past.

I may also say that I ought not to be suspected, in advocating the proposal of the Senator from New York, of advocating it in the spirit of one who is irritated as a result of action taken by the country upon recent amendments, because I was one of those who favored the income-tax amendment, who favored the prohibitory amendment, and who favored the woman suffrage amendment. I speak from the point of view of one who took an affirmative position on all three of those amendments.

Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho, and, indeed, with all others who have spoken in this debate, that ultimately it is the will of the people which expresses itself when their Constitution is amended. I like to think of the Constitution as being the body of good resolutions which the American people have formed for self-government. The Constitution is nothing more than the ordered good resolutions for government which at a certain time in history the people have imposed upon themselves to determine the course of their national life, and therefore it must be true that when we are to add to those resolutions or subtract from them it is the people who are to be affected by the resolutions who must be heard from. Everybody, I take it, is agreed upon that proposition.

The question is how the people may be best informed respecting the proposal pending at any given time to modify the body of resolutions by which they are governed. Are they more likely to be well informed to the end that they may vote intelligently if the pending measure is thrown in with other issues in a popular election, usually held in the month of November in all the States? Or are they more likely to be intelligent and informed respecting a pending measure if it shall have been made an issue in the election of members of one at least of the branches of the legislature which may be called upon to act upon the amendment, either affirmatively or negatively? I think that it is a question requiring some delicacy of judgment. It does not seem to me that it is one of those questions which can be made the subject of demonstration.

My own judgment is that those questions receive most attentive consideration from the people of a State which have been injected into issues that are peculiarly local, either those issues which concern the election of senators or representatives in the State legislature, or which have received discussion during the sessions of the State legislature and are reported from day to day in the local papers.

I apprehend that it is really a question of effective publicity of the amendment for the information of the intelligence of the people of the States, which is the thing to which we are addressing ourselves, and I can not change the minds of those who believe that the legislature has no useful function to perform in that matter, but I believe for myself that it has.

My observation is that the process of electing members of the two houses of the legislature is a process which results in widespread interest on the part of the people in important measures upon which the people so elected are going to be called upon to act, and if, indeed, the State shall exercise the power which will be given it under the form of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York and shall embody in its fundamental law a provision that the act of its legislature must be ratified by popular vote, then we shall have the spectacle of the legislature of the State debating at length and at large the question of ratification or rejection of the amendment for the edification of the voters of the Commonwealth, and the subsequent reference of its decision, be it negative or affirmative, to the body of the electorate of the State.

I say its conclusion, whether affirmative or negative, because I intended to make a suggestion which would change the pending proposal in such a way as to provide for either of those contingencies. I believe the Senator from New York will make that proposal.

So the substance of what I wish to say, Mr. President, is this: In the first place, that such a change should be made. In the second place, that as between the method of direct reference to popular vote and the utilization of the legislature as a forum for the information of the people, I am in favor of the latter, and I very much hope that the constitutional amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will prevail rather than the other.

I share the view of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that the chance that any proposal of this important sort will prevail is very much prejudiced if we load it up with a proposal to change the percentage of membership of the two Houses of Congress which is necessary to start a constitutional amendment upon its way. For that reason, and that reason only, I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] will not prevail.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the text of the original joint resolution, but I am not sure that I have that right under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the Senator from New York would take precedence over the pending amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I move to strike out, on page 2, line 13, after the word "proposed," the words "that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "that any State may provide for a popular vote to affirm or reverse the action of its legislature."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is obvious we can not hope to get a vote this evening on the pending amendment, and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 21, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 20, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. TILSON).

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, infinite in power, wisdom, and goodness, we would approach Thee in the spirit of humility and in the consciousness of our needs. Thou hast intrusted us as Thy bearers of truth and justice, and we would earnestly beseech Thee to be the inspiration of all our conceptions of duty and the guide of all our deliberations. May we have Thy approval of all our countless acts, which pass observation, yet mean so much in human happiness. Oh, do Thou share our lot and our burden. Then nobly will our work be done, and Thou wilt establish it in human lives and homes. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the question of immigration and the Nordic race.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of immigration. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the speech the gentleman's own?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. My own.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, it would be idle to pretend that there is behind the so-called Johnson bill for the restriction of immigration any motive other than the desire to discriminate against certain peoples coming from eastern and southern Europe and to give preference to certain other people coming from western and northern Europe. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House has failed to heed the eloquent and earnest appeals of the able and well-informed opponents of the measure, and has chosen to place itself upon record as supporting the unfounded claim of the restrictionists that the peoples from northern and western Europe are better, finer, and more acceptable to the United States than those of eastern and southern Europe. Although the restrictionists are unable to deny that the peoples from southern and eastern Europe have contributed vastly to the prosperity and progress of the United States, they nevertheless indulge in the age-old and repeatedly refuted claim that the peoples from eastern and southern Europe tend to lower our standard of living.

The restrictionists charge the peoples from eastern and southern Europe with every conceivable evil. They not only depress the American standard of living, but they fill our institutions for the insane and the criminals, they clog our industrial centers, they undermine our ideals, and breed so rapidly that soon there will be no trace left of the American Nation. It is the fear of this last calamity that has prevailed upon the members of the committee to adopt the 1890 census as a quota basis for future immigration instead of the 1910 census. They hope thereby to equalize the number of rapidly breeding peoples of southern and eastern Europe with the slowly breeding people of northern and western Europe. By permitting more peoples from northern and western Europe to come here we will have an evenly balanced foreign population, and happiness will reign supreme. In short, we must have more "Nordics," more peoples with blue eyes, blond hair, and long statures.

The following table shows how the committee, by the adoption of the 1890 census, hopes to increase the number of Nordics and decrease the number of peoples from eastern and southern Europe to be admitted. It will be seen that the so-called Nordics are to be permitted an annual immigration quota of 112,987 out of a total of 169,083, leaving only 56,096 for the combined quotas of the other 39 peoples.

Estimated immigration quotas based on Census Reports of 1890, 1900, 1910, and 1920.

TWO PER CENT PLUS 200 FOR EACH NATIONALITY.

"The term 'quota' when used in reference to any nationality means 200, and in addition thereto 2 per cent of the number of foreign-born individuals of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States."

The obvious purpose of this discrimination is the adoption of an unfounded anthropological theory that the nations which are favored are the progeny of fictitious and hitherto unsuspected Nordic ancestors, while those discriminated against are not classified as belonging to that mythical ancestral stock. No scientific evidence worthy of consideration was introduced to substantiate this pseudoscientific proposition. It is pure fiction and the creation of a journalistic imagination. All we know is that these immigrants are all human beings, and none of them is regarded by the majority of the committee as undesirable so long as they meet the test of the act of 1917.

Those who in the past have been admitted into this country, whether born in one part of Europe or another, have been industrious and useful accessions to our population. Many of them have become citizens and have performed their civic duties and during the war entered our Army and Navy in large numbers and were loyal to our Government. Their children, whether they were born in this country or arrived here at an early age, have been trained in our public schools and can rarely be distinguished from native Americans of elder generations. Those who have come from the lands upon which a bar sinister is to be imposed have made valuable contributions to science, art, and literature, to a hundred different industries, to every imaginable form of commerce, and have performed much of the heavy work in our mines, furnaces, manufactories, farms, and forests, upon our railroads, and other public works. Without them our material progress would not have been as rapid as it has proved to be; and they are needed to-day as they have been in the past. It is closing our eyes to known facts to suggest that this country, large sections of which are sparsely populated and whose development has not even begun, can not absorb additional immigrants, and that hereafter only men of certain types or of certain creeds or nationalities may be added to our great army of workers.

In their eagerness to indulge in this discrimination the restrictionists, who have made propaganda for it and who do not understand the real sentiment of this country, forget that hundreds of thousands of immigrants who have come to this country for the purpose of making it their home, of rendering loyal service whenever called upon to do so, and of exerting themselves in every direction to advance its interest, and notwithstanding statements to the contrary these immigrants have become citizens of the United States, and that they, as well as their children, are proud and grateful for that privilege. What, we beg to ask, can be their sensations when they are told that it is proposed by an act of Congress to declare them, because of their birth and ancestry, to belong to an inferior class, and that those of their blood are henceforth to be discriminated against in our immigration laws? Is it to be expected that they will concede that those who by this legislation would be pointed out as a favored class are superior morally, physically, or mentally? Such an assumption would be contrary to human nature. It is inevitable that a feeling of resentment would be engendered by such action. It would be the first instance in our modern legislation for writing into our laws the hateful doctrine of inequality between the various component parts of our population. The consequences of such differentiation would be deplorable and in the end would be heard above the strident outcries of those who are seeking to stimulate and foster racial, religious, and national hatreds which carry with them a curse wherever they prevail.

It is interesting to examine the statistics which form a part of the majority report, and especially the table showing the future permanent residence of immigrant aliens admitted to the United States during the past quota year. It will be found that 116,129 came to New York, 36,374 to Massachusetts, 33,722 to Illinois, 36,374 to Michigan, 23,941 to New Jersey, 37,515 to Pennsylvania, a notable majority of all the immigrants who arrived.

Does the outcry against immigration emanate from those States? Decidedly not. Sound public opinion in these very States where the immigrants settle, as expressed through the most potent channels, is opposed to this contemplated discriminatory legislation and gives support to a liberal as distinguished from a hostile immigration policy. There is no complaint in those States of unemployment or lack of prosperity or lack of progress. Nor has there been any complaint from those quarters regarding the alleged unassimilability of the men and women and children who have come from southern and eastern Europe.

Let us examine the next table, which specifies by captions the occupations of immigrants admitted to the United States during the same period. The statistics relate principally to males. There were 15,056 members of various professions, 1,136 architects, 2,600 electricians, 3,302 professional engineers, 967 musicians, 2,058 teachers, 646 physicians, 470 literary and scientific persons, 226 sculptors and artists among them. There were 103,339 skilled workmen, including a large number of trades. Among those classified as miscellaneous there were 62,144 laborers, 19,152 farm laborers, 12,066 farmers, 38,283 servants, a total coming under that head of 160,578.

This is a demonstration that among these arrivals there were no drones, no persons likely to become public charges, no members of the leisure class, no drags upon the Nation. They were men of brain and brawn, ready and anxious to do their part of the world's work. It is perhaps because of their industry that objection is made to their reception in this land, where the prevalence of liberty has in the past been our proud boast.

The majority report of the House Committee on Immigration insinuates that some of those who have come from foreign countries are nonassimilable or slow of assimilation. No facts are offered in support of such a statement. The preponderance of testimony adduced before the Committee on Immigration is to the contrary. What is meant by assimilation is difficult of definition. The mere fact that an immigrant, when he arrives or even after he has lived here for a number of years, still speaks his native language does not indicate that he is not being assimilated. Every day that he lives here he imbibes American ideas. Whatever his garb may have been when he came, the first suit of clothes that he purchases with his honestly acquired earnings, which represent his creative efforts from which the country profits, is made according to the American model. His work is performed in accordance with the methods adopted in our industrial centers. He becomes familiar with our form of government. His acquaintance with our laws equals that of the average inhabitant of our country, and his obedience to them measures up to that of the average native. It is true that he reads books and newspapers printed in foreign languages, but it is by means of them that he acquires a fund of information relative to the true spirit of America. Anybody familiar with the foreign-language press, and with what it has done in the direction of educating the immigrant into an appreciation of what America stands for, can testify to this fact. The children of these foreign parents brought up in American public schools grow up without even an ability to read the foreign press.

It is likewise important to know that, however slow some immigrants may be in acquiring the ability to speak the English language fluently, to a great extent they have familiarity with more than one language, a condition which is unfortunately not true of the average native American. At all events, before such an immigrant may be naturalized he must become familiar with our language and our customs and in a general way with our form of government or else the courts which admit him to citizenship have not performed their duty. Those who have really studied the immigrant in the centers where the great majority of immigrants and their descendants have taken up their abode and are best known are able to demonstrate that he is not only capable of assimilation but that he has become assimilated to a marked degree in a remarkably short period of time, and we repeat that, so far as his children are concerned, in one generation they can not be distinguished as Americans from the elder immigration. The official records of our public schools bear eloquent testimony to this fact.

It has been fashionable of late for professional restrictionists and alarmists to behold in the immigrant a menace to our institutions. There is no justification for the charge. There may have been a few strident individuals who have enunciated doctrines which can never obtain a foothold here, but it will be found that a majority of them and those who have been most vicious have been native Americans. Our laws are adequate to deal effectively with these individuals, who, after all, confine their energies to barking. The rank and file of our immigrants are heartily opposed to these destructive radicals. What is true of the entire body of our population, both native and foreign born—that with but few exceptions all of them love this country and its institutions, are loyal to its Government, and obedient to its laws—is equally true of the recent immigrants. Any statement to the contrary is a malicious fabrication.

It has also been claimed that the immigrant has reduced the standard of living which prevails here. This is likewise untrue. Those who have lived among immigrants, as distinguished from those who write about them for the purpose of establishing a thesis, know that almost from the moment of their landing they begin to shape their lives according to the prevailing standards of living. As soon as permitted to do so those engaged in the various trades become members of labor unions, and their presence here in no manner affects the earning capacity of those who preceded them to this country. It may be that they are economical and thrifty; that they save a portion of their earnings in order to provide for the future and to secure their own homes. By doing so, however, they are merely perpetuating those standards of living which were adopted by those who have justly been held up as the models of ideal citizenship.

Complaint has been made that many immigrants congregate in the cities. That, however, is a tendency which has been manifested and has been growing even in those sections of our country or of foreign countries where immigration is not a factor, and especially is this true in all parts of the United States. That is largely due to the fact that our great industrial and commercial establishments are located in the cities. Of necessity those who engage in the occupations affiliated with the various forms of industry and commerce seek their livelihood where these important attractions are located. If they could be successfully operated in the rural districts, there is no doubt that those in search of employment would find their way into those districts to the same extent that they are now gravitating to the cities. Everybody knows that the sons and daughters of the American farmer leave their homesteads where their ancestors may have lived for decades and likewise seek their fortunes in the cities. It is, after all, the natural result of modern economic conditions as well as of the operation of the fundamental law that supply follows demand.

It is also asserted that the immigrant is clannish and lives in districts where those of his own nationality abound. Is not this true also of other strains in our population? Members of the same church, of the same social environment, of the same economic status, form little communities of their own, have their own society and club life, and rarely emerge from their own circles. It is as unlikely that they would associate with the immigrant as that the latter should expect to be welcomed by those who may date their advent into American life 30, 40, or 50 years ago or whose American pedigree may run back even as far as a century. We know, however, that it is an admirable feature of American life that an opportunity exists for everybody who is worthy to advance in civic life and social position by exerting those virtues which have at all times enabled men to progress. An analysis of the social register, a study of the biographies of the men and women who now occupy the highest rank in every department of human endeavor in this country, of those who are contributing to its development in every direction, will show that a very large percentage of them had lowly beginnings, and that many of them, and certainly their parents, arrived here as friendless immigrants. It is safe to say that there is less clannishness even among the most recent immigrants than there is in those parts of our country where there are but few immigrants and where there exists the greatest opposition to the immigrant.

There has been the further unjustifiable charge and contention that there is in this country an undigested mass of alien thought, alien sympathy, and alien purpose which creates alarm and apprehension and breeds racial hatreds. This, like most figures of speech, can not bear analysis. What is meant by alien thought and alien purpose as applied to immigrants? Does it mean that they are opposed to the land in which they live, in which they earn their livelihood, where they have established a permanent home for themselves and their children? Does it mean that they would invite conquest by foreign nations, and having to a great extent left the lands of their birth because deprived of liberty and that freedom which they enjoy in this country that they would be willing to forego the blessings that have come to them under our benign institutions? Have they not by coming here severed their political relations with foreign lands? Does any considerable portion of them ever expect to leave our shores? Have the thought and purpose of that Europe which they left behind been such as to attract instead of increase the repulsion which drove those immigrants to America? Are men apt to choose misery and unhappiness when they are enjoying contentment and comparative prosperity and are looked upon not as cannon fodder but as men? As well might it be said that the Puritans of New England, the Cavaliers of Virginia and Maryland, the Knickerbockers of New York, the Quakers of Pennsylvania, and the Scandinavians of the middle West brought with them undigested masses of alien thought, alien sympathy, and alien purpose, which made of them a menace to this country.

It is not the immigrants who are breeding racial hatreds. They are not the inventors of the new anthropology. Nor do they stimulate controversy. It would rather appear—in fact, clearly shows—to be those who are seeking to restrict or to prohibit immigration who entertain such sentiments and who are now attempting to formulate a policy which is indeed alien to the thought, the sympathy, and the purpose of the founders of the Republic and of that America which has become the greatest power for good on earth. This alleged menace is identical with that which 70 years ago was paraded as a bogey by Know-nothingism, and which, happily, made no impression upon our history except to lead a sound public opinion to keep open our doors to those who desired to come here and to make themselves a part of that grand composite—the American people.

The proponents of the Johnson bill can not justify the special privilege that they seek to have incorporated into law in favor of the peoples of northern and western Europe. I have great faith in the doctrine that all men are equal and that there is no such superiority of one people over another as is contended by the restrictionists. I know nothing of any "Nordic" race whose qualifications are alleged to be higher than those of the peoples coming from southern and eastern Europe.

At this point I am incorporating into my remarks an article by Johan J. Smertenko, in which he discusses the claim of the "Nordic" superiority, and I trust that you will devote to it a few moments of careful reading. You will then, I am sure, agree with me that these people have no valid claim to superiority. This article is to appear in the April issue of the Current History Magazine, and with their kind permission I quote it, as follows:

THE CLAIM OF "NORDIC" RACE SUPERIORITY.

[By Johan J. Smertenko, formerly lecturer on English literature and modern drama, Hunter College; later professor of journalism at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa; contributor to many American publications, including the Bookman, the Nation, and the American Mercury.]

ORIGIN OF THE PERNICIOUS DOCTRINE OF "RACE SUPERIORITY"—ITS SUBSEQUENT DEVELOPMENT IN GERMANY AND ITS RECENT APPEARANCE IN AMERICA AS AN ALARMIST WARNING AGAINST NON-NORDIC INCREASE—HYPOTHESIS DISAPPROVED BY MODERN SCIENCE.

"A nation to be great ought to be compressed in its increment by nations more civilized than itself."—(Coleridge.)

When the immigrant wrote back to his people in Ireland that in America every man is just as good as his neighbor, if not better, he expressed in a typical Irishman a universal sentiment which is undoubtedly as old as it is widespread. Every man feels in some way superior to his neighbor, whether because he is rich or poor, modest or proud, giant or pigmy, carnal or pious, quick-witted or plodding, for it is in every man's power and it is every man's custom to make a virtue of his special condition and characteristics. Moreover, in this task of marking "Superior brand" on distinctive traits and qualities, the individual does not stop with himself; he exalts similarly his family, his town, and his tribe, thus unconsciously creating a vicious circle by admiring what he has because he has it.

What is true of individuals is equally true of nations. From the earliest times a given nation's feeling of superiority to its neighbors has been one of the most powerful forces influencing and molding the life of peoples. There is hardly a nation which has not suffered because at some time in its history it acted in the belief that this feeling was a fact. Furthermore, both the records of ancient civilization and the history of our more immediate past show us that the nations have followed an identical formula to justify this national arrogance. We see, in the first place, that a given people claims to have a monopoly of some desirable quality, then we find that it believes this quality to be particularly acceptable to God and by virtue thereof becomes "the chosen people," and finally, with sanctimonious hypocrisy, the nation in question takes upon itself a mission to excuse its policy of territorial aggrandizement and all the acts of exploitation and oppression which such a policy entails. In the chronicles of every nation infected by this arrogance there is a story of misery, famine, and bloodshed, often of complete ruin, all a direct consequence of this theory of superiority. The Greeks and Jews suffered from it, it spread like a plague in France, showed itself in England during the Victorian era, and broke out in Germany a few years ago in its most violent and fatal form. The tragedy of this disease lies not so much in the theory itself as in the fact that it has always been made to serve political purposes and hence has always affected most intimately the political history of virtually every nation in the world.

Lately, however, those who would exploit man's self-conceit for political ends have substituted a racial in place of the national unit of comparison. They speak now in terms of Semite, Mongol, and Aryan, or Alpine, Nordic, and Mediterranean; they interpret God's favoritism not through oracles and prophecies, but by means of cranial dimensions and basketry weaves, and, most important development of all, they no longer attempt to establish their unique qualities but arbitrarily assert their superiority and throw the burden of proof on the "inferior" races. It would seem to the student of history that in the course of civilization mankind has had sufficient tragic experience with these delusions of chosen peoples and superior races to make it wary when another such theory is put on the market. But quite the contrary is true, and hence it becomes necessary to take notice of the most absurd claims of superiority for fear that the fanatical activity of a handful of believers may cause again irremediable harm.

EVOLUTION OF THE "NORDIC" THEORY.

One of the latest and undoubtedly one of the most absurd and pernicious applications of this "superiority" theory has made its appearance in the United States. The doctrine propounded is that the white race is biologically superior to all the others and that a certain division of the white race, called "Nordic," is the acme of its excellencies. This theory, propagated in a passionate, melodramatic manner, is finding acceptance among the ignorant, and through them is already exerting an influence on such important practical problems of American life as immigration, eugenics, and education. The theory is voiced by members of the legal profession posing as temporary anthropologists, by journalists transformed into ominous prophets, by professors seeking lecture fees, and by that curious anomaly, the lady novelist, striving for distinction as socioliterary critic.

Before we become panic-stricken with fear that the great blond race will disappear into the mysterious twilight zone to which its gods and its heroes are said to have passed in times remote, it may be profitable to examine the fundamental elements of the "Nordic" theory and to see what the anthropological and ethnic facts, which have only recently been brought to light, mean when they are interpreted in the hard, cold light of truth. The curtain for the first act of this romantic melodrama concerning our "Nordic" race rose about 70 years ago. At that time Comte Arthur de Gobineau (1816-1882), inspired by the great scientific discoveries of his time, and anxious to warn his countrymen against hybridization through intermarriage or intermingling with the Germans, who were peacefully penetrating into France, wrote his Essai sur l'Inégalité des Races Humaines (Essay on the Inequality of the Races of Mankind). Although he announced that "if the Bible declares that mankind is descended from the same common stock, all that goes to prove the contrary is mere semblance, unworthy of consideration," the count succeeded in interpreting the Scriptures in such a way as to permit him to differ from the common notion that all men are alike, inasmuch as they are all descended from Adam. He proceeded to indicate "the moral and intellectual diversity of races" and came to two important conclusions, (1) that the white race is superior to all other and (2) that to be great every nation must be pure in stock. As to the comparative greatness of the numerous divisions of the white race, Gobineau offered no opinion except in so far as his examples were drawn from the ancient Mediterranean civilization. He writes, for example:

"If Rome, in her decadence, had possessed soldiers and senators like those of the time of Fabius, Scipio, and Cato, would she have fallen prey to the barbarians of the north?"

SEIZED BY GERMANS TO GLORIFY TEUTON.

Although Gobineau's book was almost immediately translated in America to be used as an argument for slavery, it had little influence on the thought of the day. Not until the biologists, August Weismann and Gregor Mendel, formulated their theories of heredity, not until the discovery of "primitive man" offered a basis for the most imposing superstructures of speculation, did the idea of racial inequality fire overwrought and egoistic imaginations. The Weismann doctrine is based upon the idea that every individual is composed of two independent types of tissues, the germplasm and the somatoplasm. It holds that the germplasm consists of the generating cells, which reproduce themselves and pass on unchanged from generation to generation, each time building new bodies out of somatoplasm as temporary containers for this precious fluid. The argument that found most favor in the eyes of the propagators of the superior-race prejudice is that the individual to-day is essentially the same as his unknown ancestor of the neomoney era, since the vital qualities he had at the beginning were passed on by the germplasm, while the characteristics he acquired in each generation were lost at his death with the disintegration of his body.

Among the individuals who combined the supposition of Gobineau with the speculations of Weismann was a renegade Englishman named Houston Stewart Chamberlain, whose book, Die Grundlagen des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts (The Foundations of the Nineteenth Century) raised the old "chosen people" delusion to a height of magnificent absurdity which it had never before attained. Chamberlain simply and systematically classified all virtues and abilities under the heading "Teuton" and all vices and failings under that of "non-Teuton." After that one could see at a glance the superiority of the northern blond giant over the dark, stubby southerner. The Kaiser is said to have bought 30,000 copies of the book to be distributed where it would do most good. That the distribution was thoroughly efficient may be gathered by the loud and numerous echoes of these absurdities throughout Europe and America.

ALARMIST DOCTRINE IN UNITED STATES.

This statistical race ecstasy was fostered in Germany to give an appearance of scientific support to the position of the junkers and to bolster up the belief in the divine right of kings. But it was presented in America as a prophylactic against an imminent danger to mankind. In the books of Madison Grant, Lothrop Stoddard, and others, all the virtues which Chamberlain had monopolized for the Teuton were ascribed to the "Nordic," and the incense which Chamberlain, Woltmann, and Wirth burned before the idol of their own making was transferred to a shrine less bespattered by the venom of the World War.

It is significant that the authors of these publications devoted to self-admiration exhibit similar mental characteristics and qualifications and employ the same technique in setting down their dogmatic dicta. They are sentimentalists blinded by fear, staggering under a prejudice, and wholly lacking in any basis of scientific knowledge. Consciously or not, they base this fantastic farrago of cephalic indices, skull sutures, brain weights, intelligence tests, and cultural stages on the very earliest and most antiquated ethnological postulates and shun the later investigations and the demonstrated conclusions of such anthropologists, physiologists, biologists, and psychologists as Ripley, Boas, Lowie, Dixon, Spencer, Haeckel, Lamarck, Pawlow, Cunningham, Stockard, Guyer, Smith, Griffith, Weigert, and Woodworth, to mention only a few of the most noted in each field. The situation has no parallel in science; it is as if some radio amateur, troubled by a nightmare, had studied the lightning experiments and accepted the conclusions of Benjamin Franklin and on the basis of that knowledge had published books and magazine articles alarming the public with his hysterical dread of the dangers of electricity.

At its best this amateur anthropology is a carefully reasoned plea in support of preconceived notions; the author never admits that his main thesis is not established and, in the present state of scholarship, is not capable of establishment, that his arguments rest on debatable assumptions and his determinations on most questionable evidence. The average product, however, is usually far below this level. In the main these volumes are monstrous statistical romances given a certain plausibility by the tone of solemn dogmatism, the use of quasiscientific traditions, and the show of pseudoscientific method. As Professor Boas once put it:

"Books of this type try to bolster up their unscientific theories by an amateurish appeal to misunderstood discoveries relating to heredity and to give in this manner a scientific guise to their dogmatic statements which misleads the public."

A Main Street President has pondered on the awful spectacle of a dying race thus presented; congressional committees have summoned and still summon the authors who voice this alarmist theory to ask their counsel on pressing problems and pending legislation; sensational magazines publish articles in which the patriotism of skin, hair, and language is exploited to the utmost; and the man in the street mumbles shibboleths and discovers ancestors in Walhalla. Yet contradictions and exaggerations abound on every page of these pseudoscientific treatises and absurdity vies with absurdity. Mr. Stoddard writes:

"Our glorious civilization is the work of Nordics, sole possessors of the desirable mental qualities, who have taken their faith from Palestine, their laws of beauty from Greece, and their civil laws from Rome."

Mr. Grant says:

"Europe was Germany and Germany was Europe until the Thirty Years' War. . . . When by universal suffrage the transfer of power was completed from a Nordic aristocracy to lower classes of predominantly Alpine and Mediterranean extraction, the decline of France in international power set in."

A report of some eugenic commission states:

"Admit inferior races to dig subways and to labor as farmers, but sterilize them that they shall not act as seeds for future crops."

And again Mr. Grant:

"One of the greatest difficulties in classifying man is his perverse predisposition to misstate."

A chorus of voices, indeed, a veritable cloud of witnesses, declare that though Christianity is essentially the religion of Mediterranean slaves, Christ was a Nordic. I have yet to read a book, however, which can avoid the confession that the great beginnings and the large achievements of European culture were made by the Alpine and Mediterranean stocks.

"NORDIC" THEORY DISPROVED BY MODERN SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH.

These advocates of the Nordic theory mislead the public; this is certain. What are the facts? Ever since Mendel, scientists have been testing the fluidity of human traits, and independent scientific experiments the world over have disproved Weismann's theory and have established beyond doubt the great fact that the human body is molded and modified by its environment, that it passes on to following generations the physical changes and mental habits which it acquires, and that these characteristics, whether acquired in prehistoric times or in the last generation, remain the same only as long as the environment is unchanged. In other words, science dismisses the idea that a tall, blond race settled in the North while a short, dark race occupied the South, and justifies the belief that through countless ages the northern people were bleached in complexion and were increased in stature, whereas the southerners were tanned and diminished in size by the climate and the living conditions peculiar to each division of the earth. We have had it demonstrated in the United States that minute modifications of both extremes toward a new type, or rather toward new types, best fitted to survive in the various sections of our vast country, take place within one or two generations.

As for the nebulous "Nordic," the latest anthropological analysis by Prof. Roland B. Dixon, of Harvard University, finds the origins of this type in the mixture of Caspian and Mediterranean types. It is safe to assume a "mixture" for the "Nordic," as for all other races, inasmuch as recent research has shown that the closest sort of contacts existed between North and South even in the earliest days of our civilization. The tens of thousands of Arabic coins which have been found on Swedish soil which date back to the first dynasties form one instance of the constant intercourse between the South, which wanted amber, and the North, especially Scandinavia, which needed bronze. War, however, was more effective as a means of merging the types than peace. Long before the great migrations of Goths to the equatorial regions, as a result of which northern blood infiltrated every people of the Mediterranean, there occurred Viking raids in which the warriors, if they got away at all carried off as many women as the ship would hold to bear more Vikings in the northern fastnesses. In later days conquests, invasions, alliances, and crusades brought alien armies into every spot of Europe and intermingled every type and people. The conclusion of anthropologists that "every modern race and nationality is of strongly mixed descent" is founded on many kinds of evidence.

These facts in themselves are sufficient to destroy the illusion of a perpetually superior race, responsible for a superior culture, but the preposterous impudence of this theory becomes fully apparent when we consider the history of civilization. We find, to begin with, that different nations or races are at various times in the vanguard of cultural development. Thus, in the fifteenth century the standard of civilization in China is much higher than that of Europe. Western Europe surpassed the Orient during the Renaissance, but western civilization was taken over and improved upon in many respects by the Japanese during the lifetime of the average middle-aged man. It is clear that a cultural advance is an inexplicable phenomenon; it is an accidental and fortunate combination of the right mind, the propitious time, and the proper place. Cultural expansion, the shattering of old walls, and the enlargement of life is always the result of a flash of genius in the powder magazine of economic and political conditions. If the leader is lacking or the time is unpropitious, the masses stagnate, whether they be white, black, red, or yellow. But though nothing can explain the rise and continuation of culture in primitive peoples, we see that after a certain stage the civilization of a race is the cumulative increment of all other cultures.

CULTURE ORIGINS DUE TO NON-NORDIC RACES.

Nowhere is this better illustrated than in the evolution of western civilization. The very first step of the "Nordic" from the primitive condition of the Stone Age to the higher era of bronze was impossible without southern help, because tin, a prerequisite for the bronze alloy, was lacking in the Scandinavian Peninsula. Whether this or other causes delayed their development, the fact remains that the northern peoples continued in a savage state for thousands of years, and it is precisely the races which our hysterical anthropologist regards as debased and inferior, which he would exclude from formative American, which have laid the foundations for whatever civilization the world now possesses, and which, in numerous instances, have reached such cultural heights as we are still unable to attain, for all the aid of precedent and example.

The truth is that the origins of culture are wholly Mongolian, Semitic, and Mediterranean. As Dr. Robert H. Lowie points out in his excellent book, "Culture and Ethnology":

"Our economic life, based as it is on the agricultural employment of certain cereals with the aid of certain domesticated animals, is derived from Asia; so is the technologically invaluable wheel. The domestication of the horse certainly originated in inner Asia; modern astronomy rests on that of the Babylonians, Hindus, and Egyptians; the invention of glass is an Egyptian contribution; spectacles come from India; paper, to mention only one other significant element of our civilization, was borrowed from China. . . . It is worth noting that momentous ideas may be conceived by what we are used to regard as inferior races. Thus the Maya of Central America conceived the notion of the zero figure, which remained unknown to Europeans until they borrowed it from India; and eminent ethnologists suggest that the discovery of iron technique is due to the negroes."

It is a matter of common knowledge that literature and art, religion and ethics, as well as other esthetic, spiritual, and material expressions of humanity reached their apogee among the Greeks, Jews, and Romans, inheritors of this earlier culture, at a time when the northern barbarian was slowly evolving from a state of savagery. There is an intriguing coincidence in the fact that the Nordic apologist is thus attacking the nations to whose racial progenitors he owes an irredeemable debt and that the parvenu among civilized peoples is seeking to establish his superiority to the Spaniard and Greek, Jew and Italian, Mongolian and Arab. Without the inventions of India, China, and Egypt, inventions which the Jews, Greeks, and Romans passed on in an improved state, industry and agriculture, astronomy and mathematics, music and art might still be in a primitive condition.

A PROBLEM OF EUGENICS.

A discussion by the partisans of the Nordic theory, of the comparative merits of the various cultural contributions made by this or that race, or of the greatness of its heroes, or of its physical fitness, invariably ends with the Nordic on the debit side of the ledger, but this proves nothing because it is trivial and irrelevant. It simply indicates the existing confusion as to who and what constitute the individuality of a race. It is a demonstrated fact that the masses of every race are mentally on a par with the masses of every other race. After testing primitive intelligence and comparing it with that of all types of white men, Professor Woodworth found no appreciable difference in the average of any of them except that the Igorrote of the Philippines, the Negrito and the pygmies of the Congo, were somewhat deficient. "This crumb," he writes, "is about all the testing psychologist has yet to offer on the question of racial differences in intelligence." Furthermore, each race contains every grade of intellectual capacity, ranging from the imbecile to the genius. The proportion of idiots and geniuses is regulated almost entirely by the social, economic, and political conditions in which each generation of the race happens to be living. Thus the perpetuation of any race as a whole means the perpetuation of many types—the undesirable, the inferior and the dead-level, as well as the gifted and the genius types. Hence, not only every homogeneous nation, but every nation which, like the United States, has become a vast racial melting pot, faces a problem in engenders, viz, the problem of improving its stock.

In teeming Europe and Asia there is only one solution, the elimination of the inferior types of all races. But our own vast and sparsely settled country need not take up the surgeons' scalpel until it has tried therapeutics. It can wait to see the wondrous effects of its climate and soil, its principles of liberty and its democratic institutions. Unless all we know of the development of civilization is false, these basic gifts that America offers her immigrant will bring about the fullest expression and the finest flowering of his racial and individual qualities. If these qualities are not the vices and virtues of a single strain, but rather the characteristics of a cross section of mankind in which the gifts of each will supplement and enrich the rest, our country, like a great orchestra, will play such harmonies as no single instrument can produce. And that will mean not the passing but the making of a great race; that will be the concrete manifestation of the ideals and the mission of America.

The only humane provision in House bill 7995, which is the latest measure introduced by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, and supersedes House bills 101 and 6540, is the clause known as the nonquota immigrant clause found on page 5, section 4, of the bill. This clause allows the admission, exempted from the quota restriction, of the wife, minor unmarried children, and father and mother over 55 of an American citizen. Nothing further can be said in favor of the bill.

Senate bill 2576, an immigration measure introduced by Senator REED of Pennsylvania, attempts to fix the basic quota of 2 per cent on the census of 1910. It is a better bill than the Johnson proposal, in that it avoids the stigma of discrimination which attaches to the Johnson measure providing for the 1890 census as a basis. In other respects, however, the Reed bill is even worse than the Johnson bill, because it does not contain the one good feature of the Johnson bill, the "nonquota immigrant" feature. It only provides that preference be given the wife and minor children under 21 of citizens of the United States. This preference provision is of no practical value.

It appears to me that both Houses of Congress are attempting to deal with the immigration problem without a scientific basis for a permanent immigration policy. None of the proposed measures undertake properly to cure the ills from which the immigration situation has been suffering during the last three years. Instead of uniting families there seems to be a tendency to separate them and keep them apart; instead of aiding the alien already here there seems to be a tendency to oppress him; instead of helping him bring his wife and children here and become a satisfied and grateful American citizen there is a tendency to leave him to the mercy of the fates and his wife and children to the hazards of a quota restriction.

This is not as it should be. Before any policies are adopted a thorough and impartial study of the immigration question should be made by an impartial commission of this Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the bill H. R. 7959.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what it is?

Mr. GARBER. Adjusted compensation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of adjusted compensation. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw that request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, the naval appropriation bill—

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, before that I desire to call up—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask who made objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma a moment ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demanded the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not object.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

March 19, 1924.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes," with the following amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the House, viz: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of the Bright Angel toll road, within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That no purchase shall be made of the said Bright Angel trail until the people of Coconino County, Ariz., shall have ratified such purchase by vote at an election for such purpose."

Resolved further, That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 60.

Resolved further, That the Senate further insists upon its amendments Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 28, and 30, and that it agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if that is necessary, to call up the bill H. R. 5078, the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I move that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 47.

Mr. BLANTON. What is that amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Bright Angel Trail amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell us and will he tell us within the two minutes who this Bright Angel is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a warfare waged against the appropriation that has been recommended by the House concerning the Bright Angel Trail leading down into the Grand Canyon, and I have spoken heretofore on this subject. I am constrained by the rules of comity between the two Houses, although that comity has not been observed in this matter at the other end of the Capitol. But I want to make this one statement now, that the opposition to the action recommended by the House centers in a man who, while denying that he is a party to any litigation concerning mineral claims now or for a number of years heretofore, was a party to litigation in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1920, and in that case his asserted rights were denied. It was denied that he had rights, but he is still, in defiance of that decision, maintaining possession of strategic points in the Grand Canyon National Park and has even in the past month interfered with the furnishing of water safe to drink to park visitors or the providing of facilities necessary to comfort and health.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment—and that so far from not being a party to litigation, he has within a month been in conference with the Secretary of the Interior asking that in pending litigation over mineral claims in the Grand Canyon the hearing be postponed until after the adjournment of Congress so that he may attend the hearing upon it in Flagstaff. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of certain precedents that have been established, does not the gentleman think it might be a good idea to send some marines out there to see the interests of the Government are protected?

Mr. CRAMTON. There might appear to be something in the gentleman's idea, in view of precedents that have been established. Another body in this Capitol has spent almost all its time in investigating scandals. I say the use of high official position to carry on a private warfare is a scandal that might also have attention. [Applause.] It has been suggested in another body that if this thing is continued an investigation will also be asked for. In Heaven's name, let us have the investigation. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. HAMMER] may extend his remarks, to be printed in 8-point type, on the rent act. He is a member of the District Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there can not be printed in 8-point type speeches delivered outside of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Well, this speech was delivered inside the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Oh, it is?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes, sir; it is his own speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE NECESSITY FOR CONTINUING THE WASHINGTON RENT ACT.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, almost within a stone's throw of the Capitol Building and the splendid building which the Members of the House and the Members at the other end of the Capitol occupy we have wretchedness and misery.

Some three years of careful study and investigation of the situation convinced me that the statement is true that there are at least 30,000 residents of the District of Columbia inadequately housed, and because of exorbitant rentals they are crowded into congested quarters, forced to surrender the privacy of their homes, and to give up much that life holds dear in order to fill the pockets of a few rent profiteers. There are now approximately four instead of nine in the crowded one-room apartments.

A beautiful city is Washington, but behind its doors we find much that is not conducive to health and morality. And these conditions are not confined to the alleys.

So greedy are many of the landlords that repairs are not made, and they are letting the buildings fall into decay and filth that menace the public health. He does not forget to raise the rent, however, and thereby adds congestion to an already indescribably deplorable situation.

If an epidemic or conflagration should break out, it would be very difficult to stop it, and if the minds of the masses became inflamed it would take an armed force to quell mob violence. The people will be oppressed only so long and to a certain extent.

Investigations I have made convince me that after the war there was a disbanding of the war-emergency departments which threatened to deplete the population of the city about 20,000. It is not true that the departure was great enough to relieve the housing congestion. This was due to several causes:

First. A large number of the clerks separated from the service did not leave the city.

Second. During the war there were 8 to 10 people living in one room and making the best of it, because it was a national emergency.

Third. While some of the war workers went home, their places were quickly filled by others. Washington has taken the lead over all cities in the race for securing national headquarters of nation-wide business organizations. According to estimates made by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, there are upward of 300 organizations in this city with either national headquarters or a substantial permanent representation. This has grown up almost entirely during the war.

Fourth. The houses of the well to do thrown open to war workers were closed again.

Fifth. Houses which had been condemned before the war, but inhabited during the war, were ordered torn down by the authorities.

An investigation of the city shows that fully 20,000 people are living in crowded, insanitary dwellings, paying exorbitant rents.

No houses are being built that will meet the requirements of the moderate salary.

Unjust and unreasonable and oppressive rentals are being demanded of tenants under prevailing conditions. There is no freedom of contract between landlord and tenant. The housing congestion is still great enough in houses renting for less than $60 per month—and to the great majority of the people—to menace public welfare, health, and morals.

Rent-restrictive legislation in Washington was enacted first in the fall of 1919, going into effect October 22, 1919. The Rent Commission of three members were recommended by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and the work of the commission commenced by February, 1920. The commission began in a small office on Pennsylvania Avenue and with a staff of half a dozen members. The number of cases filed in the early days was amazing, and it was soon obvious that the commission would have to be enlarged in order to take care of the work imposed upon it.

The act expired in October, 1921, and was extended until May of the next year. This short extension caused an unsettled condition that resulted in great hardships to both tenants and owners. Nothing is more destructive than the indefinite execution of a plan.

The declaring of the act unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in June of 1920 made the situation even worse, unjust and unreasonable owners putting a frightful pressure upon intimidated tenants; enormous increases were demanded in rental, and threats of eviction forced the payment of such increases. This was a period, I am advised, that Washington will never forget, and to-day she shows scars of this terrific conflict between selfish interests and unfortunate masses. The Federal Supreme Court declared the act constitutional in April of 1921. This made the operation of the act more normal, and the commissioners were able to accomplish much more.

The act was extended from May, 22, 1922, for two years more, and will expire on May 22, 1924, unless it is continued, as it should be, under the bill now in committee.

When the act was declared constitutional the extremely interesting decision was written by Mr. Justice Holmes. This is an important decision. It is in part as follows:

The fact that tangible property is visible tends to give a rigidity to our conception of our rights in it that we do not attach to others less concretely clothed. But the notion that the former is exempt from the legislative modification required from time to time in civilized life is contradicted not only by the doctrine of eminent domain, under which what is taken is paid for, but by that of the police power in its proper sense, under which property rights may be cut down and to that extent taken without pay. Under the police power the right to erect a building in a certain quarter of a city may be limited to from 80 to 100 feet; safe pillars may be required in coal mines; billboards in cities may be regulated; watersheds in the country may be kept clear. These cases are enough to establish that a public exigency will justify the legislature in restricting property rights in land to a certain extent without compensation. But if to answer one need the legislature may limit height, to answer another it may limit rent.

Housing is a necessary of life. All the elements of a public interest justifying some degree of public control are present.

But if the public interest be established, the regulation of rates is one of the first forms in which it is asserted, and the validity of such regulation has been settled since Munn v. Illinois.

The statute is objected to on the further ground that landlords and tenants are deprived by it of a trial by jury on the right to possession of the land. If the power of the commission established by the statute to regulate the relation is established, as we think it is, by what we have said, this objection amounts to little. To regulate the relation and to decide the facts affecting it are hardly separable.

It has been truthfully said that no great war has ever been fought without the teaching of some great principles. The havoc created by the war in Europe made very plain the necessity for laws governing groups of people where community interests made common necessity, especially in densely populated communities like the District of Columbia, wherein the population exceeds more than 8,000 persons to the square mile. Mr. Justice Holmes has cited the public interest established in the regulation of rates, in the regulation of the height of buildings, and in regard to billboards, safe pillars in coal mines, and watersheds, and so forth.

Certainly the housing situation after the war which resulted in untold suffering in congested centers the world over has pointed to the fact that housing, too, takes on a public interest. Then why should we talk about a war emergency which is never so great while the war is being fought as during the period in the aftermath of war? Take, for instance, the War between the States, as has been so well said by one of the witnesses before our subcommittee while considering the proposed execution of the rent act; everybody knows that what it took 5 years to do it has taken 60 years to undo; that the desolation and ruin in the States of the South is still in evidence in some sections of the country.

America knew none of the devastation that the countries of Europe knew, but one very definite result is shown in the even cruel congestion in the larger cities of the country. The great industrial cities of the Middle West felt the housing shortage very keenly, and some of them still feel it. Labor and materials had been allocated to war needs for practically five years. Few repairs had been made on any houses during that period, and 1920 found the United States with a shortage of some 2,000,000 dwelling places.

The two cities that felt this the most keenly were New York and Washington. New York always has its housing problem as it concerns immigrants, thousands of these people from every corner of the world pouring through Ellis Island into Manhattan every day. Both New York and Washington have limited areas. Washington grew from approximately 300,000 to 600,000 almost in a night. One must consider, too, that one-third of this 300,000 were colored people, who occupy perhaps half the floor space that the white people do. This increase to 600,000 was largely white, so the scarcity of housing was even greater than it would be were this not true. These people had to live somewhere. It is possible to go without necessary clothing and without necessary food; it is even possible to starve oneself; it is possible to deprive children of education and of all forms of refined amusement, but it is not possible to live without a roof over your head; the long arm of the law seizes the culprit who tries to go without shelter and forces shelter upon him at the Government's expense, as was so well said by one testifying before our subcommittee on this bill.

After the armistice had been signed and the Nation attempted to sit back in its armchair and become once more comfortable and normal, it found that this was an impossible thing to do. Not only this Nation but every nation in the world felt this shortage, and it began to be pretty generally understood that the housing problem was one that could not be left to adjust itself. Laws were passed in France, Austria, Italy, Finland, America; in fact, in very nearly all the countries of the world, relieving buildings of taxation, extending government aid, protecting tenants from unjust rentals, forcibly taking over certain space in residences to house the unsheltered. Some two weeks ago, or a little more, England and Italy passed rent-restrictive laws.

Many of you are familiar with the laws passed by New York and Washington. While they grew out of the war emergency itself, they have become increasingly more important as the months have gone by, the emergency ceasing to exist in the houses of the rich and becoming increasingly exaggerated where the pressure is always found to be the greatest, on the shoulders of the poor.

The difference between the laws in the District of Columbia and New York is chiefly this: Here we operate primarily through a commission empowered to determine and fix a just and reasonable charge for rental property; the New York law makes the fact that a rent is unjust and unreasonable a defense to an action for recovery through the courts.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ACT.

The act contains two definite features, the fixing of a fair and reasonable rental value and the protection of tenants in occupancy. The fixing of a fair and reasonable rental is based upon a certain per cent of net return on a true value of the property to-day. This the commission discovers by finding, usually, 8 per cent on the value and adding to that the annual expenditures, which include such items as taxes, water rent, insurance, repairs, replacements, depreciation, and the general cost of management with commissions to agent for same. The depreciation allowed by the commission, I am advised, is usually $\frac{1}{4}$ or 2 per cent on the present-day value of the structure. This value is usually discovered by multiplying the cubical contents by the cost of reconstruction per cubic foot, and then subtracting from that the depreciation for the number of years the building has been in existence. A nonfireproof building usually calls for from 2 to 3 per cent and a fireproof building for from 1 to 2 per cent. The commission allows the same depreciation in finding the net return for the year to follow the determination as it has used in discovering the depreciation to be subtracted from the cost of reconstruction. It is practically impossible for an owner to lose money on his property or for any such bugaboo as confiscation to be considered when so just a method of procedure is followed.

What is called the "possession feature" was within the jurisdiction of the Rent Commission until the act of 1922 extending the rent law, when certain landlords, together with their attorneys, appeared before the subcommittee, of which I was a member, in the consideration of the bill extending the rents act, for many days and weeks, with care and caution as to its provisions and wording proposed to transfer to the municipal court the power to make the provision of the act applicable to this feature. Finally it was agreed that this change be made, and, as I recall, the realtors agreed to it, but, so far as I am advised, it is admitted now that this was an unwise provision and has been unsatisfactory. The present bill restores the provisions of the former act providing for the Rent Commission to pass upon this question.

There are now five commissioners instead of three, and there seems to be good reason for returning to this original procedure of the rent act prior to the extension two years ago, as it is better for the commission itself to go into the bona fides of these transactions rather than a court which knows nothing of the acts leading up to the threat of eviction. In the past it has been the habit of landlords to serve a 30-day notice on the tenants to quit as soon as the landlord learns the tenants have taken advantage of the legislation enacted by the Congress for their protection. It is pretty safe to assume that were the Rent Commission to go out of existence on the 22d of May next there would be a wholesale eviction of tenants.

OPERATION OF THE ACT.

A hearing before the Rent Commission is initiated either by the tenant, owner, or agent, or the Rent Commission itself. Usually the tenant or owner files a petition to fix a fair and reasonable rent, whereupon the Rent Commission serves a copy of this appeal upon the defendant, this petition to be answered within 10 days. The case is then set for hearing. The commission acts as a jury and as judges, hearing both sides to the dispute, giving everyone connected with the controversy a fair chance to be heard in open court. Then follows a very careful and thorough inspection of the premises.

The commissioners inspect everything from the furnace to the roof gardens. They inspect the plumbing and the condition of the walls and floors. This is an extremely arduous task, and has taken much time and energy, to say nothing of expense in the way of automobile tires, gasoline, and so forth; the commission has no automobile for such inspections and is obliged to use personal machines or to pay for taxis. The case is then taken under consideration and a fair and just determination made to all.

COST OF THE COMMISSION.

The cost of operating the commission is, at the minimum, $90,000. If it is operated as it should be, it will cost from $100,000 to $115,000 to function promptly, properly, and efficiently.

THE CONDITION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOUSING SITUATION AS COMPARED WITH OTHER YEARS.

In 1919 and 1920 the peak of population was reached in the District of Columbia. This is not generally realized, most people thinking that the large number of clerks left Washington when they were separated from the service following the signing of the armistice and the suspension of war activities. This was not true, however, a large number of clerks remaining here and new activities taking the place of war activities rapidly, bringing to the city hordes of new workers from all parts of the country. The population is probably as great to-day as it was at the peak of operations and it is growing steadily.

The congestion in the rooming houses is not so great as it was, but the oversupply is found principally in the shabby, dilapidated, run-down houses which really form the lower strata. There is still an undersupply of good, clean, well-ventilated rooms. The supply in one room, kitchen, and bath apartments is adequate to meet the demand, but the rental is too high to justify the clerk in the Government who desires such an apartment to occupy it.

I am fully convinced, after a careful consideration of the recent hearings before the District subcommittee, the congestion in the apartment house or dwellings at under $50 per month rental is greater than it has ever been, and the distress being felt by these people is not only pathetic but pitiful. There are sufficient houses for the rich, but the poor are suffering untold hardships in the District.

The need for high-priced dwellings and apartments, particularly the latter, has been fairly adequately met. However, it must be noted that although high-priced dwellings are on the market for rent, the floor space has been decreased to such an extent that even in this type there is a scarcity of houses for a family of more than two. The adequate supply is in one-room and bath, or one room, kitchenette, and bath. Like sheep these builders have followed a few leaders and have cut up their floor space into hundreds of these little bachelor apartments. A cheap deal table and two chairs painted and costing about $12—but should not have to cost anything like that—two cupboards, consisting of two or three cheap little shelves for a partition; a silly little stove, with no place to broil, and a baking oven too small to bake a self-respecting North Carolina chicken; another insignificant little pine table, with two more shelves about it, and you have one of these so-called Pullmanettes. The realtors call this two rooms, although the only partition there is two misplaced shelves. Adding a 9 by 12 living room, with a Murphy bed on a door that swings to on the only closet, the agent hypnotizes the tenant into thinking this a three-room and bath apartment and into paying from $60 to $75 for it.

Money is tight, and the tighter it is the greater must be the established income to obtain it. The value of the property does not count as much in getting money as the income derived from it; or, putting it another way, money is loaned on a value boosted by bloated rent schedules.

The rate of interest on first-mortgage loans is 6 to 7 per cent, with 1 per cent commission or brokerage. On second mortgages the rates are higher, according to the risk involved and the personal element of character and financial responsibility of the borrower. The rate of interest can not legally be higher than 8 per cent, but a bonus is usually charged, from 5 to 40 per cent. One big builder said that if he needed money he did not care what he paid for it, and it could not be gotten without a heavy bonus.

There is small doubt but that the main reason small homes are not being built is found in the method of financing. An unconscious profit is being reaped through the discounting of these second mortgages.

A custom prevails among the builders to make a payment of 25 to 50 or larger per cent of the contract price on second or even third mortgage on the building to be erected. Before the contractor gets through with the buildings, as a rule, he gets a second or third mortgage on the building, and having taken them full par value is compelled to take his second or third mortgage received as part payment for the contract price of the building to one of these discounting corporation trust companies, where his second or third mortgage is cashed in for a discount of about 25 to 50 per cent, frequently 50 per cent or more.

The trust company which discounts these mortgages for contractors usually are connected with and partly owned by the landlord who is having his houses built. So it will be readily seen that instead of costing the landlord the contract price often costs him much less because of the interlocking of the arrangement by which he is benefited to the extent of as much as 25 per cent. In some instances the landlord, it is said, discounts these mortgages himself and carries them at a rate as high as 50 per cent.

One of these mortgage discount corporations ran for several issues an advertisement in all the Washington newspapers soliciting the public to purchase its 20,000 shares of preferred stock at $100 par value, with positive dividends of 8 per cent guaranteed in large headlines in these advertisements.

Attention was called to this matter at the hearings, and a portion of one of these advertisements, which might be called "How to get rich in one act," was placed in the hearings.

I have attempted an analysis of one of these mortgage and discount corporations which may be of sufficient importance to interest you. I take from the prospectus of one of these corporations appealing to the public:

(1) The capital stock consists of 20,000 shares of preferred stock at $100 par value with a positive dividend obligatory of 8 per cent per annum; and (2) 50,000 shares common stock of no par value. With each share of preferred stock will be allotted one share of common stock. Minimum dividend payable on common stock, as provided by charter, is $4 per share, with every prospect of its reaching a materially larger amount.

Thus each share of preferred stock has a potential dividend value of $12 on each $125 paid in. Possession of the common gives you a voting voice in the affairs of the corporation. An additional safeguard is placed on the preferred stock, in that the 8 per cent takes precedence and preference over the assets and earnings of the corporation.

Thus we have a prospectus which amounts to this:

The public is asked to pay in to capitalize the company—

20,000 preferred, $100 par (1), cash.....	$2,000,000
Bonus extracted from the public, obviously, for the common stock.....	500,000
Total cash asked from the public for capitalization, entire capital.....	2,500,000

(1) 20,000 preferred, $2,000,000; interest, at 8 per cent....	$100,000
(2) 20,000 common, to public, $4 per share per annum....	80,000

Total return to public for investment of $2,500,000, if the company earns sufficient..... 240,000

(2) 30,000 common retained without charge to the corporation, to earn $4 a share (as $360,000 is to $2,500,000).....	120,000
---	---------

Thus, though the entire capitalization secured from the public, the stockholders, $120,000, is retained of the earnings to go to parties unknown, a portion of the income is retained on a basis of prospectus, or 50 per cent of what the public would get; or one-third of the estimated earnings, one-third of the potential possibilities, are withheld from those putting up the capital.

Possession of the 30,000 shares common bars you from having a vote that would be effective in the corporation. The security is based on second mortgages of doubtful value, manipulated by interested people. Corporation must actually earn 14 per cent to pay even the above, without speaking of materially larger amount. This, I think, is not an unjust analysis, but is a fair sample of high financing in the Nation's Capital.

There is apparent an interlocking of the interest of the builder and financiers. In the advertisements to investors such large profits are shown in second mortgages that it is not an exaggeration to state that even counting out the exaggerations of the advertising writer the charges are not within the laws of legitimate profit.

There is no shortage in high-priced houses to satisfy the demands of the richer but lesser part of the population, a very small minority able to conform to scandalous financing practices prevalent in executing these second mortgages.

Enforcement of the claims of tenants for rentals paid in excess of amounts fixed by the commission, which, under the present rents act, is a function of the office of the attorney to the Rent Commission, presents a difficulty for which a remedy is provided in the present bill in which it is proposed to continue the rent act to August 1, 1926. The law at present provides that suit may be brought in municipal court and judgment obtained for the amount finally due the tenant. It frequently occurs that after determination and even after judgment is obtained the rental premises involved are sold without notice to the new purchaser of the pending claims of these tenants and the purchaser thereupon discovers an indebtedness which was not disclosed in the report provided him by the title company. On the other hand, the commission had several cases wherein the former owner was "judgment proof" or had created conditions so that a judgment against him could not be collected. For the best interest of the public, therefore, it is deemed advisable to provide by law that when a determination of the Rent Commission shows an amount due for excess rent paid by the tenant, it should be the right and duty of the tenant to enter notice thereof in the clerk's office of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, thus docketing his judgment. When this is done it is a lien or judgment of the same force and effect as any other docketed judgment, and why should it not be? If this is not done, the liability does not pass with the property to the new purchaser. Thus both sides are fairly and fully protected—the purchaser against unknown claims and the tenant against landlords who try to evade their obligations by "wash sales."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, the naval appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage and actual and necessary expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence as authorized by law to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force while traveling under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for mileage, at 5 cents per mile, to midshipmen entering the Naval Academy while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; actual expenses of officers while on shore patrol duty; hire of launches or other small boats in Asiatic waters; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards; expenses of courts-martial, including law and reference books, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks, and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; expenses of naval defense districts; stationery and recording; religious books; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising for the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); copying; ferrage; tolls; costs of suits; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, including maintenance of students and attachés; information from abroad and at home, and the collection and classification thereof; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), and not to exceed $175,000 for telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams and cablegrams; postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; for necessary expenses for interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction, and for payment of claims for damages under naval act approved July 11, 1919; and other necessary and incidental expenses; in all, $2,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the expense of any naval district unless the commandant thereof shall be also the commandant of a navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards and naval stations, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, shall not exceed $560,000.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may proceed for 10 minutes in the discussion of the conference ratio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes to discuss the matter mentioned by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the question is being widely discussed, both in technical quarters and in popular quarters, as to whether the United States in the last two or three years has actually maintained its treaty ratio as laid down in the Washington conference agreement of 1921-22. I want to read in this connection a paragraph from a speech made by Capt. Dudley W. Knox, an officer of the United States Navy attached to the Office of Naval Operations, on this point. The speech was delivered on December 6 last before the District of Columbia Department of Reserve Officers. I should like to call the especial attention of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to his statements. Captain Knox said:

We are not keeping up the ratio of naval strength agreed upon for the United States at the Washington conference. We have already fallen so far behind the other nations that our Navy is only half as powerful as it is supposed to be. Our battleship force instead of being equal to the British in this type is only half as strong; this is due to the fact that their ships are modernized while ours are not. We need about 50 per cent more personnel than is in the Navy to-day if the treaty Navy is to be properly maintained on a peace basis. To approach our ratio of strength in auxiliary ships we should have at least 18 more high-speed cruisers of about 10,000 tons each, and 11 more large submarines of long cruising radius.

Here we have the explicit statement by a naval officer of high rank to the effect that the famous 5-5-3 naval ratio, as among Great Britain and the United States and Japan, has become a 5-2½-3 ratio, and that the United States to-day has the unenviable position of being the last in the scale. One of two things follows: Either Captain Knox is wrong and should be reprimanded for misleading this country; or Congress—and for that matter the administration—should be taken to task for allowing the Navy to be weakened to the point where the United States has become the third world power in strength, instead of tying Great Britain for naval supremacy.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes, indeed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman remember that certain officers of the Navy assured Mr. Secretary Hughes and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt a year ago or more when we were in session that the British were elevating their guns and doing other things greatly to increase their power on the sea and in direct violation of, if not the letter, then the spirit of the Washington conference, and that subsequently both Secretary Hughes and Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt publicly admitted that they had been misled or misinformed and retracted their statements? Now, then, is the same officer or officers like him now furnishing this information that we are running behind either in the ratio?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall try and deal with the point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin in a moment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there, to go with that?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Might it not be that the reason for the discrepancy was that the British had modernized their fleet? Will you in your discussion tell us when they did modernize it and how?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes, I will do that.

A very able speech was made in the House last Saturday by a very able Member whom we all respect and admire, the chairman of the Naval Subcommittee [Mr. FRENCH]. In his speech Mr. FRENCH said:

There is no question in the minds of the members of the committee that the Navy of the United States is adequate under the basis of the treaty ratio. We have our allotted number of ships, to start off with, of the capital type; we have an excess number in some other types, as to which the number is not limited; other nations have excesses in some other lines. We are not well rounded out in some types. We shall need as we go along, probably, to modify the number of ships of different types, and other nations will need to do the same. But there is no question in the minds of the members of the committee that our Navy is second to none in the world. [Applause.]

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who is highly skilled on this subject and has given it as much attention as any man in the House unless it be the gentleman from Idaho, said this, a little later in the same session:

We really ought to provide for aircraft and cruisers that would put us on an equality with any other nation. I have been an advocate of economy in Government, but when it comes to the Navy I do not want a Navy superior to any other power, but I do not want a Navy that is inferior to any other power on the face of the earth.

While I do not wish to misinterpret the gentleman from South Carolina, I gathered from his statement that he agreed with the comment of the gentleman from Idaho that at this moment our Navy is equal to that of Great Britain and does maintain the treaty ratio. If I am incorrect in that, I should like to be informed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman is incorrect. I referred to the fact that in so far as cruisers are concerned we were certainly deficient as compared with Great Britain.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, I am dealing with the Navy as a single unit for this purpose, as the gentleman from Idaho was and as I thought the gentleman from South Carolina was. Does he think that upon that general comprehensive view our Navy maintains the 5-5-3 ratio?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Neither do I.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that a larger Navy did exist after the conference?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The ratio is based entirely on tonnage. As a matter of fact, the four old ships of the capital line have 12-inch guns, while there is not a single British ship that has a 12-inch gun. So the ratio is simply a question of tonnage.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is difficult—and every man who has studied this question knows it is difficult—to arrive at an exact appreciation of what the true ratio is. Many factors enter into the question, and skilled opinions will vary widely as to the appropriate interpretation of admitted facts.

What I want to do in the few minutes I have—and what I want to do in more detail in printing my remarks—is to lay before the House the admitted facts, which will enable each of us to make up his mind for himself. I hope that Congress will interpret these facts rightly and act accordingly.

Let me say emphatically—and in this I corroborate the statement just made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]—that I think it can not be questioned that, whether the figures and the ratio as given by Captain Knox are correct or not, the United States is not to-day anywhere near naval parity with Great Britain.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I am certainly very much surprised at the gentleman's statement. It is information to me anyway. Why have we been destroying large ships—as I suppose we have been doing—if we are so much behind the naval powers of the world?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We have been complying with the agreement reached at the Limitation of Armament Conference. I think I can say that as far as capital ships are concerned we are falling behind in quality what is allowed to us by that treaty.

Mr. SNELL. Why should we destroy capital ships if we are falling behind?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Because we agreed to do so.

Mr. SNELL. I supposed we agreed to destroy them in order to get down to a certain basis.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Let me explain exactly what I mean. To-day the United States has dropped behind in the 5-5-3 standard, so far as capital ships are concerned, through the deterioration of 4 of the 18 capital ships which we were allowed to retain under the Washington treaty of 1921-22. Those 4 vessels—Florida, Utah, Wyoming, and Arkansas—which have been very much discussed in the newspapers of late in connection with the Caribbean Sea maneuvers, were all among the 18 which were reserved to the United States by that treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Under the treaty the date when each of the 18 may be replaced is explicitly provided. The four vessels which I have mentioned can not be replaced until 1934 and 1935. For compelling reasons of safety, growing out of the disclosures in connection with the operations in the south, the boiler pressures on these four vessels have been reduced from 220 pounds to 180 pounds. That involves a reduction in steaming speed of from 20 knots per hour to 12 knots or less an hour. I do not need to suggest to the Members of this House that when you reduce the speed of a vessel to 12 knots an hour you take her out of the battle line for any efficient purpose. She can not even take part in maneuvers, let alone be considered as fighting material in the event of an emergency. The four vessels in their present condition are lost to us for battle and also for peace-time purposes. They simply can not hold their places in the line.

According to the statements of the Navy Department, which I think are not controverted, in order to restore these four vessels to worth-while battleship strength it is necessary to do two things: First, to convert them into oil burners, and second, to give them additional torpedo and deck protection, which would cost altogether for the four vessels the sum of $11,500,000, as estimated by the Navy Department.

I understand that the Acting Secretary of the Navy, in view of the revelations of the maneuvers, has very recently taken this matter up anew with the Director of the Budget.

Now, gentlemen, as things now stand, with those four vessels out of the battle line, we have a ratio of 5-4-3 instead of 5-5-3, with the United States reduced in its unit from 5 to 4. There are two other vessels—the New York and the Texas—that are gradually getting toward the same level as the other four, as just described. If those two vessels are not restored, reconditioned, and converted into oil burners within a year, they also will be put out of commission for practical purposes, just as is the case with the other four. In other words, if the United States does not authorize within a year the reconditioning of these last two vessels, the ratio will have become 5-3-3, and the United States will find herself a trifle superior, but only a trifle superior, to Japan and well behind the strength of Great Britain.

So far as cruisers are concerned, to which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has referred to-day and previously in his speech, the condition is much more serious. The British Empire has 50 cruisers built since 1910, building or authorized; the United States has 10, and Japan has 20. The ratio in respect to cruisers is: Great Britain, 5; United States, 1; Japan, 3. If you take them on a tonnage basis instead of in accordance with their numbers, the ratio becomes 5 for Great Britain, 1½ for the United States, and 3 for Japan.

Beyond that, we are told within the last week that Great Britain, in spite of the fact that the new labor government has just come into power, is going to lay down five more cruisers. Under date of February 21, 1924, the parliamentary secretary to the Admiralty, Mr. Ammon, said—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The parliamentary secretary to the Admiralty said:

The Government have decided, in view of the serious unemployment, to proceed with the laying down of five cruisers—three of which will be built in the royal dockyards—and two destroyers.

Tenders will be invited at once from contractors so that it will be possible to proceed with the work as soon as the necessary parliamentary sanction has been given.

And the estimates which were announced a week ago to-day in Parliament show that five new cruisers have in fact been provided for, and two destroyers in addition. So that when those cruisers are added to the 50 of the British Empire we have 55 as their total, as compared to the 10 which the United States has built, is building, or has authorized.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in my prepared statement I have proceeded in some detail in this same vein. I have taken up, class by class, the vessels which go to make up the American Navy, the British Navy, and the Japanese Navy. I have tried to show in compressed form exactly how the three powers stand to-day in accordance with the latest estimates and figures which are available. I think that the Members of the House will be convinced that something needs to be done, and needs to be done very quickly. If we agree, as I believe we do agree, that the 5-5-3 ratio represents a sound naval policy for the United States.

And, Mr. Chairman, in order that I may make this information available in printed form I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The gentleman from Massachusetts should understand that all of this House lifts its hat to him in the matter of knowledge of naval affairs. Let me now see, as one landlubber in the House, what the contention of the gentleman is. Does the gentleman mean to tell us that the United States is keeping faith with its pledge at the Washington disarmament conference and that England is not?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the United States is falling below the maximum which was permitted her by the Washington conference. I have heard it said on this floor that we had an obligation to keep up to the five. I never believed that myself. I thought our obligation was merely not to go above the five. I think Great Britain has kept faith implicitly, as far as any information which has come to me would indicate. I think that Japan has complied perfectly with her obligations. In this connection we should note that because of the earthquake horror there has resulted a postponement of the completion of her building program for a year, from 1927 to 1928.

As things now stand, I have shown that the United States has lost four ships from her battle line. The comparative total of the three powers becomes—

Great Britain	550,450
United States	405,000
Japan	301,320

a position for the United States of below a 5-4-3 ratio.

Two other ships, the New York and the Texas, within a year will reach the depth of inadequacy to which the four just mentioned have fallen. Although to-day the New York and the Texas are not quite as ineffective in boiler efficiency as the four ships previously mentioned, both of them are in need of conversion and within a year, I repeat, will be as inefficient as the others. If we do not immediately authorize the conversion to oil and the installation of additional protection, 6 of our 18 battleship units will have become ineffective. Our total ratio would then become—

Great Britain.....	580,450
United States.....	351,000
Japan.....	301,320

or worse than 5-3-3.

The cost of reconditioning the New York and Texas would be $6,800,000. Chairman BUTLER, of the Naval Affairs Committee, has recently introduced a bill (H. R. 6580) for this purpose, and President Coolidge has stated that the passage of such a bill would not conflict with his financial program.

Cruisers.

[Cruisers built or authorized since 1910.]

	Ships.	Tons.
British Empire.....	50	239,630
United States.....	10	75,000
Japanese Empire.....	29	176,680

Ratio in number of cruisers is, Great Britain, 5; United States, 1; Japan, 3, and on tonnage basis about 5-1.5-3.

To comply with the spirit of the limitation of armament treaty, therefore, in so far as Great Britain is concerned, the United States needs to construct 199,020 tons of cruisers, and in so far as Japan is concerned, 219,466 tons of cruisers.

At the Conference for Limitation of Armament Secretary Hughes proposed the limitation of auxiliary combatant craft, which included cruisers, but this proposal was not incorporated in the final treaty. At that time both the British Empire and the Japanese Empire were superior to the United States in completed modern cruisers, and since the treaty have continued to increase their cruiser strength.

For many years prior to the World War the United States had concentrated on building capital ships, realizing that the primary element of a navy second to none is a battleship fleet second to none. These battleships gave our statesmen an attentive hearing at the arms conference. While building those ships we had deferred building cruisers; but other powers, notably the British and Japanese Empires, built cruisers concurrently with battleships, so that now they have an overwhelming superiority in cruisers. Twenty 10,000-ton cruisers are now required to bring our cruiser tonnage to the treaty ratio for capital ships of the British Empire and twenty-two 10,000-ton cruisers are required to bring our cruiser tonnage to equal the ratio 5-3 of Japanese cruiser tonnage, even if their existing programs are not augmented.

But even aside from attaining our treaty status and proper relative strength an efficient fleet needs vessels that can scout and gather information when opposed by enemy cruisers, vessels that can beat off destroyer attacks and break through enemy destroyer screens, swift vessels that can protect convoys and maintain their speed in rough weather. The destroyers, of which the United States has a sufficient number, except for flotilla leaders, are incapable of performing these duties.

The Secretary of the Navy has asked for eight light cruisers for 1925. None has been authorized. The Butler bill, mentioned above, H. R. 6580, would authorize the President to have constructed eight scout cruisers, carrying protection and armament suited to their size and type, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $11,100,000 each. As to this also the President has stated that the proposal is not in conflict with his financial program. The cost of our most modern cruisers hitherto built is about $7,000,000 each.

Destroyers.

(First line effective, built or authorized.)

Great Britain, 201 ships; including 18 destroyer leaders.
United States, 288 ships; no destroyer leaders, but including 14 mine layers.
Japan, 93 ships; no leaders.

Or ratio in numbers, 5-7-2.

It should be noted that a large proportion of United States destroyers are tied up and are fast becoming obsolete.

Submarines.

[Built and building, 485 tons and over.]

	Ships.	Tonnage.
British Empire.....	41	47,130
United States.....	99	76,388
Japan.....	74	75,413

Tonnage ratio, 4.7-7.6-7.5.

Of these, the United States has no mine layers or cruiser submarines, important types in fleet action, as shown by the use the Germans made of them.

To have 5/3 the strength of Japan we require $5/3 \times 75,000$, or 125,000 tons. United States deficiency is thus 49,000 tons.

Of the United States submarines, 43 are from 485 to 569 tons; while of the 74 Japanese boats not one is less than 689 tons, and 63 are over 900 tons. So that of our 76,388 tons as compared with Japan's 75,413 tons, 56 only of our boats are comparable in size with her 74. The United States deficiency is therefore much in excess of 49,000 tons, if effective vessels are to be considered.

Japan has 41 submarines building or projected, 23 of which are over 1,000 tons. That means they can cruise long distances. Eleven were completed in 1922-23. As previously stated, the United States has no cruiser or mine-laying submarines.

Six United States submarines of those authorized in the naval act of 1916 have not been started because no funds have been appropriated for them. Money for work on three of these has been asked for in the Budget for 1925. The Secretary of the Navy in his annual report for 1923 expressed the hope that a future Congress will appropriate funds for the remaining three of this program, and further recommends the authorization and appropriation of funds for three new submarines of the cruiser type.

Aircraft carriers.

[Limited by treaty to 135,000 tons for United States and Britain and 81,000 tons for Japan.]

	Number of carriers.	Tonnage.	Total.
British.....	3 completed.....	48,190	104,490
Do.....	3 building.....	56,300
United States.....	2 building.....	66,000	78,790
Do.....	1 built.....	12,700
Japanese.....	2 building.....	53,900	63,400
Do.....	1 built.....	9,500

Ratio of 5-4-3.

The question has been asked what effect the earthquake would have upon the naval plans of Japan. I am advised that its only effect has been to result in the postponement of the completion of the building program from 1927 to 1928.

Summary.

Type.	Required to maintain 5-5-3 position.	Secretary recommends in his annual report, 1923.
Battleships.....	Install oil burners and give additional deck and torpedo protection in the case of six vessels.	Install oil burners and give additional deck and torpedo protection in the case of six vessels.
Cruisers.....	With Japan, 22 of 10,000 tons each; with England, 20 of 10,000 tons each.	8 of 10,000 tons each.
Submarines.....	With Japan, 40,000 tons; with England, none.	Appropriation to finish 6 already authorized and to begin 3 new cruiser submarines.

On the whole, it must be concluded that America as a naval power is rapidly falling behind the conference ratio and that unless Congress takes prompt and vigorous action the disparity will seriously imperil our security. Even as things now stand, the relative inferiority of the United States means that in the event of a supplementary naval limitation conference we should not be in nearly as strong a position as in 1921 to secure anything like the appropriate reductions from the principal powers of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a few observations upon the subject that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has discussed. First, I have respect for Captain Knox and for his estimates upon the Navy of the United States and other navies; at the same time this is a subject as to which the authorities are not all one way. I believe Captain Knox greatly exaggerates the situation, though he does so without intent. Other students of the naval establishments of the different countries believe that the United States is abundantly strong from the standpoint of ratio, and, in fact, many urge that it is stronger than other countries. However, omitting to discuss the opinions of men, let me refer to just a few facts that are pertinent to the question from the standpoint of ships that were allocated to the different nations, and especially to Great Britain, the United States, and Japan.

The situation to-day is practically the same as it was at the time the limitation conference came to an end two years ago and when the treaty was finally ratified by the last nation to ratify the treaty, on August 28 of last year.

Turning first to the ships of the capital line, the United States has 18, Great Britain 18, and Japan 10. If any mistake was made, it was made two years ago by those having in charge the designation of particular capital ships from the ships of the Navy of the United States that might be retained in comparison with capital ships that might be retained or finished by Great Britain and Japan. There is nothing to show that any mistake was made. Some of the ships we retained were old, comparatively speaking, but so were some of the ships retained by Great Britain and by Japan. I could wish we could have maintained more modern ships than some of the ships we did retain, but it was a question, if gentlemen will remember, in part, not only of satisfying Great Britain and Japan, but a question, too, of economies within the United States. You will remember, as I recall it, that the four ships that could possibly have been completed to take the place of the four ships that broke down at Panama would have cost approximately $60,000,000, in addition to what had been spent upon them, if the United States had completed those ships at that time, instead of retaining as part of the Navy the four ships to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. In just a moment. Now let us see with regard to the ships that broke down. We are told by the head of the Bureau of Engineering that for an expense of $100,000 those ships can be put back into the fleet, and three of them I believe will be put back into the fleet within 60 or 90 days. They will not be altogether efficient, but they will be efficient to do service during the year 1925. This refers to temporary overhauling. However, let us consider more extensive improvements. By an expenditure of approximately $375,000 apiece their coal burners can be largely replaced and they can be made comparable to the other coal-burner ships of our Navy. Or by an expenditure of approximately $3,400,000 to install oil burners they can be made fairly comparable to oil burners of the same type, and be made to do the service that would be expected of ships of that type.

Now, let me compare our capital ships with the capital ships of Great Britain. That question was before our committee. We asked representatives of the Navy Department in regard to those ships, and I will say that we knew the ones that were in the poorest state of repairs, and finally we asked in regard to the ships generally making up the capital ships. I asked this question of Colonel Roosevelt, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy:

Is it true that on an average our capital ships are more modern and are better ships in every way than the British ships?

What was the answer of Colonel Roosevelt:

Yes; on an average.

Then Colonel Roosevelt followed with this statement:

I remember an expression used by Admiral Chatfield, at the time we were talking about that.

And he then referred to conversations at the time the limitation conference was on:

He said—

That is, Admiral Chatfield—

the tail of your [United States] column is not as good as the tail of our [British] column, but the body of your column and the head of your column are very much better than any of the rest of our column.

So much, then, for the capital ships.

I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is probably well aware that distinguished English authorities contend the same as was stated by Secretary Roosevelt, namely, that the American battleship fleet is much superior to the English battleship fleet. I saw an article to that effect from a distinguished English authority just the other day.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Then, with regard to the ships that may be maintained under the treaty and as to which there are no limitations, I recognize that in cruisers we are outclassed by Great Britain and by Japan.

On the other hand, in destroyers we outclass either Great Britain or Japan.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Both of them put together.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. I am reminded, both of them put together. More than that, from the standpoint of efficiency of our submarines, there is no question that there we stand again the peer of any other nation, and I stand upon the statement I made under general debate, that we are second to none, and that we are maintaining our proper ratio under the treaty.

I want to refer to two or three other matters that the gentleman in his speech has suggested. From the standpoint of officers and men, how do we rank? At this time we carry in the law for the current year appropriations for 86,000 enlisted men, 4,529 line officers, and 2,000 staff officers, 19,500 marines, 2,000 marine officers, approximately, or a total of 114,039. If you leave your marines out entirely—and it has been debated whether or not there are those in the British Navy that are comparable with our marines—we have of officers and men upward of 92,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Great Britain at this time has of officers and men in her establishment 99,500, and it is considered that she will probably ask for 100,500 next year.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] quoted a naval captain who said that by modernizing her ships England had gained a very considerable advantage over us. Was that due to our carelessness or to their breach of good faith? I think we better get to the point and find out if something of that kind has happened. We must have been indifferent and not have lived up to our opportunities, or they must have slipped in on us.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say in response to the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] that as to the statements that were made touching modifications of British ships in the elevation of guns, as to which there was considerable discussion a year ago, it has been very satisfactorily represented to our Government, and we are fully assured that those modifications were not made after the conference, but that whatever modifications were made were made prior to that time.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is true that modifications were made prior to that time, but they were made following the experiences gained in the battle of Jutland in the late war.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And it is also true that if we do not change our elevations we will be outranged by a considerable number of British capital ships.

Mr. FRENCH. That is true.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then does not the gentleman think that this Congress ought to reauthorize an expenditure of a sufficient amount of money to change those elevations?

Mr. FRENCH. That is a question for the naval legislative committee.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman from Minnesota mean that we have been careless in this and indifferent?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not mean anything of the kind. The gentleman from Idaho, of course, does not contend that a change in the elevations, such as has been suggested, is desirable, would in any way violate the terms of the naval treaty, or that any nation has suggested it would violate the terms of the naval treaty.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not believe it is necessary for me to discuss that particular question at this time. The ships and the gun ranges that we have are precisely the same as they were at the time the Limitation of Armament Conference was concluded, and the question of whether we could properly under the treaty modify the elevation of guns is a question that I do not think is necessary to be considered at this moment.

Mr. LITTLE. Might I add that it would be necessary in a fight to know about that, would it not?

Mr. FRENCH. There are one or two other matters in connection with maintaining our ratio that I desire to discuss, and one of them is the possible naval budgets for Great Britain and Japan for the coming fiscal year. In this bill we carry something more than $294,000,000.

I do not know what the present ministry in England is going to recommend to Parliament. The ministry that went out of power some 60 days ago, according to newspaper reports, proposed to recommend a budget of approximately £59,300,000, or something like $297,000,000. After the present ministry came into power it was suggested that a reduction of £5,000,000 would be made, and there seemed to be considerable adverse reaction on the subject in the press of Great Britain. I think that we can look to Great Britain as probably planning on appropriations somewhere between $270,000,000 and $297,000,000.

Turning to Japan—and Japan has gone through a tremendous crisis—the ministry before the present one, and which was in power about the time we were conducting our hearings, 90 days ago, according to press dispatches, indicated that it was proposing to recommend to the Diet a budget aggregating 238,000,000 yen, or, in other words, $119,000,000. The present ministry, I understand, is not more liberal. I think, then, from the standpoint of the money that it is expected will be put into the Budget for next year, we are keeping up our share in the amount carried in the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Concerning the program as to the four vessels which broke down, there are various proposals involving various amounts of money and various degrees of efficiency as to how to restore them to their place in the battle line. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said that something is to be done without legislation here by the Navy Department to bring them back to efficiency.

Mr. FRENCH. Under existing appropriations the department is planning to spend approximately $100,000, which will put these ships back into the Navy.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is that $100,000 each?

Mr. FRENCH. Not $100,000 each, but $100,000 for the entire four—$35,000 for material and the balance, approximately, for labor.

Then, as I understand it, the department, and probably the legislative committee, will be called upon to consider whether these ships will be continued as coal burners with large alterations made at a cost of probably $1,400,000 or be converted into oil burners at a cost of approximately $3,400,000. I do not know what the program will be, but I believe it will depend on what the administration and the legislative committee will recommend.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BUTLER] has pending a bill for the modernization of the New York and Texas at a total cost of $6,800,000 for the two vessels.

Mr. FRENCH. That will probably include other items; it probably includes deck protection and also the blisters on the hulls to protect them against torpedoes.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It involves both, but do we not want that extra protection?

Mr. FRENCH. That again is a question for the legislative committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in answer to the question of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD], who asked a pertinent question awhile ago that the kind of speech which was made here awhile ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is just the kind of speech that got us into trouble last year when, without any authority of law and against our solemn treaty provisions, we appropriated $6,500,000 to raise the turrets of certain guns on certain battleships so as to give our guns a greater range. When the appropriation was proposed I made a point of order against it and called attention to our treaty provisions which prevented us in direct specific language from doing that very thing. Yet, because of just such speeches as the gentleman from Massachusetts made, it got your blood roused up. You believed from just such speeches that England was not keeping her pact with us, and that she was modernizing ships and raising the turrets so as to increase the range of her guns, and that worked you up to such a pitch that through expediency alone my point of order was overruled and that $6,500,000 was appropriated for that purpose.

Then Congress adjourned and what happened? When the administration got a proper opportunity to look into it, Mr. Secretary Hughes decided that it might be violative of our treaty. And he decided something else. He made an investigation and he reported to the country that the representations as to what England had done made to our committee and to the Congress by our naval officers were not true. He caused the statement to be made to the country that England was not violating her pact, and England had not gone beyond the terms of her treaty; that neither England nor any of the other powers that entered into that agreement had in any way violated their agreement.

Then what happened? We had the ridiculous spectacle just the other day of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations being forced to put an amendment on the deficiency bill to return that $6,500,000 back into the Treasury because it had not been used. I am not criticizing the distinguished chairman of our great Appropriations Committee, but commending him for putting the money back into the Treasury. I am criticizing the speeches that caused the money to be taken out.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. Was not that the fact?

Mr. MADDEN. Allow me to tell the story.

Mr. BLANTON. Did it not happen?

Mr. MADDEN. I will tell the story.

Mr. BLANTON. Please do not do it in my time. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I will do it in my time.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the fact, and you can not deny it, $6,500,000 was thus appropriated and you put it back in the Treasury the other day in your deficiency bill, and you will not deny that Mr. Secretary Hughes, after Congress adjourned, stated to the country that the naval officers had misrepresented the facts and had misled your committee and had misled the House into passing such a law.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman made a statement that Mr. Secretary Hughes stated that the change in the elevation of the guns would be a violation of the treaty?

Mr. BLANTON. I say I read that statement in the press, and it was so reported to the country.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. According to my recollection he never made any such statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman got a copy of what he gave out to the country?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am giving it from my own recollection and I presume the gentleman is doing so.

Mr. BLANTON. I am giving it from my recollection. I will accept the exact statement from the printed copy if the gentleman has one.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So will I.

Mr. BLANTON. But my recollection is that the treaty question was raised in the State Department. He may not have given it out because he may not have wanted thus to embarrass Congress and the committee, but violation of our treaty was the main question, and that was the decision of the Secretary of State's office. It was a question of whether this Government was violating the terms of the treaty because the Navy wanted to modernize these ships and these guns and wanted to raise the turrets and increase the range of the guns. The Navy wanted to do it, but our State Department did not want to violate our sacred treaty. I am just making this point, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] ought not to make that kind of a speech. It gets us roused up and makes us think somebody is imposing on us, and we are ready then to vote all kinds of money out of the Treasury to increase our Navy to make it as big as anybody else's navy. That is the result of such a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like recognition.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no secret, Mr. Chairman, about the fact that the Committee on Appropriations had some doubt when it was considering the request of the Navy Department for $6,500,000 for the elevation of the turret guns on the battleships as to the propriety of making the appropriation, but the technical men of the Navy testified positively before us that England had elevated the turret guns of her ships to give them a longer range. In common with other members of the Committee on Appropriations I felt at the time that if we elevated our turret guns we would be violating the treaty, but we thought that in the face of the statement by responsible naval officers of the Government that England was, as a matter of fact, elevating the guns on her ships since the conference that we would be derelict in the performance of the duty devolving upon us if we failed to bring our guns up to the same degree of efficiency as theirs.

Being still in doubt, we took the precaution to put the appropriation in such language that it could not be used if it violated the treaty. But it did not rest on that. The matter of the violation of the treaty was not the thing that the question turned on afterwards. The question was one of veracity, and the investigation that I made personally as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after the appropriation had become a law, led me to the conclusion that somebody had lied.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I said. You are corroborating me.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not deny what the gentleman said. I then assumed the responsibility, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, of going to the Navy and demanding that the money should not be used. [Applause.] I said if it were to be used I would get on the floor of the House and denounce the whole procedure. It was not used.

The President of the United States issued an order that it should not be used. In the face of all the facts in connection with the proposition I thought that the Committee on Appropriations would be justified in repealing the appropriation, and I offered an amendment on the floor when the deficiency bill was under consideration, providing for the repeal of the appropriation and the authority which the provision carried to elevate the turret guns on the American battleships, and the House unanimously voted to concur in the amendment which I offered.

There is nothing secret about what we did. We have no apology to offer as members of the Committee on Appropriations for what we did. We did our duty in the beginning as we saw our duty, and when we discovered that we had done what we ought not to have done, we did our duty in the second instance by repealing the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. I was not criticizing the Appropriations Committee or its efficient chairman. I commend him for what he did in keeping this money from being used and in having it returned to the Treasury where it belongs. He bravely calls a spade a spade.

I was criticizing the speeches of the gentleman from Massachusetts and others, that caused this $6,500,000 to be appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me finish this statement. I think it is important. The Secretary of State categorically asked the question of the British Government, what they had done, and they denied that they had done anything, and the Secretary of State made a public announcement to that effect, and Mr. Roosevelt, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, also made public an announcement to the effect that they had made a mistake when they said to the Committee on Appropriations that England had elevated her guns.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LITTLE. Gentlemen of the House, a few moments ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] brought out the fact that a captain in the Navy had stated a situation which either places great blame on the carelessness of our people or impugned the faith of Great Britain. I asked which it was, and up to the present moment I have been unable to get from anybody a civil answer. My own judgment is that when obscure and unknown Members like myself endeavor to learn what is going on about these big bills we ought to be able to get the facts. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I find out why I could not get the facts. Somebody had been lying. Has somebody else been lying now? Before I can vote on this I would like to have some information, so that I can vote on it intelligently. If such a matter as this happened in the House of Commons it might result in a vote of lack of confidence in the ministry. I see now a set of statements alleged on the authority of this captain in the Navy. Before we go any further I think we ought to have these facts. I do not think the chairman of the committee, who contains in his bosom a full deposit of all this information, should hesitate to bring out the facts. It is unquestioned that somebody lied; and that being so, we should know, and he knows it. When some unknown Member wants an answer to his question you should give it to him. In that way you might have avoided these red-hot questions at the time, if somebody had told me that somebody had lied.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if there is a filibuster going on on that side to delay the consideration of the bill? On this side we want to expedite the consideration of the bill so that we may bring to pass the hope of the President that Congress will adjourn by the 1st of June. It seems we have had thus far a filibuster that threatens to fritter the entire morning away.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. I am very anxious, as I am sure the House is, that all of the appropriations shall be passed by the middle of next month. Every bill except one is ready in the committee, waiting for consideration by the House. We must send the bills over to the Senate to get them enacted into law. We have discussed this present bill for two days. Every angle of the bill has been discussed, and I hope that gentlemen of the House will help us to pass not only this bill as rapidly as decent consideration will justify but also the other bills as they are brought on the floor, so that we may be able to get away and get home as early as possible. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

There are a few facts which have not already been brought out and should be brought out. At the time the $6,500,000 was appropriated for elevating the guns and protecting the decks it was appropriated with the understanding on the part of the Navy Department and of the State Department that the British had, since the treaty was made, done that same thing with their boats. When the departments came to investigate it was found that the British had done those things before the treaty was signed and before the treaty was entered into. Therefore, in response to Mr. MADDEN's request, the $6,500,000 was not expended.

The question as to whether or not that appropriation could be expended and the guns elevated within the treaty has not been raised and passed upon by the State Department and has not been conceded by the Navy Department. The only reason why it was not expended was because the appropriation was obtained from the House under a misapprehension. The question, I understand, will be brought up again under legislation coming from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the House will then be given an opportunity to pass on it again with the full facts before it as to what they should do.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota rose.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph end in five minutes? Or make it 10 minutes, 5 for the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] and 5 for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph end in 10 minutes, 5 to be used by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] and 5 by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said here to-day as to changing the elevation in the guns on most of our capital ships, I want to make a few observations in reference to this very important question. A fleet that is outranged is well on the way to destruction. In his annual report for 1923 the Secretary of the Navy quotes from a report made in the year 1275 and found in The Book of Marco Polo, reading as follows:

On this subject (length of range) the engineers and experts of the army should employ their very sharpest wits. For if the shot of one army, whether engine stones or pointed projectiles, have a longer range than the shot of the enemy, rest assured that the side whose artillery hath the longest range will have a vast advantage in action. Plainly, if the Christian shot can take effect on the Pagan forces, whilst the Pagan shot can not reach the Christian forces, it may be safely asserted that the Christians will continually gain ground from the enemy, or, in other words, they will win the battle.

If that principle was true in those days of primitive artillery and projectiles, it is doubly true to-day.

It is undisputed that there is a serious difference in the ranges at which the British and American fleets can engage. I compare with the British, for under the terms of the limitation of armaments treaty the two navies, so far as capital ships were concerned, were to be of equal strength. If the 5-5-3 ratio then means anything, it means substantial equality in hitting power. A fleet that is outranged can not hit.

I quote from page 75 of the same report, as follows:

It is quite obvious that in a fleet action all the vessels of a fleet can not be firing upon the enemy until the enemy is under fire by the ship of shortest range. In such a fleet action we would have seven ships that can fire slightly over 20,000 yards, whereas the ships of shortest range in the British Fleet, according to the British naval writer, Mr. Bywater, can fire 23,800 yards, making a difference of practically 2 miles. In other words, if the British remained at a range just equal to their shortest-ranged ships, the fire of over a third of our ships could not reach them. This would automatically reduce the size of our fleet by one-third. Expressed in terms of elevation of guns, the 13 ships of the American Navy have a designed elevation of 15 degrees, whereas none of the 22 ships of the British Navy has less than 20 degrees, thus leaving the American ships much inferior in this regard to those of Great Britain.

With these facts in mind there can be no question of our obligation in providing for the common defense to authorize the correction of this inequality. A change in the elevation of our guns will do it. We, therefore, should authorize this change unless it is in violation of this treaty. Furthermore, we should do it promptly.

With this in mind and upon representations that Great Britain had made elevation changes in her guns after the treaty was signed, Congress authorized the change and appropriated $6,500,000 for that purpose. Later, and before the work had begun, the Navy Department ascertained that Great Britain had made these changes after the close of the great war, but before the treaty was signed. The Navy Department felt that the money had been paid under a misapprehension and did not use the appropriation. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations then took steps to see that the money went back into the Treasury.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I regret I can not at this time. So that the question is again before Congress. The only question is whether a change in elevation is a violation of the treaty. This provision, and this only, in the treaty can in any way apply to a change in gun elevation:

No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman's reference to misapprehension refer to the same thing that the gentleman from Illinois stated, but marked by different terms?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota was not present when those statements were made; he does not know who made them; and he is not characterizing them.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] speak, did he not?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman was sitting by me, and I heard him.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I heard him; yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Is the gentleman referring to the same thing when he uses the term "misapprehension"? I want to get the facts, because I am tired of evasion.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am not going to say whether anyone lied or anyone was mistaken. I prefer, if the gentleman from Kansas wants to know, to believe that any man who made a statement of that kind was mistaken, and I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois intended to tell this House that the gentlemen who informed him in the committee did so with the intention of lying.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not say they did it deliberately, but they did lie.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Somebody may have lied away back in the distance somewhere. As to that, I do not know.

Mr. LITTLE. I think we ought to be able to get the facts.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not yield any further. I wanted merely to call attention to the remarks of the Secretary on pages 75 and 76 of the annual report and then to Appendix C of the annual report, being a memorandum by Capt. Frank H. Schofield, of the United States Navy. I shall ask to have them inserted with my remarks.

Gentlemen, when this question was first put before the House I thought a change of elevation would be a change in the mounting, and therefore a violation of the treaty. That was my first impression, but I have since studied it—

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall object to those remarks going in the Record unless the statement from the Secretary of State—

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have not offered the remarks yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, when the gentleman does offer them I will make my objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this taken out of my time. I was under that impression, as I say, but I have since read the memorandum of Captain Schofield, and I suggest that every Member of this House ought to read it. I suggest the reasonableness of the argument. In fact, it is unanswerable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks by attaching Appendix C, referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks by inserting the material which he has just described. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection if I may have permission to put in the press reports of what the State Department found in connection with this matter. If that is allowed to go in with this, I have no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman desires, he can insert that in with his own remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put that in myself, but I want to put it in following the gentleman's statement, so the public may know the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman has a little time left, and I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection provided they may go in together.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the gentleman from Minnesota be permitted to insert certain material in connection with his remarks. The gentleman from Minnesota, if he so desires, may amend his request so as to include the matter referred to by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Minnesota will amend his request so that the material may go in together, I will not object.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not care to amend my request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to object. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection I made to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD to include the material just mentioned. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPENDIX C.

THE GUN-ELEVATION QUESTION.

[Memorandum by Capt. Frank H. Schofield, United States Navy.]

Foreword: The Sixty-seventh Congress made an appropriation of $6,500,000 to increase the elevation of the turret guns of 13 United States capital ships. Congress was informed erroneously but with candid intent that the guns of the British fleet had had their elevations similarly increased. The British Government stated that this information was incorrect. The American Government immediately and unhesitatingly accepted the British statement. The question of the legality of the action contemplated by the appropriation of six and a half millions was not questioned by the British.

As Congress had made the appropriation under the impression that the British guns had been similarly elevated, it was decided to postpone action on increasing the elevation of the turret guns of 13 ships until Congress had again considered the subject.

There has been some agitation in the press to the effect that it would be contrary to the letter or the spirit of the Washington treaty to increase the elevation of our turret guns. The following paragraphs deal with this question:

The gun-elevation question has two separate and distinct parts:

- (1) Is it allowable under the treaty?
- (2) Is it worth doing?

This memorandum deals first with the first question. This question is a matter of written law—the treaty. The decision of this question must depend upon a correct interpretation of written law. There are two separate laws on the subject, each equally operative, equally conclusive, both intended to express identical ideas. These two laws are the English version of the treaty for limitation of armament and the French version of the same treaty.

I shall examine the English version of the treaty first to determine whether or not the elevation of the turret guns on American battleships may be increased without violating the treaty. The following words in the treaty and no others bear on this subject:

"* * * No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted * * *"

The italicized words in the above quotation are the only words in the treaty that bear on the gun-elevation question. Our problem, therefore, is simply to examine what we propose to do in the light of the meaning of these words.

There are five necessary steps in increasing the elevation of the turret guns on the 13 of our battleships that are under consideration.

These steps are:

- (1) Increasing the size of the gun port opening.
- (2) Lengthening the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance.
- (3) Cutting away some of the plates and framing under the breech of the gun so that the breech may be lowered further.
- (4) Changing the position of the ammunition hoists slightly.
- (5) Making a more powerful counterrecoil system.

Let us consider each step separately:

"(1) Increasing the size of the gun port opening."

The turret guns stick out through holes in the face of the turret. When the guns are pointed at their greatest range—that is, when the muzzles of the guns are elevated—the guns touch or almost touch the top of the hole in the armor through which the guns project. If we wish to point the guns higher, we must lengthen the hole upward, so that the muzzle of the gun may be raised higher.

Question. Is lengthening the hole (port opening) in the front of the turret armor an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The general type of mounting might be the same if all the turret armor were removed. The guns might still be in the same position with the same general type of mounting. The armor is simply protection to the guns, mounts, and crew. No matter how many or how big the holes cut in the armor, the general type of mounting remains the same.

"(2) Lengthening the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance."

The elevating screw extends from under the breech of the gun to a part of the gun mount below, where it runs through a nut fixed to the mount. It is connected to an electric motor that turns it in either direction. If the screw turns in one direction, the elevating screw runs up through the fixed nut and its upper end pushes the breech of the gun up, thus lowering the muzzle of the gun; if the screw turns in the opposite direction, it runs down through the fixed nut and pulls the breech of the gun down, thus elevating the muzzle of the gun. If the length of the elevating screw is increased and if the distance between the breech of the gun and the fixed nut through which the elevating screw travels is increased, it will be possible to raise and lower the breech of the gun through greater distances.

Question. Is the lengthening of the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance an "alteration in the general type of mounting"?

Answer. No. It is not a change in type of mounting. The same type of mounting is preserved in making this change, but the capacity for up and down motion of the breech of the gun is increased. A short broomstick is of the same general type as a long broomstick. Size does not alter type.

"(3) Cutting away some of the plates and framing under the breech of the gun, so that the breech may be lowered farther."

As guns are now installed in the ships there are various platforms and framings directly underneath the breech of the gun that the breech of the gun comes near to when the muzzle is pointed as high as possible. If we propose to point the muzzle higher, these frames and plates and fittings must have their position changed so there will be a clear road for the breech of the gun when it is lowered for extreme long-range pointing and firing.

Question. Is the cutting away of platforms, frames, and fittings within the turret structure so as to permit the breech of the gun to be lowered farther an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. All fittings that would have to be changed in position would still be retained in a modified form and in a modified position. Nothing would be taken away or added to the gun mount that would change its type so far as this particular step is concerned. It is not a change in type of writing desk, for example, if more room is made under the desk so that a fat man can get his legs where a thin man gets them without any trouble.

"(4) Changing the position of the ammunition hoists slightly."

Question. Would this be an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The reply to this question is similar to No. 3, and, in fact, might be included under No. 3.

"(5) Making a more powerful counterrecoil system."

When a turret gun is fired its muzzle is always pointed up some, otherwise the projectile would fall in the water close to the ship. The farther you wish to fire the gun the higher the muzzle must be pointed. When the gun is fired it recoils some little distance back into the turret. Its recoil is stopped by a hydraulic or pneumatic system, reinforced by springs which act as brakes on its recoil. Before the gun can be reloaded it must be shoved forward again into the same position it had at the start. This is done by means of the counterrecoil system, which may be by springs, by air pressure, or by hydraulic pressure.

It is evident that the more the breech of the gun is depressed the more the gun has to be elevated in shoving it back into place after firing. When the gun is level it is just a question of overcoming the friction of the gun in the slide enough to push it forward. When the gun is elevated 10° you must not only overcome this friction but you must push the gun up an incline of 10°. When the gun is elevated 30° you must overcome the friction and, in addition, lift the gun up an incline of 30°. This requires a considerable increase of power over that required for the 10° elevation. It will therefore be necessary to provide more power to return the gun to loading position after firing, but it will not require a change in the type of the mounting or a departure from established practice in the design in order to accomplish this object.

Question. Is making a more powerful counterrecoil system an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The same type of automobile jack can be used to lift the wheel of a Ford touring car and the wheel of a 5-ton truck. The only differences involved are those of size and power.

From the preceding analysis of the five steps necessary in making changes in our ships to permit of increased elevation of the guns it is obvious that since no one of these steps involves a change in the general type of mounting of the main armament that the proposal itself does not involve a change of type and that therefore it is permissible for us to change the elevation of our guns.

If, however, we should propose installing two turrets for one turret or should take turrets from the center line of the ship and put them on the sides of the ship or should take them from the sides of the ship and put them on the center line or should take turrets that can not fire over each other and arrange them so they could fire over each other, we would be changing the general type of mounting of the main armament; in fact, we would be making of our ships ships of a decidedly different character. It was this sort of change that the treaty sought to guard against. No such changes as these are proposed or even suggested. We simply propose changes that will enable us to use more effectively and more efficiently the guns and mountings we already have.

We come now to the French version of the treaty and its bearing upon the question under consideration. The following words in the French version of the treaty and no other words in this version bear on this subject:

"Sera interdit tout changement dans la cuirasse de flanc, le calibre et le nombre des canons de l'armement principal, ainsi que tout changement dans son plan general d'installation."

The italicized words of the above quotation are the only words in the French version of the treaty that bear on the gun-elevation question. For convenience in discussing their meaning, let us translate these words as literally as possible into English.

"All change in the side armor, the caliber and number of guns in the main armament, as well as all change in its general plan of installation is forbidden."

From this translation we can separate out, by italicizing, the words that bear directly on the question under discussion. It will be found that the whole question hinges on the meaning of "general plan of installation of main armament." No stretch of the imagination can make these words mean that any one or all of the five steps above enumerated as necessary for increasing the elevation of our turret guns are changes in the "general plan of installation of main armament." It is perfectly obvious that these words do refer to such changes as are indicated in a paragraph above, namely:

- (1) Installing two turrets for one turret.
- (2) Taking turrets from the center line of the ship and putting them on the sides of the ship.
- (3) Taking turrets from the side of the ship and putting them on the center line.
- (4) Placing turrets that can not fire over the other so that one of them can fire over the other, etc.

Such changes would be changing the "general plan of installation of main armament."

So much for the common-sense legal phases of the question.

The public is very generally under the impression that the British Admiralty have stated officially through the proper channels that by their interpretation of the treaty it would be illegal for us to change the elevation of our turret guns as proposed. No such contention has ever been put forward either by the British Admiralty, the British Government, or by any other official in any government signatory to the treaty. This is a categorical denial that can be substantiated by anyone at any time who chooses to make official inquiry either of the State Department or of the Navy Department.

The general intent of the treaty was to grant to each power full right to keep step with material and scientific progress, subject only to specific limitations. Nowhere is there to be found a "spirit" of the treaty that contravenes this right.

(2) IS IT WORTH DOING?

When we place guns on a ship we do it in the hope that if that ship ever goes into battle it will be able to hit its enemy oftener and harder than the enemy ship hits it, no matter at what range the battle is fought. If we fail to have this object in view all the time, the ship is likely to fail. In naval battle, more than in any other kind of contest, it is the advantage at the very start of the contest that is most important and may be decisive. Let us see what increasing the elevation of our turret guns might do to gain that initial advantage in battle.

When most of our battleships were designed and built 10 miles was considered an extreme battle range. The thought of the day was that no battle would open with gunfire at greater ranges than 10 miles. We know now that effective firing can be done by ships up to a range of 20 miles and that battle is likely to open at that range. Thirteen of our 19 battleships are built to fire at an extreme range of about 11 miles. The gun mounts on these ships can be modified without changing the general type of mounting, so that the guns will all be able to fire at a range of 18 miles. The five newest of our ships can all fire their guns at 19 miles.

The accompanying sketches show what an overwhelming handicap our battleship fleet may have to accept in battle if we fail to increase the elevation of our turret guns. As data regarding foreign fleets is difficult fully to assemble and to understand, no attempt has been made in the sketches to make comparisons of our fleet with foreign fleets. The comparison in each and every case is a comparison of what our present fleet in its present condition can do, with what our fleet could do were the elevation of the turret guns of 13 of our capital ships increased to 30°.

In each sketch the column of ships to the left represents our battleship fleet as at present without the mounts altered so as to permit elevating the guns 30°, and the dots near that column represent the number of hits made on those ships, at the range indicated, by the right-hand column of ships.

The right-hand column of ships represents what our fleet would be were they all given a gun elevation of 30°. The dots near the right-hand column of ships indicate the number of hits that might be made by our fleet as at present on the ships of that column while they were making the much larger number of hits shown on the left-hand column.

The number of hits in each sketch represents the same length of time of firing. The greater number of hits shown at the shorter ranges is due solely to the greater ease of hitting at the shorter ranges. For instance, under identical conditions about twice as many hits are made at 25,000 yards as are made at 32,000 yards, and about twice as many hits are made at 20,000 yards as at 25,000 yards.

The sketches make no allowance for the heavy fire that the left-hand column is under as compared with the right-hand column. In actual battle the left-hand column of ships would not be able to fire as many shots nor as well-aimed shots as the right-hand column, because ships that are being hit frequently never fire as well as those under less severe fire. If we should take this fact into account, the right-hand column would have a still greater advantage. As this special advantage can not be determined accurately it is not taken account of in the sketches.

Only about one-quarter of the guns of our fleet can now reach ranges above 24,000 yards. If our fleet were to meet in battle at these ranges another fleet of equal strength that could deliver all its gunfire, our fleet would be hopelessly defeated by superior gunfire before it could get close enough to bring all its own guns into action.

At ranges between 20,000 and 24,000 yards our present fleet is about one-half as effective as it might be. These ranges are likely to be decisive ranges. We know by official foreign statements that our fleet is inferior to a foreign fleet in hitting power at these ranges in about the ratio of 10 to 14. If a battle were to be fought to a conclusion between two fleets of 18 otherwise equal ships at a range of 22,000 yards, and if the ratio of hitting powers of these fleets at the start were as 10 to 14, at the conclusion of the battle one fleet would be entirely destroyed, sunk—ours—and the other would have 11 good ships left. If, however, we were to increase the elevation of our turret guns so that all may fire at the higher ranges, the ratio of hitting powers would then be about as 10 to 11.4, a ratio which, though reduced, is still against us, and one which we can not overcome by any change in our present ships. This is the meaning of the gun-elevation question.

If it is worth while at all to have a navy, then it is worth while to give that navy a fair chance in a self-respecting stand-up fight. It is not only worth while, it is imperative, that we elevate our turret guns so that they all can fire at the highest ranges. Even then we shall still be decidedly inferior to the strongest fleet at certain ranges.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have just listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], relative to the action taken by the House last year in appropriating $6,500,000 for the elevation of the turret guns of our battleships, which, if carried out, would have been a clear violation of our disarmament treaties.

We all appreciate the services of the gentleman from Illinois in helping to prevent the expenditure of this money, and in that way saving us from further international embarrassment, but I must demur to his statement that this matter was cleared up by the Secretary of State "categorically" asking the question of the British Government what they had done with reference to this matter.

The facts are that during the month of February, 1923, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, and possibly other representatives of the Navy Department went before the Committee on Appropriations and advocated this appropriation for the purpose of elevating the turret guns on our battleships on the ground that Great Britain was doing the same thing. Mr. Roosevelt also stated that "other powers have been doing so or are contemplating the same thing." Acting upon this information, the House voted the appropriation above mentioned which I have just referred to. I refused to vote for it at the time, as did a great many other Members of the House, for the reason that we did not believe the British Empire would flagrantly violate her treaty obligations solemnly entered into with the other great powers of the earth without some justification or excuse. I had attended the Disarmament Conference, and had listened to the speeches of Mr. Balfour and other representatives of the British Government, and I could not believe that the appeals they had made for the safety of civilization had been insincere, or that the nation they represented had willfully failed to comply with the treaties which that conference had agreed upon.

On December 20, 1922, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, made a speech at New Haven, Conn., in which he referred to the action of the British Government in elevating their turret guns. This speech was based on information which he says had been furnished him by the Navy Department. On February 26, 1923, only a short time after Mr. Hughes delivered this speech, and almost immediately after Mr. Roosevelt appeared before the Appropriations Committee, it was stated on the floor of the British Parliament by Lieutenant Colonel Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty, that none of the capital ships of the British Navy had had the elevations of the guns in its main armament altered since the original fitting. This statement was elicited by a question from Commander Bellairs, Unionist, as to whether the Admiralty's attention had been drawn to a statement attributed to the American Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, to the effect that Great Britain had increased the elevation of the turret guns on her battleships.

The British Government took this matter up through diplomatic channels and convinced Mr. Secretary Hughes that he had been misinformed, and that the British Empire was not elevating the turrets on her battleships, as the Secretary of State and the House Appropriations Committee had been led to believe. On March 20, 1923, the Secretary of State issued the following statement:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
March 20, 1923.

The Secretary of State to-day made the following statement:

"In my speech at New Haven on December 29, 1922, I made the following statement with regard to alterations in the British capital ships: 'The result is that in a considerable number of British ships bulges have been fitted, elevation of turret guns increased, and turret-loading arrangements modified to conform to increased elevation.' In making this statement I relied upon specific information which had been furnished me by the Navy Department and which, of course, the Navy Department believed to be entirely trustworthy.

"The Department of State has been advised by the British Government categorically 'that no alteration has been made in the elevation of the turret guns of any British capital ship since they were first placed in commission,' and further, 'that no additional deck protection has been provided since February 6, 1922, the date of the signing of the Washington treaty.'

"It gives me pleasure to make this correction, as it is desired that there shall be no public misapprehension."

Thus we have one of the most humiliating spectacles that has ever occurred in the history of our international affairs. The Secretary of State—the prime minister, if you please—of this great Republic being compelled to come out publicly and retract or apologize for a statement which he had made in a public address reflecting upon the British Government, and giving as his reasons or excuse for making these charges the fact that he had derived his information from the officials of the Navy Department, on whom he had the right to rely.

I thought when I read the statement of Mr. Hughes, and I still think, that it was most unfortunate and humiliating to have had the head of our international affairs forced into this embarrassing position as a result of the flagrant incompetency or gross irresponsibility of those in charge of the Navy Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT, NAVY.

For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $40,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

When this bill was first taken up the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] called attention to a matter concerning some furniture, saying, in brief:

This report, which seems to be based on definite information, that in a department of government furniture may be sold by order of the Secretary and bought in for him and shipped out to his own home in his own State. Has that gone on in the office of the former Secretary? There is a well-defined report that such did occur in the Department of the Interior. There is a report of several weeks' standing that that has been done. I would like to know something about it.

The same inquiry was made by the gentleman from Texas when the Interior Department bill was before the House. It is my recollection that at that time the inquiries were made in terms as if perhaps thousands of dollars were involved.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; not thousands of dollars. That is a mistake.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I at that time made a telephonic inquiry of the department and received some information that led me to believe that it was a much smaller affair than the gentleman from Texas had in mind, and in my desire to push the Interior bill along I did not give any further attention to it. The matter having been brought up again I have renewed my inquiry of the department, and I have here a letter setting forth the circumstances and facts about the matter, which I will ask unanimous consent to put in the Record, because I do not desire to delay the consideration of the bill. I am willing the gentleman from Texas should have an opportunity to examine it.

In presenting this statement I want it understood that I am not accompanying the statement with any justification of the facts set forth or the transaction, nor am I indulging in any criticism. I am simply presenting facts which have twice been requested by a Member of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not present a further statement as to my attitude than this. I do think that publicity as to these transactions will not be lacking in helpfulness. I question the ethics of such transactions. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I think such practices have been frequent, and I recall that when Mr. Wilson went out of the Presidency he purchased the automobile which he had been using, and his secretary did the same thing. I am making a little investigation about things like that which have happened, and one of these days I hope to make a report to the House about them.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand it is quite customary for Cabinet members to purchase the chairs which they have used during their term of office, and I just present this in response to the inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks for the purpose indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks by including the matter mentioned. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, what is it?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a statement of facts requested by the gentleman from Texas.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman is in order. This thing of sneaking things into the Record—

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I resent that.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I object to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in my own time I want to resent the term used by the gentleman about something being sneaked in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. The matter had been presented to the gentleman from Texas for his examination.

Mr. MOREHEAD. The gentleman from Texas is all right, but the gentleman does not represent this entire House.

Mr. BLANTON. Do not object to it.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended for the purpose of reading the letter from the desk. It is not my desire to sneak in anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for the purpose indicated.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of the finest exhibitions of playing pennant politics I have ever seen in this House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Under the rules of the House, is it permissible for a gentleman in his speech to have read and made a part of his remarks in that manner matter that has been objected to?

The CHAIRMAN. It is according to the matter attempted to be read. If it is matter pertinent to the issue, the gentleman has a right to do it. If it is matter extraneous to the matter being discussed, a point of order can be made against it, and unanimous consent is required to extend it in the Record.

Mr. CRAMTON. I simply want to suggest this to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], it is entirely immaterial to me whether it is read or not, but by asking to have it read I have removed any possible criticism of attempting to sneak something in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the matter referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 18, 1924.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,

Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Referring to inquiry of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, relative to disposition of certain furniture to former Secretary Fall, I have to advise that our records show that certain Jacobean oak furniture, purchased when the Interior Department Building was constructed in 1917, for furnishing the room of former Secretary Lane, was appraised and disposed of through the General Supply Committee of the Treasury to former Secretary Fall on or about January 17, 1923.

Same was appraised by representatives of the General Supply Committee at $231.25, which sum was paid to the order of the General Supply Committee by check of Secretary Albert B. Fall, dated January 17, 1923. I inclose copy of the said invoice and check.

It is my understanding that at the time Secretary Fall desired to purchase this furniture, the matter of whether it could be properly and legally disposed of was taken up orally by a representative of the supply division of this department with the members of the General Supply Committee under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and advice given that the surplus furniture could be appraised and disposed of, as was later done.

I am further advised that the furniture was shipped on a commercial bill of lading, the freight charges being paid by Secretary Fall.

Sincerely yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
First Assistant Secretary.

JOHN HARVEY, Chief Clerk.

Triplicate: Department or establishment retain this copy.

Transfer invoice, check, and tags sent to K. D. McRae, general supply commissioner, January 17, 1923.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I never claimed that Secretary Fall bought thousands of dollars' worth of furniture. I asked the committee if they knew anything about the rumor going around that a Cabinet officer, the ex-Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Fall, had bought some Government furniture and shipped it out to his ranch.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It may suit the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] to have this gentleman buy various pieces of Government furniture, but it is an unwise policy, even when the purchases are small.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not discussing the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. What I want to discuss in all fairness—

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to discuss some matter that was before the House the other day, and the gentleman demanded the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the classification act of 1923, $66,840.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: On page 8, at the end of line 25, insert before the period the following: "Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be available for the pay of any commissioned officer of the Navy while attached to the office of the Chief of Naval Operations and engaged upon work not specifically assigned by law to such office."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say more than a few words with reference to the amendment. I discussed this matter under general debate. The law provides specifically the duties of a Chief of Operations of the Navy. This amendment will not interfere in any way with the performance of those duties, but it would interfere with the performance by the Chief of Operations or any commissioned officer in that bureau of duties not assigned by law to that office. No one can complain if the appropriation is limited to pay officers for work assigned by law to that office. Under this amendment, however, the Chief of Operations could not serve as the Budget officer of the Navy, he could not exercise the duties of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, or of the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering. I do not think that it was ever the intention of the Congress that all powers should be centralized in one office. This amendment would permit the Chief of Operations to exercise every duty which is his under the law.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I could not hear everything that the gentleman from South Carolina said, but as I understand it the amendment pertains to limitations on officers performing services under orders within the department itself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. It simply provides that the money shall not be expended for the payment of officers assigned to the office of the Chief of Operations who engage in work which is not assigned by law to the office of the Chief of Operations. Every duty which by law is assigned to that office can be discharged by the officers assigned to that bureau, but this is to prevent the performance of duties by the Chief of Operations when such duties are not by law assigned to that office and are specifically assigned to other offices. It is aimed at the concentration in the office of the Chief of Operations of various powers and duties which are beyond the scope of the duties of that office as fixed by the law.

Under the language of the amendment it can not affect any officer unless he is engaged in some work not assigned by law to that office. I do not think the gentleman from Idaho would contend that the Chief of the Bureau of Operations ought to be engaged in work which is not assigned to that office. I do not think that the officers themselves can successfully contend that they ought to be empowered to discharge duties specifically assigned by law to other bureaus of the department.

Mr. FRENCH. Might it not interfere very materially with the assignment of work within the department?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. If this office is authorized by law to perform a given duty, it would not interfere with it.

Mr. FRENCH. If work were to be assigned contrary to law, I can see, then, that the gentleman's amendment would be pertinent.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is it.

Mr. FRENCH. But if it were to be assigned without the law, but within the discretion of the department and not properly within the scope of the work normally performed by a particular office, the money ought to be available to care for the payment of the expenses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The money will be available unless the officer performs some duty which, under the law, that office has not jurisdiction of.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman believes his amendment merely interprets into this part of the bill that which is already the law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is all. It is to prevent the setting aside of law by regulation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The law itself imposes certain duties on the bureau itself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And the gentleman is simply seeking here to preserve the law that we already have written on the statute books?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the only purpose of the amendment. It is to preserve the law as it now exists.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. How many employees of the Navy are regularly employed and paid out of this fund?

Mr. FRENCH. Approximately 2,000.

Mr. LITTLE. That would include them all?

Mr. FRENCH. Does the gentleman mean this particular section?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Approximately 41. I thought the gentleman referred to civilian employees in the District.

Mr. LITTLE. Does this refer to naval employees?

Mr. FRENCH. The paragraph refers to civil employees.

Mr. LITTLE. How many of them are in the employ of the department in the District under pay here?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman means under this particular section, approximately 41.

Mr. LITTLE. They are paid from this fund?

Mr. FRENCH. Under this head.

Mr. LITTLE. That is where the money goes, to those 41?

Mr. FRENCH. In that particular paragraph; yes.

Mr. STENGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. STENGLE. This particular section refers to civilian employees only.

Mr. FRENCH. I understand so.

Mr. STENGLE. Because they are the only class that comes within the purview of the transportation act of 1923. Are there any naval officers on the pay roll?

Mr. FRENCH. No; not at all.

Mr. STENGLE. Then there should be no objection to the amendment because it simply clarifies the situation.

Mr. FRENCH. Suppose the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION AND RECRUITING.

For travel allowance or for transportation and subsistence as authorized by law of enlisted men upon discharge; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation; expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties; transportation of dependents of enlisted men; in all, $3,600,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman what the rule is in reference to the requirement for enlisted men in the Navy to pay themselves out, as the expression goes; whether the same rule applies to the Navy as it does to the Army?

Mr. FRENCH. That practice is not followed at this time.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am very glad to learn it is not followed. I want to say that the practice in the Army of allowing men to pay their way out is an outrage, because it permits a man who has enough money to pay his son out, to do so; but if the father of a boy, or a widow, is not able to pay the money, his boy is left in the service, because they are not able to pay him out.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. I know the gentleman is a very fair man and wants to be fair, and the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that the boy who pays his way out is rich or the son of a rich parent.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; I am saying the men who pay themselves out are people who have the money in some instances, and in some instances they are not able to get it and pay their boy out, and there are a great many people who are not able to pay their way out.

Mr. SNYDER. I agree with the gentleman; I would like to have it done away with entirely, so there can be no purchasing themselves out.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want them all on the same plane. I know the proposition arose from the effort on the part of the War Department in trying to get something back to the Government for the expense they were put to by taking them into the Army, the expense of transportation and things of that character, but if they are entitled to be discharged then they ought to be discharged upon the same plane and principle without any discrimination. Now they send out a statement that upon the payment of so much money after having so many days or months in the Army that a man can buy himself out. Now, that rule has been promulgated from a desire to save the Treasury of the United States, but it is wrong in principle, because I know of cases where they say that this boy can be discharged from the Army upon the payment of a certain sum of money, and unfortunately his family is unable to raise that much money and he is kept in the Army when he is needed at home worse than boys who are discharged and whose parents are able to buy them out. But I want to say I am glad, and I compliment the Navy, that there is no such practice in the Navy now. I think if a boy is entitled to be discharged he should be discharged, but if he is not entitled to be discharged he ought not to be discharged. They all should be given the same opportunity. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INSTRUMENTS AND SUPPLIES.

For supplies for seamen's quarters; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; all pilotage and towage of ships of war; canal tolls, wharfage, dock and port charges, and other necessary incidental expenses of a similar nature; services and materials in repairing, correcting, adjusting, and testing compasses on shore and on board ship; nautical and astronomical instruments and repairs to same, and pay of chronometer caretakers; libraries for ships of war, professional books, schoolbooks, and papers; maintenance of gunnery and other training classes; compasses, compass fittings, including binnacles, tripods, and other appendages of ship's compasses; logs and other appliances for measuring the ship's way, and leads and other appliances for sounding; photographs, photographic instruments and materials, printing outfit and materials; and for the necessary civilian electricians for gyrocompass testing and inspection; in all, $640,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of giving some information and attempting to get some. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the practice under the law to make purchases of these supplies, if possible, from manufacturers in the United States, or whether it is the rule to advertise for supplies and buy them in the market where they can be purchased the cheapest?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; it is the rule to advertise; it is the invariable rule.

Mr. SNYDER. And buy in the market where they can be bought the cheapest?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to ask the Clerk to read this letter in my time.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say this: In the case of certain articles purchased for particular purposes—

Mr. SNYDER. No; I am speaking of supplies.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.
The Clerk read as follows:

UTICA, N. Y., February 26, 1924.

HON. HOMER P. SNYDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On Navy Department's, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Schedule No. 1570, Class 783-Pliers-opened, December 4, 1923, contract 59402.

Items 3-2b, items 4-1a-3b-1c, items 6-2c, and items 5, were awarded to H. Boker & Co., New York, on pliers manufactured in Germany and furnished from their stock in New York.

To put it mildly it hardly seems just that we as manufacturers on this line of tools, who have capacity to supply in any quantity and quality what the Government specifies, and who have employees who are not fully employed at this time, and are called upon to assume taxes in support of the Government, can not help but feel that we should be entitled to this business on a fair competitive basis.

These are not the only contracts that have been awarded to Boker, but we specifically mention the above.

Very few of our high-grade hardware jobbers are handling German tools, and we can demonstrate very easily that the tools furnished by Boker are not the quality such as would have been furnished by us and some of our other competitors.

If we could run our printing presses and make the money to pay our help, of course we could quote lower prices than we do on these Government specifications.

During the war we were told to, "Give! Give! Give! until it hurts, to stop this awful Hun from conquering the world." Most everyone did give to their limit, and in face of all the facts, it does seem strange that our Government will award contracts to these German dealers.

We know your fairness and earnestness toward everything American, and are putting this up to your good judgment as to what is best to do, and we will be governed by your advice.

Thanking you very much for your kind consideration, we remain,
Respectfully yours,

UTICA DROP FORGE & TOOL CO.
R. B. BILLINGS, President.

Mr. SNYDER. Gentlemen, there is no question as to the facts in that letter. I ask the membership of this House and this country if they believe it is a proper policy for our Navy to buy the merchandise it needs in the ordinary operation of the Navy from Germany, in the face of the opportunity to buy merchandise of equal quality in this country, perhaps not at quite the price it can get it from Germany, due to the fact that we know that money in Germany as well as labor is depreciated and practically discredited. This concern which produces and makes these small forgings is like all the rest of us—trying to make a profit. If it makes a profit it pays a portion of it into the Government of the United States in the form of taxes. The question in my mind is whether the Government, on the whole, makes a saving by buying this article from Germany, even though at a smaller price if, in turn, it puts out of business the man who makes it in this country and thereby collects no tax.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Does the gentleman know the difference in the prices?

Mr. SNYDER. It would be infinitesimal in this case. I do not know what it is, but it could not be much, because the item is not large. But it is the policy about which I am talking. If the Navy of this country is buying pliers made in Germany in competition with pliers made in America, and is buying German items instead of American items; if it is doing it in other cases as well as this, then I maintain that the policy is wrong.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does not that come about on account of the restrictions that we put on the department, compelling them to buy after advertising for competitive bids?

Mr. SNYDER. It may be so. But in the face of conditions existing to-day in Germany, where there is no basis of value on anything, whether it be merchandise or anything else, no matter how much duty we might put on articles coming from abroad, no country in the world can compete with the Germans at this moment. This concern to which I refer, like every other one, endeavors to make a profit on its products; and if it does, it pays taxes to the Government; and the question is whether the difference that may exist in the price the Government pays for the German items, as compared with what it would pay for American-made items, compensates for the loss in profits in America and in taxes to the Government. I believe the policy is wrong. I believe that the American Navy and the American Army, in so far as they can, ought to buy their supplies from the producers in this country.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman know whether or not these articles were bought under such conditions as to enable the Government to avoid the payment of the import duty?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know as to that. I understood it was a competitive bid, and that the Navy bought these articles from the Herman Boker Co., importers of these German-made goods.

Mr. BOX. There was a case that came up some time ago where the Navy Department had bought a large quantity of duck in Germany, and it was shown that thereby the department had saved the import duty.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. But if even they got it at a lower price, and at the same time forced some American manufacturer out of business, is the Government justified, I ask, in doing that when it has the effect of putting our own people out of work?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Is there any substantial reason why the American-made goods should bring a higher price than similar goods made in Germany?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, there is no fixed value in Germany to-day, either on money, or commodities, or products, or anything else. In this country we have to pay for our labor and our materials.

Mr. FRENCH. As I stated a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, it is the practice of the Navy Department to purchase such articles on the basis of competitive bids. Standard specifications are set forth. I do not know the facts in such a particular instance as this, but I have no doubt that it would be disclosed on inquiry that the articles themselves met the specifications and standards set forth, and the bidder, who was a responsible bidder, was able to comply with the offer to purchase these articles under the law, and the Navy Department could not do otherwise than to accept the tender of the articles at the price quoted.

Mr. SNYDER. I agree with the gentleman, and I have not the slightest doubt that the Navy Department was forced to do what it did. But I question the wisdom of that policy. I think I was a Member of this House when that restriction was put on—a provision providing that they must buy in a competitive market.

Mr. FRENCH. There is another suggestion that could be made. It is possible that this particular tool might be of a kind that the Navy Department had special use for.

Mr. SNYDER. This was a general line of tools. It was not just one kind of plier. The Utica Drop Forge Co. makes a general line of small tools; not one single item only, but probably 500 different items, and the Navy probably uses from 1 to 50 different items.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman would recognize that the country would not approve of the Navy Department or any other department of the Government, in buying great quantities of material, doing it on another basis than on a competitive basis.

Mr. SNYDER. But the Navy does not have its ships built on the Clyde or elsewhere abroad; and so long as it does not build or purchase its ships in foreign shipyards and so long as the Congress does not authorize the purchase of its ships in foreign shipyards, why should it authorize the purchase of any part of the guns or any parts of the equipment if they can be purchased in this country? We certainly pay more for building our ships in this country than we would have to pay if they were built abroad, and why should we particularize?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is there anything in the bill that provides that such articles must be homemade articles or that foreign-made goods can be purchased in certain cases?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think it is specifically provided in the law.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, it may be that they can buy those things in any place they see fit. If so, they might buy them abroad and buy enough to last for 50 years; and in that case what would happen to American labor in the meantime?

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESERVE FORCE.

For expenses of organizing, administering, and recruiting the Naval Reserve Force; for the maintenance and rental of armories, including the pay of necessary janitors; and for wharfage, $170,000; for pay and allowances of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, while on active duty for training; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from active duty for training; transportation of enrolled men to and from active duty for training, and subsistence and transfers en route or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enrolled men during the actual period of active duty for training; pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and pay, allowances, and subsistence of enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve Force; and retainer pay of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, $3,400,000; in all, $3,570,000, which amount shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and the transportation thereof and for all other expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve Force; Provided, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent; Provided further, That retainer pay provided by existing law shall not be paid to any member of the Naval Reserve Force who fails to train as provided by law during the year for which he fails to train.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 13, line 3, after the word "force," insert the following: "and Naval Militia."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the subcommittee in charge of the appropriation bill to accept this amendment. They know what it will lead to—another amendment to be offered later in the paragraph. It is to restore to this bill the provision which has been stricken out. It would carry for five years, providing for what I think is one of the most important parts of the naval service, and that is the Naval Militia maintained by the different States. I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee whether he is willing to accept it and restore it to the bill, and I will endeavor to make you a promise—and what is better, I will endeavor to keep it—that the Naval Committee will go ahead and bring legislation in that will be regular and not require us to come asking the House to overlook the violation of a rule of the House.

Mr. FRENCH. By that the gentleman indicates that his committee is considering the question of reorganizing the laws under which the Naval Reserve Force operates.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to my friend that we have been considering but one thing for 42 days.

Mr. FRENCH. But you hope to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. We hope, if we live, to be able to get down to something that is entirely and fairly practical.

Mr. FRENCH. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the members of the Appropriations Subcommittee are agreeable to the language proposed, and we omitted it from the bill primarily because we had no jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: On page 14, at the end of line 1, insert a new proviso, as follows:

"Provided further, That until June 30, 1925, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and until June 30, 1925, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided further, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1925, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Is the chairman of the subcommittee going to make a point of order against this amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. As I understand it, the gentleman from Texas reserves his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I was wondering whether the chairman of the subcommittee was going to make one.

Mr. FRENCH. I will not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I do make it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FRENCH. I trust the gentleman from Texas will reserve his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am going to talk to my friend from Texas, who has reserved a point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Perhaps if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will explain his amendment, the gentleman from Texas may be willing to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania begins will he permit me to ask him this question: Is not that in the present law?

Mr. BUTLER. We have already amended the bill by putting in the Naval Militia. My first amendment included the Naval Militia.

Mr. TILSON. I do not mean the permanent law, but it is in the present current law, is it not?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is so meritorious, why on earth did the committee overlook it?

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the committee did not include the language proposed, and which has been carried in the bill for several years, for the reason that it is legislation and we had no jurisdiction. But here is the point: The State Naval Militia of New York shares in an expenditure that has been made, or an investment, of approximately $6,000,000 by the State of New York, mostly armories and grounds. That is turned over for the use of the Naval Reserve in New York, the State Naval Militia there being a part of it. If this amendment can go through and the State Naval Militia can function with the National Reserve, of which it will become a part, it will save us rents for armories and it will make possible in addition appropriations made by the State in excess of $200,000. I believe it is the desirable thing to do. As I say, it was omitted by our committee because, in the first place, we do not have jurisdiction from a legislative standpoint and, in the second place, we understand that the naval legislative committee is considering, or will consider, legislation looking to the rounding out of the laws under which the Naval Reserve operates.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says this is in the interest of economy. I want to ask him just how much economy there is in this paragraph:

The members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force.

Does the gentleman know how much that is going to cost the Government?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say this: If those gentlemen shall not be permitted to be carried as a part of the State Naval Militia, they will be carried—because they want this service—as a part of the naval force by enrolling in that force. But by permitting them to occupy the status of members of the New York State Naval Militia they will receive only what we would pay them if they did not have that status, but, on the other hand, they will bring to the use of the Naval Reserve Force, in New York, buildings, equipment, and all of that which has been provided by the State of New York.

Mr. BLANTON. But they will cost the Government just as much as though they belonged to the naval force itself.

Mr. FRENCH. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not? This amendment says so. It provides that they shall have all "the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force."

Mr. FRENCH. But the Government will be spared rents and other large expenditures. The expenses the gentleman enumerates we would need to meet anyway in support of members of whatever Naval Reserve Force would be built up in the State of New York. But if we can let the Naval Reserve Force of New York have the status of Naval Militia for New York, then the State of New York will turn over to the use of the Naval Reserve Force within that State several millions of dollars' worth of property, and we will save the payment of rents for armories and also receive material advantages for the Naval Reserve Force which the gentleman's State is helping to maintain.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admits that for seven years we have not had any law authorizing this provision. Why has not the chairman of the legislative Naval Committee, which is functioning all the time, brought in a bill in seven years to authorize this?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state to the gentleman from Texas the reason why this has not become permanent law. It has been carried along in the naval bill several years. We always considered it one of the most desirable parts of the whole bill. The time has come now, since the new rules have been made, that it is necessary for us to legislate in order that we may properly appropriate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. After we grant these men all of these gratuities and privileges and emoluments, how much extra is that going to cost the Government?

Mr. BUTLER. Nothing.

Mr. CULLEN. Not a dollar.

Mr. BUTLER. If it would, I would not be for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do they want it in here?

Mr. BUTLER. I will tell you why. Under this provision these men may for two months join what is known as the Fleet Naval Reserve, which fits them further for the service, but only for two months.

Mr. BLANTON. And get a junket trip over the world on a ship.

Mr. BUTLER. No; I will say to my friend it is regular training. There is another provision which follows which provides that unless they take this regular training under military rule they can not draw a penny of this money, and it is only for two months.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to say this to the gentleman: If the members of this Appropriations Committee can not protect their bill and keep this legislation out, I am not going to make a point of order against my old friend from Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad of that. I want to publicly acknowledge my gratitude to my friend for his confidence.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want to get some information as to how many men are included.

Mr. TABER. Eighteen hundred.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Has there been any estimate of cost made by anyone?

Mr. TABER. The State of New York pays $256,000 for the maintenance of these men and the equipment, which otherwise would be a charge upon the Government if the State of New York did not do it and if we did not have this provision.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; it would not be a charge against the Federal Government unless they were members of this Naval Reserve Force. Can the gentleman give any figures as to how much this amendment will cost the Federal Government?

Mr. TABER. If we did not have this provision, to reasonably take care of the situation, we would have to increase our Federal Naval Reserve to the same extent that it would be decreased by the cutting out of this militia.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Upon what does the gentleman base that statement? These men are not members of the Naval Reserve, are they?

Mr. TABER. They are, as a result of this amendment; yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. They would be. But the amendment has not yet been adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. They have been for four years.

Mr. TABER. They have been for several years.

Mr. FRENCH. I think this statement will clear up the situation. We went into the question to see whether or not these men and officers were doubly paid; that is, whether they were paid as members of the Naval Reserve Force by the Government and paid also by the State of New York as members of the State Naval Militia. We found that was not the case at all, but by letting them be paid, as we want them to be, as members of the Federal Naval Reserve, we then have the advantage of various plants and armories that have been built in New York, and in addition to that approximately $200,000 appropriated by the State of New York to help pay for additional incidental expenses connected with the armories and establishments, and that, probably, otherwise there would be vast rents and appropriations upon the Government.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, for the reason I think that our naval appropriations are now ample, and, in fact, more than they ought to be, I feel compelled, out of a sense of duty, to make the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that now comes too late.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It was reserved, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FRENCH. But not by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] withdrew his point of order some time ago and the amendment has been under debate.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; the gentleman did not make a withdrawal. If the gentleman had, I would at once have renewed it. The gentleman did make the statement that he did not intend to make it, but he did not withdraw the reservation of point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Was not that tantamount to a withdrawal?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If that had been my understanding, I would at once have made a reservation, but I considered that a reservation had been made and that all the discussion was had with that understanding.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Texas plainly said that if the chairman of the subcommittee did not protect his bill, he was not going to make the point of order against his old friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I submit the gentleman did not withdraw the point of order, and all the discussion proceeded under the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not understand it so.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the amendment to the appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is too late. We have argued it and debated it for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to believe the point comes too late. Debate was progressing. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was on the floor. He yielded to the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] then stated that in consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] he would withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misquoted. Here is what I said exactly—that if the members of this Appropriation Committee were not going to protect their own bill and make the point of order themselves I would not make it, but I did not say that I would do it.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard right there? When the gentleman made that statement I think the RECORD will show that I immediately asked for recognition to state why the committee desired to have the item in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas now state to the Chair that he did not withdraw his reservation of the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I merely said that if they would not make it themselves I would not make it.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not answer the inquiry of the Chair. The Chair wants to know whether the gentleman withdrew it?

Mr. BLANTON. That intimates that I was going to do it, but I did not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Texas withdraw his reservation?

Mr. BLANTON. I did not in that language. The reporter's notes will show what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has reserved the point of order. Does the gentleman now make it?

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then I renew the point of order and make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] makes the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that comes too late. I think the language of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] plainly indicated that he had withdrawn his point of order, and that if the gentleman had said nothing further the Chairman would have gone ahead and put the question upon this amendment. The Chair would not have asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] whether or not he had withdrawn his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole must be governed largely by the good faith of the individual Members on the floor. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did not intend to withdraw his reservation, and he now says that he did not, the Chair must take his word for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. I want to be quoted correctly. I said that I had not done so, but I intended to do it.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask to have the record read where the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made the statement indicating to me and I think to the gentlemen of the House generally that he withdrew his point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] states it exactly as he said it. The gentleman from Texas pleased me very greatly by what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is reasonably clear on this. The Chair may be wrong about it, but the Chair will entertain the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. Is there anything to be said on the point of order?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the Chair hear me for a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the Chair sustains the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not passed on the point of order.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the point of order comes too late, inasmuch as the Chair seems to base his ruling on what he understood to be the language of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that he intended to withdraw his point of order. The gentleman from Texas, as I recall his language, said that he would not make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I said.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And a proper construction of the words "would not make" certainly is that he withdrew it. One need not use the word "withdraw" in order to inform the Chair that a point of order has been withdrawn. If a gentleman rises and states "I will not make it," or "I would not make it," he has stated in positive language a withdrawal of the point of order, even though he may not use the word "withdraw." The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is entirely correct in that after that language was used by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], there was discussion of this matter by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], and, of course, it comes too late now for some one else to rise and make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is having the Reporter make a transcript of the particular language of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS. I call attention to the fact that after the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] had said that he would not make the point of order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] had really given up the floor and started to take his seat. When the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] attracted his attention, he began to again discuss the subject.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is incorrect in that statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had asked for five additional minutes and the committee had granted it. The whole discussion had proceeded under the reservation of the point of order, which, under the custom of the House, proceeds until the one discussing it has finished. Then the point of order is either made or withdrawn. I had fully intended all along to make the point of order if my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did not, but I did not think there was any advantage in making two reservations, and when he announced that he would not make the point of order I think I had the right to assume that at the conclusion of the discussion by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], Mr. BLANTON would announce his withdrawal of the point of order and that I would then renew it. But I did not think it was necessary to do that until the gentleman from Pennsylvania had concluded his remarks.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TILSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Smoot, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, an amendment already has been adopted that was not in order, to which no point of order was made, including in this bill this very thing, and now, having adopted an amendment which is out of order, would it not make this amendment in order, because it includes the Naval Militia. If it comes to that, we will argue it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is the parliamentary situation: I reserved the point of order. That is for the benefit of every member of the committee, under our rules. That reservation stands, of course, until it is definitely withdrawn. Debate ensued, and after debate I stated that if the committee would not protect their own bill themselves, I would not make the point of order. After I said that any one of the 35 members of the committee or any other Member of the House could have risen and made the point of order, and all Members in the House could have made it. The reservation, however, stood until some one made the point of order or it was withdrawn. Of course, I expected to withdraw the reservation, and, so far as I was concerned, it was a closed incident. There is no question about that; but, as a matter of fact, I did not do it. I intended to do it, but I did not do it, and my reservation inured to the benefit of every man on this floor, each of whom had just as much interest and rights in my reservation as I did myself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman did not intend at some subsequent time to get up formally and withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I expected then and there to drop the whole fight, so far as I was concerned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is what I thought.

Mr. BLANTON. But, as a matter of fact, I did not withdraw the reservation, although I stated positively I would not make the point of order; but the rules of the House under which we proceed are more important than the present expediency of any question.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman from Texas this question as his intention of whether he intended to rise formally and say, "I withdraw the reservation," and frankly he declared he had no such intention; that so far as he was concerned he was through with the matter. I submit, had he said nothing the Chair would never have ruled on that reservation. The Chair certainly believed the gentleman from Texas believed he was through with the discussion on the point of order, and there is nothing else for him to do or the Chair to do. Debate ensued before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] made the point of order.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, debate was proceeding at the time. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did not as a matter of procedure withdraw the point of order, but in the colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] he said that if the committee did not make it, he would not. I did not know but what some member of the committee would feel constrained to make the point of order at the conclusion of the discussion by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], and I did not consider it necessary for me to rise and reserve the point of order again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair, of course, believed that he heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] make the remark that it was his purpose to withdraw the reservation of the point of order, and as soon as the Chair announced that was his belief the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] interposed and said that he did not want his language misunderstood, that all he said was he would not make the point of order. Now, the Chair has had the Reporter make him a rough transcript of this matter, and this is what happened: Mr. BUTLER was on the floor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and in the middle of his five-minute extension that was granted him by the committee he yielded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to ask him a question, and some discussion ensued, in the course of which Mr. BLANTON said:

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to say this to the gentleman: If the members of this Appropriation Committee can not protect this bill and keep this legislation out, I am not going to make a point of order against my old friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad of that.

And then offered some other observations. What the gentleman from Texas said, that he was not going to make the point of order, might be construed two ways. It might be that he was announcing that he withdrew his reservation; but he did not say that. He said, "I am not going to make it," which might be interpreted that he would not make it at the expiration of the five minutes granted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, the Chair thought as the majority of the committee seems to feel on this matter, but irrespective of what the Chair thinks, the Chair must take a gentleman's statement on the floor of the House in stating his own express intentions, and the Chair thinks he is right in recognizing the point of order of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] if he will not withhold—

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will withhold.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair. With the utmost respect for the fairness of the Chair, I appeal from his decision, and let us understand right here what the English language means.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] made a point of order that the point of order was too late, and the Chair supposes it is on that point of order by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] that this matter comes up and on which the Chair overruled the point of order, and from that decision the gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals.

Mr. BUTLER. I appeal, and it is the first time I have ever done it in 27 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of sustaining the decision of the Chair will rise and stand until counted.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 27.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us argue the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. May I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] if he will withhold the point?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will withhold the point of order?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me suggest this: The first amendment offered by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was not objected to. It was adopted by the committee and inserted on page 13, line 2—the words "and Naval Militia." I submit to the gentleman that we have already put into the bill the organization of the Naval Militia, to which the language defining more particularly what shall be done pertains. It leaves the matter in a rather awkward state. I will say to the Chair that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania saves money rather than adds an additional burden. It maintains these men as a part of the Naval Reserve, and it is to the direct advantage of the Government. There is no duplication of pay. We have checked that up thoroughly. The only ones who would be paid are one or two on the governor's staff, and they are not paid because they are members of the militia but because they are members of the governor's staff.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Why does not the Committee on Naval Affairs bring in legislation to make it in order, if this is a saving?

Mr. FRENCH. Until two years ago the Committee on Naval Affairs was the appropriating committee which prepared and brought in the naval appropriation bill, and as was the custom then the legislative committees brought in items year after year that were not supported by legislation. They did not have authority in law, but it was concurred in because it was done by the legislative committee, and no objection was made. The Naval Committee has had this item before it for a year, and the chairman of the committee has just told us that he hopes before the expiration of another year to have an adequate bill reported covering the matter.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Two years is a good long time, and I am not convinced that this amendment would work any economy for the Government, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania care to be heard?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Chair would care to hear me I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know, in my ignorance, whether I shall be able to make the Chair understand me. This committee has already adopted one amendment that is out of order, in my opinion. This other amendment relates to the same subject, and under the rules a point of order can not be made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no doubt in the world but that it is legislation. That is the reason why I offered it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL WAR COLLEGE, RHODE ISLAND.

For maintenance of the Naval War College on Coasters Harbor Island, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle to be used only for official purposes; and care of ground for same $91,800; services of a professor of international law, $2,000; services of civilian lectures, rendered at the War College, $1,200; care and preservation of the library, including the purchase, binding, and repair of books of reference and periodicals, $5,000; in all, $100,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEGG. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. What happened with respect to this Naval War College on Coasters Harbor Island that requires an increased appropriation of $10,600 this year, and at the Naval War College here, with an increased appropriation of over $11,000? I put the inquiry in order to know what is being done or contemplated this year that is going to cost that much more money at each of these war colleges.

Mr. FRENCH. The Navy Department believes that it is desirable to maintain this War College just as the War Department maintains an Army War College, in order that men who are especially interested in various lines of study pertaining to the Navy may have a place to go and accept a detail for a year and do intensive studying. And especially it has to do with the larger aspects of the movements of a fleet and the operations of the Navy, with strategy and all that sort of thing. Then the reason why we are giving a little less than $11,000 this year, more than they had last year, is because the department feels that a somewhat larger enrollment would be desirable at this time. We have 79 officers who are doing this work at that college. The desire of the department is to increase that up to 100, having a junior college for junior members, and a senior college for senior members, with probably 50 enrolled in each. The department asked us for $130,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The committee thought we would not be justified in making a large appropriation or to extend it beyond two years. We thought this might apply to the senior school.

Mr. FRENCH. The department, as I say, asked for $130,000, and in harmony with what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has suggested, we withheld the larger part that was recommended and provided for an increase of approximately $11,000. Let me mention this also as one of the functions performed at that college. There is a correspondence course maintained by officers of the Navy, whether on shore or sea duty, that is of tremendous value in keeping the officers abreast of the times and fit, and that work finds its center and supervision at the War College.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Navy Department.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have the chairman of the committee tell me why it is necessary to raise any salaries at these homes and increase the number of employees until they have increased the expense of the operation of this Naval Home by $32,000, in round numbers, this year. And I want to know if that is the policy all the way through, and if that is the way we expect to economize?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman first that, as I recall it, the salary increases amount to only $1,000, and the other items going to make up the increase account for the expansion. Let me say also that this money is not an appropriation from the Treasury, but it is from the fund that is built up by the institution itself and those who go there.

Mr. BEGG. These expenses are met out of the pension fund?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. The demand for the better care and comfort of those who are enjoying that as a home seems to require that they receive the little extra attention that the Navy Department felt should be accorded them out of moneys furnished by this pension fund, and the committee concurred in that thought on the part of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For apparatus and instruments and for repairs of the same, $2,500.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is no last word, so I move to strike out some figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last word and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this morning I received some very valuable information from a sea-going Member of the House. I do not know much about naval affairs, so I asked for information at the hands of one who knew how to give it; he did give it, too, and I owe my thanks to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Now, I have some further information to request of Members of the House, and any of you may answer who are capable. You know I am rather new here, and I want to know the way of procedure, and I always want to be within the lines of the right and to see that I shall never transgress any of the rules of propriety.

Several of you have told me that it would be very untoward on my part if I should ever speak the name of a Senator of the Nation, or if I should ever refer in debate here to the action of the Senate on any pending matter. Well, taking your advice, I have consistently and religiously refrained. But in this morning's newspaper I behold the portrait of one whom I greatly love, the portrait of the titular head of this House, and I see him quoted in the newspaper—his exact words being quoted—and a statement is made wherein he took the hide off of the Senate over here, hung it up on the barn door, and threw brickbats at it. [Laughter and applause.] I do not know but what I indorse a good deal of the throwing. [Laughter.]

But what I want to know now is this: Am I to follow the precedent laid down by the titular head of this House, or am I to follow the admonition given to me by its worthy membership generally?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Speaker was perfectly safe. He was away off up in Boston, Mass.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The rule to which the gentleman's attention has been called only applies to statements made in this Chamber. Any Member of this body is at liberty to say what he pleases about the other legislative body in a public place, but not in this Chamber. So there is the distinction.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman for his information.

Mr. DENISON. I thought the gentleman ought to have that information, as he apparently does not have it, and does not understand the distinction, which is a very material distinction.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Again I give my thanks. I am seeking information. [Laughter.] Then I take it it will be all right for me to step outside the sacred precincts of this House and give my own professional, private, and public opinion of any Senator all the way from Florida to Washington—Washington State, I mean.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. The gentleman will not have to go that far. If he will just go back here and tell it secretly, so it will not be heard, he can say anything he wants to about a Senator.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I may say it secretly, and I will still be within the lines of propriety? Why, only yesterday, or day before, Mr. Chairman, the body over at the other end of this Capitol committed an awful crime in my eyes, and I wanted to speak about it, but a good friend of mine pulled my sleeve and said it would not be within the proprieties. I really did want to express my opinion about a Senate over there which would vote to confirm a colored brother in a high public office down in New Orleans. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENGINEERING.

ENGINEERING.

For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, auxiliary machinery, and boilers of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats, distilling and refrigerating apparatus; repairs, preservation, and renovals of electric interior and exterior signal communications and all electrical appliances of whatsoever nature on board naval vessels, except range finders, battle order and range transmitters and indicators, and motors and their controlling apparatus used to operate machinery belonging to other bureaus; searchlights and fire-control equipments for antiaircraft defense at shore stations; maintenance and operation of coast signal service; equipage, supplies, and materials under the cognizance of the bureau required for the maintenance and operation of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats; care, custody, and operation of the naval petroleum reserves; purchase, installation, repair, and preservation of machinery, tools, and appliances in navy yards and stations, pay of classified field force under the bureau; incidental expenses for naval vessels, navy yards and stations, inspectors' offices, the engineering experiment station, such as photographing, technical books and periodicals, stationery, and instruments; instruments and apparatus, supplies, and technical books and periodicals necessary to carry on experimental and research work in radiotelegraphy at the naval radio laboratory; in all, $18,012,300, of which $2,562,300 shall be available immediately, and not less than $600,000 of the amount last named shall be available for developing and testing submarine motive power under actual service conditions: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of United States inspectors of machinery and engineering material for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, shall not exceed $1,475,000: Provided further, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for maintaining, other than in a decommissioned status, more than four cargo ships, two transports, and one ammunition ship, unless, in case of emergency, the President should otherwise direct.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment, page 21, lines 4 and 5, strike out "other than in a decommissioned status," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in commission, exclusive of vessels of other types."

Mr. FRENCH. The language I have sent to the Clerk's desk is calculated to clear up an ambiguity in the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am making this motion at this time in order to direct the attention of this committee to an item of $600,000 here appropriated for the purpose of experimental work on motive power for submarines under service conditions. I have no particular objection to the experiment. My objection lies in the fact that the committee has not gone as far as some experts think it should go in the matter of submarine preparation.

The disarmament conference made no provision for the limitation on the number of submarines that might be constructed by any of the powers. That conference did engage in the question of restricting the conduct of submarine warfare, with the result that a humane treaty was drawn, limiting the use of this type of war craft to something like humane purposes in time of war. Immediately after the conference adjourned the Japanese engaged upon a building program whereby they were to have in course of time 22 fleet type submarines. We in 1916 authorized by the naval act of August 23, the building of nine fleet type submarines, and three of those submarines are in the course of construction.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If I understand correctly, we now have three fleet submarines, but they are not successful and are out of commission. The purpose of this $600,000 is to see if by some investigation they can not overcome that difficulty and build submarines that will be efficient.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I realize that that is the purpose of this provision. Now we have three fleet type submarines, as the gentleman from Texas says. They are known as T-boats. They were originally experimental propositions, and it is proposed to take this $600,000, plus a German engine that we bought from the British, and put it in one of the hulls of these decommissioned T-type vessels. The T types were always experimental. The T-type hull is not a perfect hull, I understand from the naval experts, and I think, and I honestly believe from what I have heard from the Navy Department, that this experiment is foredoomed to failure.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman will agree, I suppose, that we ought not to go ahead building these fleet submarines until we do perfect one that will work. We ought not to waste that money.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I understand, first of all, from the Navy Department that they have perfected an engine and that they are satisfied with the engine they have. It is along the same lines as this engine they propose to use in this old hull of the T type. The Navy experts are satisfied they can do that. The President of the United States has called upon this Congress to appropriate for submarines, for mine-laying submarines, and the distinguished Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the very capable Assistant Secretary from my State, has appeared before the committee and requested mine-laying submarines.

Gentlemen, it is a serious proposition, when one of the powers that attended the conference, immediately after the conference was over, violated absolutely the spirit of the conference in relation particularly to ratios, and went back home and started to erect 22 submarines of a large cruising radius that are a direct menace and a direct threat to this country. I think we should do something more than experiment. By the experiment we may find we will get something better than what we have, and I say to you gentlemen that while we are experimenting let us build something just as good as anybody else has.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. In the matter of submarines is it not a fact that we are superior to Great Britain but decidedly inferior to Japan?

Mr. BLACK of New York. That is about the situation. The experiments may work out something constructive, and we may learn something from them. I have no particular objection to going ahead with the experiments, although I do believe they are foredoomed to failure. But we want something more than experiments. This country is not going to be protected by any experiment. We are going to be protected by boats. The report of the subcommittee says that our submarines are not inferior to any submarines, and I say to you, if our submarines are not inferior to other submarines, then let us go ahead and build something just as good as anything the other fellow has.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

APPROPRIATIONS—INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 5078), which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist upon its disagreement and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the House insist upon its disagreement and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees:

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. CARTER.

APPROPRIATIONS—NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the statements that have just been made by my colleague from New York [Mr. BLACK] deserve this attention: First, I do not believe that the gentleman is accurate when he charges another power signing the limitation of armament treaty with violating the spirit of the treaty. As a matter of fact, when he refers to the 22 submarines that Japan is building, those submarines are in lieu of 46 smaller submarines which had been projected and which had been voted prior to the meeting of the conference. It is my judgment that the great nation of Japan is striving to live up to the letter and the spirit of the compact.

Let me make this further observation. In providing for the experiment to be carried on in a large fleet-going submarine type of ship, your committee had the advice of the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering of the Navy Department, and it is his judgment that if an engine can be found to function adequately in a ship of the submarine type, for which we now have a hull, it will be adequate for the fleet submarine type that is in the minds of officers of the Navy.

We believe it is wise to proceed along these lines rather than to proceed by way of appropriating millions of dollars for the laying down of additional fleet submarines when we do not have at this time a type of engine that will meet the situation.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Further than that, there are three fleet submarines to-day being built at Portsmouth, and they are about 45 to 65 per cent completed. We do not know for sure that we have types of engine that will be adequate to the situation there, although we believe and we hope we have.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WATKINS. The gentleman will admit, I believe, that the Armament Conference did not limit the building of cruisers and that Japan since that conference is building 25 cruisers of 7,500 to 10,000 tons each.

Mr. FRENCH. A good many ships were being built by the various nations, including the United States, at the time the conference was held. Japan was building a limited number. At this present moment we are building, as I recall, 30 or 31 ships that were laid down before the conference. Japan, however, in the light cruiser line is building four of 10,000 tons that are substituted for four of 8,000 tons that had been projected before the conference. She is building four others of 7,500 tons in lieu of five of 5,570 tons which had been voted for prior to the conference.

Mr. WATKINS. And some of those are of the first class instead of the second class, are they not?

Mr. FRENCH. Probably so. I would say that her building program has been reduced rather than increased. Since the conference was held her new ships which she had voted to build and upon which she had begun construction have been reduced from approximately 51 or 52 in number to 37.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does not the gentleman think that the elaborate program of Japan for fleet submarines seriously affects the relative strength of her navy and ours?

Mr. FRENCH. The addition of any ships of any type to any navy modifies, of course, to that extent; but the committee—and, I would say, speaking for myself as chairman—believes that there is not the slightest occasion for our feeling apprehensive because of the activities of any other nation.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The gentleman, of course, realizes that the President of the United States when he delivered his message here felt a little apprehensive, that the Budget Bureau must have felt apprehensive when it suggested the appropriation for three additional submarines, and that the experts in the Navy Department must have felt apprehensive when they suggested the appropriation. I think, also, the chairman should bear in mind the fact that the Japanese are not building submarines of great cruising capacity for purely defensive purposes in and about Japan; and in view of the fact that our experts have testified before the gentleman's committee that they have a satisfactory engine which they can install in the V type of submarine, and that, moreover, we need mine-laying submarines, surely the gentleman thinks that it is within the province of this Congress to appropriate along those lines, so that we can do as much as possible in our way with our greater resources to meet the naval competition of Japan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF VESSELS.

For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank and wind tunnel; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy yards, inspectors' offices, such as photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified field force under the bureau; for hemp, wire, iron, and other materials or the manufacture of cordage, anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; specifications for purchase thereof shall be so prepared as shall give fair and free competition; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, hammocks, and other work; interior appliances and tools for manufacturing purposes in navy yards and naval stations; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; naval signals and apparatus, other than electric, namely, signals, lights, lanterns, running lights, and lamps, and their appendages for general use on board ship for illuminating purposes, and oil and candles used in connection therewith; bunting and other materials for making and repairing flags of all kinds; for all permanent galley fittings and equipment; rugs, carpets, curtains, and hangings on board naval vessels, $15,605,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen (ship keepers), and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval constructors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and shall not exceed $1,630,000.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee if the committee can inform us whether this classified field force mentioned on page 22, line 9, will be paid in accordance with the classification act of 1923?

Mr. FRENCH. We are not able to give that information at this time. The classification as to the field force has not yet been accomplished. If it is not accomplished before the adjournment of the Congress, we hope that the matter will be taken care of through the passage of some legislation carrying appropriations that will make whatever adjustments may be necessary, if they are necessary.

Mr. STENGLE. In the event that we do not reach that former conclusion, upon what basis will the pay of this classified field force be reckoned?

Mr. FRENCH. I am not authorized at all to make any statement under that head. The matter is one that is not before the Congress now. I realize that to some extent in the naval force those in the field service have received compensation upon the basis of reports made by the wage adjustment board under the Navy, which has been adjudicating wages and salaries at different navy yards and establishments.

Mr. STENGLE. It will be in accordance with the wage board action, then.

Mr. FRENCH. It may, and it may not. I think as to those field employees a different policy has been applied, possibly without the intention of Congress, than has been applied to the field employees of other departments. I doubt if Congress intended that the wage board should fix the compensation of classified employees in the field service. That question is one that will need to have the attention of the committee at a later time. It is not now before the subcommittee that reported this bill, and all I can say is that it is a matter for future hearing.

Mr. STENGLE. The gentleman can not give the information?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES.

For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships, for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for technical books; for machinery and machine tools; for maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; not to exceed $10,000 for minor improvements to buildings, grounds, and appurtenances, and at a cost not to exceed $750 for any single project; for the maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight and passenger carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations, and for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots, $9,000,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, shall not exceed $900,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 24, line 4, strike out the word "and," the comma preceding it, and insert a semicolon in lieu thereof; and in line 7 strike out "$9,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and for care and operation of schools built at ordnance stations pursuant to authority contained in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to provide housing facilities for war needs,' approved May 10, 1918, $9,025,000."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the point of order is well taken. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order and be patient for a few minutes?

Mr. BEGG. I reserve the point of order just as long as the gentleman desires.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for one of our colleagues in the House who is away sick, and I do not know when he will return. The amendment is clearly out of order, but so that the House may not think that we are endeavoring to do what we should not do, let me make this little explanation. Below here at a point called Dahlgren, during the war there was built for the use of the service a number of houses and a school.

The same occurred in West Virginia, and there is no place for these children to go to school. I have asked to have it inserted here. I think it is a good thing to have accommodations for these children to go to school. There are two things I have never made any contest against; one is in regard to public schools and the other churches. If it is the wisdom of the House that these children shall have no place to go to school, that is for the House to determine. One side of it is water and the other side they can not get out, and unless this appropriation is made here and authority is given these little fellows will have no place to go to school. I have made this explanation; it is not within my congressional district, but it is within my promise to offer this amendment on account of the gentleman's absence on account of sickness. I admit it is out of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, when the matter was first brought to the attention of our committee we felt that it was probably out of order; and as it came before the committee it seemed to carry such provisions as might be offered in support of a school adjacent to the Navy Yard at Mare Island or at Philadelphia or anywhere else in the country. The committee believed it would be a bad policy to carry any such authorization or appropriation in the bill. However, in the way in which this amendment is drafted that objection is overcome, for this reason: At the three places where the amendment would carry aid the schools are maintained in buildings upon reservations that are owned by the United States and upon which buildings have been constructed by the Government. Under the Housing Corporation these schools have been maintained for several years. There is no opportunity for taxation, because the Government owns the property. It occurs to me that there could be no objection to the plan proposed, because, other than these three institutions, there is no place in the Naval Establishment where any such request could be made of the Government for money in support of schools. Most of these children live in houses owned by the Government; and, as I said, they can not be taxed, and it seems to be desirable that a way could be found, without establishing a precedent that would be unfortunate, to care for these children. In the District of Columbia the Government bears 40 per cent of the expenses for school and for other purposes. Why? Because the Government owns approximately 40 per cent of properties that can not be taxed. So at these three naval establishments the Government owns the land, the school buildings, the residences which it rents to employees, and in justice to the children we should find a way for them to go to school.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes to speak on this subject. I understand the point of order has been reserved. It first particularly applies to Indian-head, Md., more than it does to Dahlgren or South Charleston. Dahlgren is just a recent activity. Just in the last two years Dahlgren has been established. If you remember, a couple of years ago I had an amendment passed to this appropriation bill that stated that none of these appropriations could be used at Dahlgren, Va. In other words, it passed the House and went to the Senate and the Senate committee threw it to one side, and the amendment, of course, was not effective over here, and they went on at Dahlgren. I think, however, that at Indian-head, where they have been in existence for so many years and where they paid a part of this rental of these houses owned by the Government or the Housing Committee, which went to the sustenance of the school, which has been done for years up to within the last year when, under the opinion of the Comptroller General, it was thrown out, it particularly applies. So far as I am concerned, I would really approve of this, so far as Indianhead is concerned, because they are entitled to it. They have lived there for years, and a part of the rental is given to keep up the schools. Now, the Government owns all of that land, which leaves them without any appropriation for their school.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order for a moment. I submit under the reservation that this item is clearly in order. Section 5 of the act of May 16, 1918, supra, as amended by the act of March 21, 1922 (42 Stat. 468), grants authority to care for, rent, operate, and sell such property as remains undisposed of. The Navy has been operating the schools in question since their completion, but the Comptroller General has raised the question as to whether or not the word "operate" as used in the law was intended to go beyond transportation and other facilities. He has signified that he will place no obstacle in the way of operating the schools during the remainder of the present school year, but that he would oppose their operation thereafter if specific authority of law were not in the meantime procured.

The Comptroller General, it would seem, is very technical. The school buildings are there, built in accordance with law, and certainly it was never intended that they should be shut down so long as a need existed to keep them in operation. All of the schools are now attended, and there are no public schools adjacent to these reservations. At Indianhead the distance is more than 5 miles. The law gives authority to care for and operate such property, and such property includes general community utilities, which was construed to include school buildings.

The expenditures made during 1923 on account of these schools ran as follows: Indianhead, $15,700; Dahlgren, $2,499.78; South Charleston, $7,318.33; total, $25,518.11.

Mr. FRENCH. May I ask the gentleman a question? The Comptroller General held, I understand, it would be necessary to obtain authority before the appropriation could be approved by him.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to the gentleman the Comptroller General was in doubt entirely on the technical question. The Comptroller General is always very technical.

Mr. FRENCH. I know that.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. As the chairman of the committee well knows, it is his proper function to consider technicalities. My colleague from Maryland [Mr. MUND], a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, has always taken a very great interest in this matter. The reservation at Indianhead is in a rather unique situation. Unless we adopt this amendment we will deprive the little children of school facilities. But I submit that this is in order, and we can make the appropriation, and if the committee sees fit to continue this appropriation it is not out of order.

The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], has offered this amendment in the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. MUND], and I hope we shall have a chance to vote on it and pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, the merits of the proposition, to my mind, are not to be considered in passing an appropriation bill. Of course, under the rules of the House there are times when a practical emergency exists, where it seems almost essential that an appropriating committee should pass some legislation. And to digress just a minute, I believe I am safe in saying there are several places in the bill now where, if a man wanted to be technical, he can make a point of order on the ground that the committee has introduced legislation. But I do believe that on the question of the policy of the Government going into the educational field beyond the two special institutions for military purposes we ought to go slowly, and I can not conceive of an emergency existing down there that can not be remedied by the people already there.

Now, if in the past they have been charged a certain rental, and in that rental a certain amount of money was counted on for tuition, it is the easiest thing in the world to lower the rental and have them maintain their school. But to have the Government accept the responsibility of maintaining institutions of learning for children in the common-school field is going beyond the point I want to go; and it is because of that fact that I shall insist on the point of order—on the ground that it is clearly legislation unauthorized by law or by any previous act, even during war time.

The act that was passed during the war time authorizing the building of these communities may have been construed during the emergency of war time as carrying with it the authority to operate a school for the children living in that community incident to war work. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is a stretch of the imagination to apply that kind of an interpretation to a peace-time project in the face of the attitude of the Government ever since in trying to get out from under all these operations, and I think that the ruling of the comptroller puts it beyond all question.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I want to say to the gentleman that, as usual, he is very well informed on all these matters, and I agree with him on the general subject of the Government engaging in education; but I will say to the gentleman that our colleague from Maryland [Mr. MUND], who is necessarily absent from the House at this moment on account of personal illness, has made a very careful and deep study of this question, and I know that he feels that this is entirely necessary to that community. I am sure that if he were here he would be able to show in an abler way than I have attempted to do that this is entirely in order. He is deeply interested in the development of Indianhead and all that pertains to the welfare of that community. If the amendment is in order, as I am sure it is, I feel confident that the committee will pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the method suggested by the gentleman from Ohio for taking care of the situation, as against the method proposed by this amendment, would not be to the advantage of the Government or save the Government anything.

Mr. BEGG. It is not a question of the merits of the proposition at all, but it is a question of legislation, and unless the emergency is so great that great damage would be done, it seems to me it is out of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman went into figures, but I think he failed to demonstrate that the Government would lose anything under the method proposed as compared with the existing condition.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TEMPLE). The gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand a point of order was made.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not care to go further into the matter. I submit the question to the consideration of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Rule XXI, section 2, provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Two questions of fact arise: First, whether this appropriation has been authorized by law, or, second, if it has not been authorized by law, whether it is a public work already in progress?

The fact seems to be that these buildings were constructed under the housing act. Later, under the act of March 1, 1922, section 5, authority is given for caring for, renting, and operating such property as remains undisposed of under that act. Still later, by Executive order, this property was transferred from the Housing Corporation to the Navy Department. It seems to have been provided for by law, and it is a public work in progress. The amendment seems to be in order under that rule. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to the fact that part of this is not housing property? Part of these activities never belonged to the Housing Corporation. It was built during the war at Indianhead. The increase of its capacity was under the Housing Corporation, and perhaps that at Charleston, W. Va., was also under the Housing Corporation; but I am not sure as to that. But so far as the other activities are concerned they do not come under the Housing Corporation in any way whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the limitation in the language of the amendment itself:

For care and operation of schools built at ordnance stations pursuant to authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing facilities for war needs," approved May 16, 1918.

This amendment applies only to housing facilities provided under the housing act.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make this observation to the chairman of the committee, not criticizing the ruling of the Chair in the least. But under the ruling by the Chair, that community, under the guise of a Government operation not yet completed, can put a carnival on the street this summer for their entertainment, and you will be compelled to appropriate for it. I contend, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the fact that a man joins the military service, or joins the Army or Navy, does not in itself impose on the Government the duty of educating his children.

It carries no obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to educate his children in the common schools at public expense, and it is a wrong theory for the Navy branch itself.

I will submit again that the Navy Department officials, the officers and beneficiaries of this particular amendment, are not the poorest paid people in the world. Their salaries are commensurate and on a par with the salaries which are drawn in any other branch of the Government service, in any profession or in any business. Even the men in the enlisted service are drawing pay on a par with the same kind of work in other avenues of private life. If the Government is going to construe a war act in peace times as imposing an obligation on the Government to educate the children of the people in the service, I want to ask you where the cost of the military service of the United States is going to end? And I submit again that if the three sections of the service located at the three points affected are to be the recipients of a bounty from the Government in the way of free education for their children, with no taxes to pay, why are not the officers in the city of Washington exempt from taxation on their property when they live in homes of their own? It seems to me, my good friends of the committee, that in a time of peace and five years after the war this is the most outrageous step that has ever been taken by a committee.

Mr. MAPES. Is the gentleman appealing from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BEGG. No; I am arguing against the amendment.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Not now, because I would like to go one step further. Let us assume a case. That if the children of those in any other branch of the service in any other State of the United States should fall to be provided with educational facilities in the particular section of the State in which they happened to live, would it devolve upon the Government of the United States to go there and provide them with educational facilities so that their children could get an education? It seems to me it is not reasonable and outside all the policies of a free country. I will now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOWREY. I just wanted to express my surprise at the monumental ignorance of my friend the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I will now ask for extra time. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOWREY. I thought the gentleman knew that only the sky is the limit in the right of this Congress to appropriate anything for education. We have even determined that we can appropriate money to one university here in Washington, if it suits our fancy. And we are now going on with other bills pertaining to education in which it is thoroughly established that there is no law against the right of the United States Congress to appropriate money for anything pertaining to education, and that there is no limit.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman may express some surprise at the ignorance of the gentleman from Ohio on things educational, but I submit to the gentleman from Mississippi that both he and I received our education through another source entirely than as beneficiaries of the Government of the United States, and the tendency to which the gentleman refers is just the thing I am deploring. The great mass of the people of this country, not only in the military services but in some other sections of the United States, want to shift the responsibility for every single activity of the social human being onto the shoulders of the Government and have the Government pay for every single activity. I for one am against such a policy.

Mr. LOWREY. I am for the gentleman, and I just wanted to help him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can throw much light on this perplexing question or not, but I want to say that one of these institutions is located in my district. At South Charleston the citizens gave a quarter of a million dollars' worth of property for the purpose of establishing an armor-plate plant, where 85 children attended school last year. This money has been taken away from the local taxing power and has been given to the Government. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he thinks it is fair to compel the State of West Virginia and the county of Kanawha to give all this money to the United States Government or take it away from the local taxing power there and yet at the same time compel the board of education of that district to educate the children who live on this reservation?

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. I do.

Mr. BEGG. I will say no, of course not. But the people who live there ought to pay for tuition instead of paying taxes; if they are not taxed they ought to pay for tuition, the same as everybody else in the United States does outside of Annapolis and West Point.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Can the Government require them to pay tuition?

Mr. BEGG. What obligation does the Navy Department have for the education of any children of its employees?

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. I am asking that of the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. It should not do it down there. They ought to pay tuition to the local taxing unit there for the privilege of education.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. But they live on a Government reservation and that property is not taxed.

Mr. BEGG. Then, let them maintain their own schools and pay for them.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. I do not see how they can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LOWREY) there were—ayes 29, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, to be available until expended, $500,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to receive some information from the chairman in charge of this bill, and perhaps I can give some in return. I represent the sixth West Virginia district in which is located the Government armor-plate plant at South Charleston. Patriotic citizens of that section contributed approximately a quarter of a million dollars toward the purchase of the site for this plant, and it was erected at a cost of approximately $25,000,000 to the Government. Because of the naval armament limitation agreement this great plant is now closed, although the people who contributed to the purchase of the site had every reason to believe that it would be continued. In the bill now before us I find that on page 23 there is a provision for an appropriation for "the armament of ships." In this connection I would like for the chairman to explain what ships are in need of armament and what amount if any of armor plate there is on hand. On the next page of the bill there is provision for "armor piercing and other projectiles," and so on, "including the purchase of armor."

My understanding is that the steel mills of Pennsylvania that formerly supplied armor plate have torn out their forges, and that the Government-owned armor-plate plant is now the only plant in the country equipped for the manufacture of armor plate. This is a great plant, and if the Government is in need of armor plate, projectiles, ordnance, or anything that can be fabricated in it then we have every reason to hope and expect that it will be opened and operated for the purpose for which it was erected. I would like for the gentleman in charge of this bill to give me information concerning these things, confidently believing that if the bill means what it says, that if armor plate or armor-piercing projectiles are needed, that this great and costly plant can produce them as cheap, if not cheaper, than they could be produced at any other place.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say to the gentleman that the institution at Charleston, W. Va., has been maintained, and is being maintained now, on a closed-down basis, because it was thought that the amount of materials of the kind that could be produced there was such that economically the Government would not be justified in keeping up the institution. We are carrying in the present bill $100,000 for the maintenance and upkeep of the establishment. We are not maintaining it as a manufacturing and producing plant. The different items the gentleman refers to in the paragraph are such items as will be necessary for replacement purposes, largely upon ships that are now in the Navy. It is the ordinary language. In some instances no materials might need to be purchased at all in one year. In some instances it might be necessary that the articles enumerated would all need to be purchased, but the quantities that the Navy will need are not of such magnitude as to justify the department in continuing the plant in operation at Charleston.

Let me say that further on in the bill there is a provision that would require the Government to obtain materials, such as the gentleman has indicated, from plants of the Government, which it has and operates, provided they are able to produce them, and provided also they can be produced as economically as they can be produced elsewhere. It seems to me that after full consideration we were not justified in opening up this institution as a manufacturing plant.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Would the gentleman tell me what part of the bill that comes in?

Mr. FRENCH. On the last page of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the subject indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can give me any information as to the amount of the expense during the past year of running and operating the proving station at Dahlgren, Va.?

Mr. FRENCH. For maintenance and upkeep, $300,000.

Mr. STEPHENS. And what part of this appropriation will go to the operation and upkeep of the proving station there for the coming year?

Mr. FRENCH. The committee has recommended $320,000.

Mr. STEPHENS. Can the gentleman give me the number of civilian employees?

Mr. FRENCH. As I remember, it is between 90 and 95.

Mr. STEPHENS. At Dahlgren?

Mr. FRENCH. I find on turning to my notes that at present there are 96 nonclassified employees, 3 technical, and 10 clerical, making a total of 109.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman has not any information as to the number of large guns that were either ranged or proved there during the past year?

Mr. FRENCH. We do not have the data, I would say, in the particular form in which the gentleman has called for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPERIMENTS, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

For experimental work in the development of armor-piercing and other projectiles, fuses, powders, and high explosives, in connection with problems of the attack of armor with direct and inclined fire at various ranges, including the purchase of armor, powder, projectiles, and fuses for the above purposes and of all necessary material and labor in connection therewith; and for other experimental work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance, in connection with the development of ordnance material for the Navy, $195,000.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. I wish to get a little information, if possible, as to this $195,000 which has been carried in a number of the bills, and it seems to me carries some of the same items appropriated for in other paragraphs of the bill. I should like to ask the gentleman from Idaho to state just how the $195,000 is expended?

Mr. FRENCH. Perhaps I should say that in every bureau there is carried a certain amount for experimental work. This is an amount that we have carried in the Bureau of Ordnance for the specific purpose. Just how it will be expended, manifestly it is impossible to say, else probably we would not need to call it experimental. Let me say to the gentleman that, in my judgment, the experimental laboratory that the Navy Department is maintaining to-day at a cost of about $125,000 annually has, during the last few years, produced economies that have meant hundreds of thousands of dollars in saving to the Government and the development of devices and processes by which not only the Navy but the industries of the country have benefited immensely.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Chairman, some years ago it was my pleasure to spend a day or two at Indianhead. At the time they were experimenting on the 14-inch shell and the 14-inch armor plate. I presume that is carried in this item?

Mr. FRENCH. It may be that work would be done along that line from money carried in this item. I do not know. The gentleman will recall, turning to the torpedo, that when the World War began a torpedo would explode upon its first impact. Experiments were carried on because it was necessary. If a torpedo were to penetrate a vital part of a ship, to meet the protection that was afforded through a fender alongside of the ship, or through a blister that was put on the ship itself. A type of torpedo had to be developed that would explode not on the first impact but on the second. So it is that constantly devices are being developed as necessity arises.

Mr. KELLY. I was told at the time that the money came out of the experimental fund appropriation, and I notice in the testimony before the gentleman's committee that the admiral testified that at the present time they have something like 16,000 of those 16-inch projectiles, costing each $925, and that they have been declared excess. In carrying on these experiments, do they count the cost of the projectiles?

Mr. FRENCH. If it were possible for us to call a halt on the progress of all the nations, probably it would not be necessary for us to make experiments. Other nations are experimenting and developing different types of guns and projectiles and means of control, radio control and all that, and if the United States is to keep a Navy that will be able to meet the discoveries, devices, inventions, and appliances of other nations, we must keep abreast along experimental lines.

Mr. KELLY. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman. I am not objecting to the item. I wanted to know whether they were duplicating any items covering the cost of projectiles; whether they were figured in the experimental item at the same time.

Mr. FRENCH. No; that is not carried in the same item, nor would articles declared to be of no further value be lumped off as an item chargeable to experiments.

Mr. KELLY. That is not done under this?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders—pay $26,431,298, rental allowance $5,438,284, subsistence allowance $2,331,700, in all $35,201,282; officers on the retired list, $3,804,292; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $20,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $1,554,480; extra pay to men reenlisting after being honorably discharged, $1,527,225; interest on deposits by men, $7,500; pay of petty officers, seamen, landmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, $66,961,412; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court-martial, $198,000; and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; and apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $1,512,000; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors, and assistant directors—pay $713,680, rental allowance $31,200, subsistence allowance $22,740, in all $767,620; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps, $2,000; retainer pay and active-service pay and allowances of members of the Naval Reserve Force class 1 (Fleet Naval Reserve), $5,309,180; reimbursement for losses of property under act of October 6, 1917, $10,000; payment of six months' death gratuity, $125,000; in all, $117,000,000; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay of the Navy," shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law as "Pay of the Navy," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That additional commissioned, warrant, appointed, enlisted, and civilian personnel of the medical department of the Navy, required for the care of patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau in naval hospitals, may be employed in addition to the numbers appropriated for in this act: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipmen whose admission subsequent to February 9, 1924, would result in exceeding at any time an allowance of three midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; of one midshipman for Porto Rico, a native of the Island, appointed on nomination of the governor, and of one midshipman from Porto Rico, appointed on nomination of the Resident Commissioner; and of two midshipmen for the District of Columbia: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify in any way existing laws relative to the appointment of midshipmen at large or from the enlisted personnel of the naval service.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 26, line 2, before the amount, insert the following: "Extra pay for men for diving."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, that language is not intended to impose any additional burden upon the Treasury. Rather it is language offered for the purpose of simplifying accounting. These men are being paid extra for that work at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: On page 27, line 12, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"That nothing contained in section 11 of the act entitled 'An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Coast and Geodetic Survey and Public Health Service,' approved May 18, 1920, shall be construed as having repealed, amended, or modified the provision contained in the naval appropriation act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 891), reading as follows:

"Hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy or that of a cadet at the Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy or the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: This being offered as a separate paragraph, perfecting amendments to the paragraph just read will have to be offered before this is considered, will they not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it was offered as a part of the paragraph just read.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to so change the amendment that it will read to add the language after line 12, so as to make this a part of the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If it is offered as a new paragraph it would cut out perfecting amendment of the former paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now offered as additional language, as the Chair understands the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order for the reason that I have an amendment to the original paragraph, and I wanted to know whether, if we adopt a new paragraph, that would be tantamount to passing the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the change suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina, which will be made, without objection, does the gentleman still reserve the point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No. I withdraw it with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that he may modify his amendment in the manner suggested?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to correct a situation that has resulted from a decision of the Court of Claims. Under the law of 1912, in computing longevity, the service of a man at West Point or at Annapolis is not counted. In 1920 we passed what we called the bonus bill, which contained this language:

That hereafter longevity pay for officers in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be based on the total of all service in any or all of said services.

That language was written in conference. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLY] was the chairman of the House conferees. When the bill was reported, no man on the conference committee, no Member of this House, ever dreamed that the language would be construed as repealing the law of 1912, but an officer of the Army brought suit against the Government, claiming that under this language the act of 1912 was repealed, and that he was entitled to longevity pay based upon his four years of service at West Point. The Navy Department as a department has not placed such construction upon this language, nor has the Army. The officer acted only in his individual capacity in bringing the suit.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman knows, of course, a bill has been reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary authorizing an appropriation that may cost a million dollars to do the very thing the gentleman is seeking to stop.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I think that is an entirely different thing.

Mr. BEGG. It is in reference to longevity pay.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It includes an entirely different group of officers.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit, I do not wish to use any of the gentleman's time, but this bill is to cover the time served at Annapolis and West Point for men in computing their longevity pay.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Ohio does not get the point. That is to cover an entirely different group of officers and in no way applies to this situation.

Mr. BEGG. My understanding, and I have looked it over very carefully, is that it includes any officer who ever graduated from either one of those schools.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That does not affect this situation.

Mr. BEGG. I would ask the gentleman to be specific, because—

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will let me alone for a moment I will try to be. The result of the decision of the Court of Claims is that only those officers who were graduated between June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1922, would be affected. In 1922 we passed what is known as the service pay bill. Under that pay bill this provision was made:

That officers appointed after July 1, 1922, should not count for purposes of pay any other than active commission service.

So that as to those officers graduating after July 1, 1922, this specific prohibition would prevent their benefiting by the decision of the Court of Claims, but as to those who were graduated prior to that time and after the passage of the bonus bill in 1920, they would receive longevity for the time served at the Academy and West Point, and in addition, by reason of the provisions of the pay bill, that group of officers would benefit by having that four years computed in ascertaining the pay period to which they belong. So that for the rest of their service they would receive compensation in excess of that which the Congress intended they should receive. The Judge Advocate General of the Army asked for a rehearing of the case. The Judge Advocate General contended that the act of 1920 did not repeal the act of 1912, and for the purpose of making plain that the Congress did not intend to repeal it, I insert a letter from the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Kelley, who was the chairman of the conferees, and who states as follows:

LANSING, MICH., January 12, 1924.

HON. JAMES F. BYRNES, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNES: I WAS very glad to get your letter of December 29.

It was a distinct surprise to me to learn from your letter that the Court of Claims had rendered a decision which had the effect of restoring to graduates of the Military and Naval Academies who were appointed to those institutions subsequent to August 24, 1912, and March 4, 1923, respectively, constructive service for their time put in at the schools prior to graduation, the decision, I understand you to say, being based on the following provision contained in the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved May 18, 1920, viz:

"That hereafter longevity pay for officers in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be based on the total of all service in any or all of said services."

Not having a copy of the act at hand I must rely more or less upon memory, but, as you state, I had a large share in getting that measure through Congress, and from my recollection of the provisions of the law, its purposes and scope, I find it difficult to understand how the court could have handed down such a ruling. Taking the section of the law I have quoted singly the court could not very well have ruled other than as you say it has, but coupled with the other provisions of the law and the manifest conditions the law was drawn to remedy, I can assure you most emphatically that the decision revives a practice which I feel sure no one who had anything to do with handling the legislation ever dreamed of.

Wishing you a most happy and prosperous New Year,
Sincerely yours,

PATRICK H. KELLEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would ask for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But notwithstanding the chairman of the conference committee, who was responsible for the insertion of the language in question, expresses that view as to the intent of the legislative body, the court has said he meant something entirely different and that the language did repeal the act of 1912. The case may be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and if it sustains the decision of the Court of Claims the Government would have to pay this longevity and would have to pay it during the rest of the services of these officers, compensation in excess of that which we intended they should receive when we passed the pay bill and which would be manifestly unfair to all the other officers in the service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Supplementing the reason given in the letter of Governor Kelley the very fact that the Congress at no time had carried an appropriation to cover that additional service also shows that Congress at no time intended to place the construction upon it that the court has.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Alabama is right, and I should say this in justice to the service, that at the time the pay bill was framed representatives of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard appeared before that committee and no one of them ever asserted that the act of 1912 had been repealed, nor did they believe it. The pay bill was framed on the theory that the act of 1912 was in force, and as far as the Navy Department is concerned they did not ask any repeal of the act of 1912. As I said before, it is the act of an individual, but the act of this individual may result in costing the Government an enormous sum of money unless we place in this bill such a provision as I have offered.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. BEGG. I did not gather, it may be my fault, just what specific years the gentleman seeks to cover?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Nineteen hundred and twenty to 1922.

Mr. BEGG. It is the same class of service to which I referred.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But different groups.

Mr. STEPHENS. What would their status be?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Those who graduated from 1920 to 1922 their longevity pay would be based upon four years of service in Annapolis or West Point, in addition to their commissioned service. And in addition to that in fixing the pay group to which they belong they would be given four years at Annapolis or West Point, whereas officers graduating after July 1, 1922, would not be credited with their service at West Point or at Annapolis. Only those men who graduated between 1920 and 1922 would be affected, and this group of men would get four years' advantage over other officers in the service. Of course, it is possible that, while not involved in this case, if the act of 1912 is held to have been repealed all officers graduated between 1912 and 1922 may claim credit for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment may come in at the end of the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be offered to follow the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: At the end of the Byrnes amendment insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, of such boys to their enlistment."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, because I had practically started to speak on the amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. We thrashed that matter out before.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have a reference here, Mr. Chairman. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman wants to speak on the point of order, I make the point of order because it is in conflict with the rule providing that the limitation must not give affirmative direction, must not impose new duties, and must not be accompanied by any limitation on the appropriation; and, further, it does not come within the Holman rule.

The language in the naval bill is different from the language in the bill that was before the House a year ago in connection with the Army appropriation bill. The language under which the recruiting for the Navy is carried on is section 1418, and it reads as follows—

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman reading from now?

Mr. FRENCH. The Revised Statutes, section 1418, provides that—

Boys between the ages of 14 and 18 years may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall arrive at the age of 21 years; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, unless sooner discharged by direction of the President.

And section 1419, Revised Statutes, provides that—

Minors between the ages of 14 and 18 years shall not be enlisted for the naval service without the consent of their parents or guardians.

It has been held repeatedly by the courts and by the Attorney General that a minor of the age of 18 can enlist in the Navy without the consent of his parents or guardians.

The rule that I have just read, pertaining to the limitation that will be in order, provides that it must not impose new duties, and must be accompanied by language not limiting the appropriation, and must not give affirmative direction. I submit that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] violates and is contrary to the rules of the House in the particulars to which I have referred. And I would cite to the Chair the Hicks decision on the Army bill, in the RECORD of January 17, 1923, page 1907. I have here a copy of the decision of the Chairman at that time, in which his decision clearly sustains the point that I have made; in other words, that this language is not in order on the pending bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House in the last Congress hold that this amendment on the Army appropriation bill was a limitation and not legislation?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not recall that that point of order was made.

Mr. BLANTON. It was. We thrashed it out on the floor here last year.

Mr. JONES. The decision is found on page 586 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 64, part 1, December 16, 1922.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chairman is bound by that action until the committee sets it aside. The Chairman is bound to follow the precedent set, at least, in the preceding Congress.

Mr. FRENCH. I am of the opinion that the point was not finally passed upon; that it was withdrawn. But whatever may be the decision touching that particular case, the situation there is not on all fours with the present situation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Even if it were a new question, not decided by the House in the last Congress, I can tell the gentleman why it is in order now. It follows the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], which was legislation. It is legislation pure and simple, and nothing but legislation; and the gentleman in charge of this bill having permitted that legislative amendment to go on, this amendment is now in order.

Mr. FRENCH. That would not follow at all. This amendment does not refer to the amendment just adopted.

Mr. JONES. In this volume of the Record that I have here, after three pages of discussion, the Chairman made this ruling:

The Chairman is quite clear that the amendment is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. JONES. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is the ruling of the Chairman last year on practically this same amendment when it was offered to the naval appropriation bill. It is practically the same language. This is the amendment:

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be available for the pay of any enlisted man or officer who may be assigned to recruiting men or boys under 21 years of age without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor or minors.

The Chair uses this language:

The Chair is quite clear that it is a mere limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the Chairman at that time?

Mr. JONES. I think it was Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio. He says:

The Chair is quite clear that the amendment is a limitation, especially in view of recent rulings by several Chairmen.

This is the Chair's language. I recall that the first time the question was discussed in my hearing the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields] on the Army appropriation bill, depriving certain Army officers of pay if they did certain acts in social relations in regard to privates and other officers, and the Speaker sustained the amendment. The point of order was overruled.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. This decision, Mr. Chairman, was also made during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill on the 17th of January, 1923. An amendment offered by me to that bill and adopted was in identically the same language as this, except that in the present amendment I have added a few words. I will read it:

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians of such boys.

This amendment follows that language identically until it gets to the words "of such boys"—"consent of the parents or guardians of such boys, if any, to such enlistment." So there is no change, in effect, at all.

The history of this amendment is this: It was first offered last year to the naval appropriation bill; it was held in order on that bill, but was voted down. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has called the attention of the Chair to the ruling.

Since the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has called my attention to the ruling made by Mr. Hicks, I will say that if the Chair will read the debate he will find that Mr. Hicks admitted on the floor that my amendment was in order. He said it was clearly a limitation. He was opposed to it, but notwithstanding that fact he admitted that the amendment I offered to the naval appropriation bill in the last Congress was strictly a limitation. Later on it was so ruled as to practically the same language in the Army bill, and that language is in the Army bill to-day, having been adopted and become the law. It is now contained in the Army appropriation act of last year, on page 8 of the act, and this is the language:

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, of such boys, or unless the applicant furnishes a birth certificate or the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses showing such applicant for enlistment to be 21 years of age.

Now, if the Chair please, I want to present one phase of this matter, and that is the question of limitation. What is a limitation? A limitation is simply the limiting of an appropriation within the purposes for which it could be legally appropriated. Now, under the present law the Navy may enlist any boy from 18 to 21 years of age without the consent of his parents or with such consent.

We have a perfect right to appropriate all the money that is necessary for the enlistment of boys from 18 years up, including men, but in making an appropriation we have a right to limit its application if we desire. So a limitation is merely the expression of the congressional will in singling out some of the objects for which money can be legally appropriated, and we have a right to say that we will only appropriate for certain of those objects and exclude certain others. As Speaker Clark once very strikingly said, "If this House should see fit to do so it could provide in this bill that no funds appropriated under the bill should be paid to any red-headed man, and it would be legal." It might be ridiculous and absurd, but it illustrates the power we have in limiting an appropriation.

I do not care to take up any more time unless the Chair is still in doubt about this question. I think this amendment is clearly a limitation within the rulings of former Chairmen of the committee as well as the Speaker of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have read the pending amendment very carefully, and I wish the Chair would take his copy of it, if he has it before him, and follow me closely. Argument has been made along the line that boys should not be enlisted in the Navy without the consent of their parents, while there is nothing of that sort in the proposed amendment. The amendment provides that the money shall not be spent without the consent of the parents or guardians, if there be any. I invite the Chairman's attention to the language and ask that he take the time to read it. It reads:

That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, to such enlistment.

Reference has been made to the amendment contained in the Army appropriation bill of last year, and it was stated that this is exactly like that. That statement is not quite correct, because the amendment to the Army bill, which is now a part of the law, goes further than the proposed amendment.

The Constitution of the United States is the highest law in our Nation, but there are rights and privileges that the people of the Nation have not surrendered to the Government, and many of those are just as dear to the American people as are those they have surrendered. One of those is the well-established law of "public policy."

There could be nothing more impossible of execution, and there could be nothing that would go so far toward completely abolishing the Navy of our country, which would be such a disaster that it would be against public policy, as the submission of the question to the parents or the guardians of boys throughout the Nation, not whether or not boys under 21 should enlist but whether or not the money should be spent. So I take it that inasmuch as by this amendment—upon the theory of public policy—all national defense upon the waters would be destroyed, it would be against public policy.

To sustain a point of order on the ground that it would reduce enlistments is one thing, but an amendment that would absolutely abolish the Navy is subject to a point of order, because you could not get any enlistments at all, for the reason that the opinion of parents and guardians of boys throughout the country as to whether or not the proposed appropriation should be spent could never be ascertained.

Again, I wish to impress that the draftsman of the amendment intended to prevent the enlistment of boys under 21 years; but he actually has written that the money for conducting the bureau for enlistment could not be spent unless parents and guardians throughout the United States approved the spending, and a referendum must of necessity be submitted to them for their opinions.

Mr. FRENCH. May I call the Chair's attention to another decision that was made a little less than a year ago? It was made when the Army bill was pending and an amendment was offered providing that—no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stopwatch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee—

And so forth.

This question was argued and we have the decision upon the subject under the same rule we are considering to-day made by Mr. TILSON, of Connecticut, who is a recognized parliamentarian. Mr. TILSON said this, at page 1970 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 64, part 2.

Mr. BLANTON. On what date was that decision rendered?

Mr. FRENCH. January 18, 1923. The Chair said:

What is the effect of the language in the case before us? It is to prohibit the officials in charge of our arsenals and other governmental establishments from doing what they might legally do if this restriction were not in force. For instance, without a restriction of this character they could make a time study with a time-measuring device. If this amendment is added to the bill, as it has been for many years past, then it will not be permissible for these time studies to be made. It is clearly and admittedly the effect and purpose of the language.

It is not the province of the Chair to say whether the time studies ought or ought not to be made. That is a question for Congress to decide by appropriate legislation. It is the duty of the Chair to determine whether this amendment is a proper limitation on an appropriation bill under the rules of the House and to say whether the proposed language simply limits the appropriation or whether as a matter of fact it changes existing law, and is, therefore, legislation. The Chair believes that it is not a mere limitation on an appropriation but in effect is legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Has not a ruling on that same question been made since 1914 and exactly opposite?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, this is the latest ruling of the Chair, I would say, on that subject, and the gentleman will find that different Chairmen have construed it different ways.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Never but one Chairman. If the gentleman will go back the gentleman will find that since 1914 that same amendment has been carried in two or three appropriation bills and the point of order has been raised upon it in the case of practically every bill.

Mr. DOWELL. But even that does not apply to this case.

Mr. BLANTON. That does not apply. We will come to that after a while.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But the gentleman from Idaho is citing a rule and we are citing some others.

Mr. DOWELL. But the ruling does not apply to this case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to offer at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is governed by precedents. If we destroy precedents for the government of this body and for the government of the Chair we might as well not have any rules at all.

What are the precedents and what are the late precedents on this particular point of order? My colleague from Texas has called the attention of the Chair to the fact that this very amendment on the last naval bill was held in order with a point of order raised against it. That is an exact precedent applicable to this exact case and not upon something that is extraneous, such as was cited by the gentleman from Idaho. Then again on the last Army bill it was held in order and it was passed into the Army bill. It is now part of the present Army bill, and it was held in order and forms another recent precedent, and I want the parliamentarian to look up for the Chair the decision three years ago when this question was first raised against a similar amendment offered by Mr. Fields, of Kentucky. It was then held in order and then it was first passed in the Committee of the Whole and placed in the naval bill and was not taken out of the naval bill until we went back into the House. It has thus been held in order as a proper limitation on three different occasions and it was held in order when it was raised here in the committee on the last three occasions successively. What is the Chair going to do? Just dismiss all these precedents, disregard them and pay no attention to them? If he does we will be in a condition of chaos.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Idaho a question. Is there any appropriation in this particular paragraph for recruiting?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. FRENCH. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the item for recruiting is on page 9 of the bill, and the appropriation here would be for the payment of the salaries of officers who might be assigned, among their other duties, to that duty.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, even if there was no appropriation here for the purpose of recruiting—and there is in this bill—the fact that once being recruited, unless they received the consent of their parent or guardian they would not be permitted to enter the service, would be a limitation, and it seems to me this amendment is clearly in order. I can see no way whereby this could be construed as anything except a limitation upon this appropriation, and I believe that the amendment is clearly in order, and it has been so held. As was stated here, there is now on the Army bill precisely the same qualification and limitation upon the appropriation. It does not prevent recruiting, but it simply places a restriction upon it, requiring the approval of the guardian or parent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho made a general point of order against the amendment. What are the grounds of the gentleman's point?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the Chair please, the record shows very clearly what they were.

Mr. FRENCH. The essential ground was that it changed existing law.

Mr. DOWELL. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. It does not change the law.

Mr. FRENCH. And also imposes new duties and is in violation of the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Chair, is there any further point except that it changes existing law?

Mr. FRENCH. It imposes new duties, and also is a violation of the Holman rule.

Mr. DOWELL. No, Mr. Chairman; it has neither one of those effects. The law is not changed at all. It simply provides for recruiting under certain conditions and it permits enlistments over 18 years of age in the same way as without this amendment, except it places a restriction or limitation requiring consent of the parent or guardian.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is that this amendment would be legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Chair had concluded in an inspection of this bill that the appropriation for recruiting ought to be included under that portion of the bill in respect to the Bureau of Navigation, Transportation, and Recruiting.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the paragraph to which the Chair refers does not provide for the pay, but simply for the expenses of recruiting.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas had framed his amendment as the amendment was framed which was offered to the Army appropriation bill of 1922, which has been referred to, there would be no question about it. That is why the Chair asked the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to specify the grounds of his point of order. The gentleman from Idaho has not raised the point of germaneness by this point of order but he simply makes the point of order that the amendment is legislation.

Mr. FRENCH. If I am not too late, I want to include that in the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is probably a little late now on this point of order, after the Chair has partially announced his decision upon it; but as a matter of fact the amendment which was offered when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when he ruled said amendment in order, was not like this in the respect that it provided that no officer should receive any pay out of the appropriation for recruiting, while this amendment provides that no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for recruiting, the gentleman not including, in this amendment, the element of the pay of officers. This section deals only with the pay of officers.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And of enlisted men also.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not cover the expenses of recruiting.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It covers the pay of enlisted men engaged in recruiting.

The CHAIRMAN. It covers the expenses of men who do the recruiting and, therefore, it seem to the Chair it would not be germane to this particular section. That point, however, is not raised thus far and the question is whether this is a limitation or is not a limitation.

What does it do? It provides that no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parent or guardian. It provides that no part of this money shall be used for that purpose. Suppose the amendment had provided that no part of it should be used for the support of men or officers in Porto Rico or anywhere else. Suppose it provided that no part of the funds might be used in paying for certain specified services. Such amendments would be concededly proper limitations. The Congress can place any necessary limitations on the expenditure of money that it desires as long as it does not create new administrative duties on the part of executive officers. That is the rule, as the Chair understands it. What new duty does this create? The officer can do this or not do it as he pleases. He has no additional duties imposed upon him. Therefore, it seems to the Chair that under a reasonable construction it is a limitation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], while Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the naval bill for 1924 on December 16, 1922, in ruling on practically the same amendment, used the following language:

The Chair is quite clear that the amendment is a limitation, especially in view of recent rulings by several chairmen. I recall that the first time the question was discussed in my hearing an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields] on the Army appropriation bill, depriving certain Army officers of pay if they did certain acts in social relation with regard to privates and other officers, and the Speaker sustained the amendment. The point of order is overruled.

The Chair, both on principle and following precedent, overrules the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, if an amendment is offered that the Chair himself recognizes is not germane to a paragraph, as I think the Chair indicated a while ago, then the Chair raising that question should rule as though any other Member had made the point. The Chair does not lose his membership of this committee by virtue of being Chairman. However, I now raise the question, and no debate having occurred on the amendment itself, submit that it is not in order because it is not germane.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the gentleman can insist upon a point of order that he did not raise himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had that particular thing in mind.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I make the point of order now that the amendment is not germane to the pending paragraph. We have not discussed the merits of the amendment, and are still discussing points of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the Chair hold this point can be made now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees no reason why it can not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was made by the gentleman from Idaho and has been overruled.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I was on the floor asking for recognition to debate my amendment, and I was entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose any other Member on either side of the House should now rise and make another point of order. The query in the Chair's mind is whether such a point could be properly made at this time. The Chair has no preconceived ideas about that. If it is not in order, the Chair does not want to entertain it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have always been under the impression that when an amendment is read, if anybody had a point of order they either had to make it or reserve it. When the gentleman from Idaho made his point of order he made the point of order that he made and no more [laughter]—I said that purposely—and the Chair asked the gentleman if he had any other grounds to suggest, and the gentleman from Idaho, it occurred to me, would see what the Chair was trying to put into his mind, and that was that the amendment ought to go somewhere else in the bill, but he did not.

Mr. BLANTON. This was not a reservation, but a point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the Chair pleases, if the gentleman from Idaho, or anybody else on this floor, had an additional point of order, it was their duty, when the gentleman from Idaho failed to suggest the point, to get up and make the other point of order or reserve it, but no one did. If this kind of proceeding is going to go on, we can debate a thing for a day or two and some Member can make a point of order to-morrow or the next day; orderly procedure will be retarded.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair can settle this if he decides one thing: If a point of order is makable at any time before debate has started on an amendment. There has been no debate on the amendment. Regardless of where a man receives consideration to make the point of order he is entitled to make it, by decisions of the Chair. Now, let us suppose the gentleman from Idaho had not made this last point of order of germaneness. Suppose the gentleman from Ohio had intended to make it. I submit to the Chair there has not been an opportunity to make it until the Chair ruled on the other, and that the gentleman from Ohio would have lost none of his rights to have made that motion or that point until after debate was had or somebody recognized for debate; and I will make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety Members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6820 had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DOYLE, for 10 days, on account of important business.
To Mr. JACOBSTEIN, for one week, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the adjusted compensation bill.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I hate to do it, but I must object.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very highly important that this bill be finished by to-morrow night, and I hope there will not be any objection to meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 21, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

408. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request for $500,000 appropriation instead of $335,000 for the construction of a building for use as a supply depot for the Marine Corps at San Francisco, Calif., was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HUDSON: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 7239. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain funds to various Wisconsin-Pottawatomie Indians; without amendment (Rept. No. 331). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 7453. A bill to amend an act approved March 3, 1909, entitled "An act for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes"; without amendment (Rept. No. 332). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASTINGS: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 7913. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Creek Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 333). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCHALL: Committee on Flood Control. H. R. 8070. A bill authorizing preliminary examinations and surveys of sundry streams with a view to the control of their floods; without amendment (Rept. No. 334). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. GARNER of Texas: Resolution (H. Res. 228) providing that each Member of the House shall have five days to extend his remarks in the Record on H. R. 7959, the adjusted compensation bill; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WEFALD: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota urging construction of additional buildings and facilities at the Federal Leper Hospital in Carville, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota urging the immediate construction of a neuropsychiatric hospital at St. Cloud; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota urging the construction of a 500-bed tubercular hospital for the care of tubercular persons who served in the World War, in Minnesota; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GLATFELTER: A bill (H. R. 8095) granting an increase of pension to Magdalena King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES: A bill (H. R. 8096) for the relief of J. Frank Norfleet; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOGAN: A bill (H. R. 8097) for the relief of H. W. Hamlin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 8098) granting an increase of pension to Verrelle S. Willard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 8099) granting a pension to Mary E. Kunding; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 8100) for the relief of the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 8101) for the relief of Louis Martin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8102) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda Welch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8103) granting a pension to Joe Ann Dees; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8104) granting a pension to Malissa Blair; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 8105) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Morris; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8106) granting a pension to Mary E. Brittenham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8107) granting a pension to Elizabeth Palmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1914. By Mr. CONNERY: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of Lawrence, Mass., indorsing the Kelly-Edge bill calling for reclassification of salaries of post-office employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1915. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of Mrs. Idella Engel, secretary Woman's Club, Bad Axe, Mich., urging on behalf of her organization favorable consideration of the child labor amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1916. By Mr. FENN: Petition of the Società di M. S. Umberto Primo, of Hartford, Conn., protesting against the passage of the Johnson immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1917. Also, petition of Eddy-Glover Post, No. 6, American Legion, New Britain, Conn., favoring the adoption of House Joint Resolution 69, which provides that the Star Spangled Banner shall be recognized as our national anthem; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1918. Also, petition of citizens of Collinsville, Conn., in favor of the establishment of free shooting grounds and game refuges as provided in House bill 745; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1919. Also, petition of the Lions Club of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of the Winslow bill (H. R. 3243) with regard to the development of commercial aviation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1920. By Mr. HAWES: Petition of Board of Aldermen of St. Louis, Mo., urging an increase in salary for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1921. By Mr. HUDSON: Petition of the commission of the city of Royal Oak, Mich., favoring the passage of House bill 4123; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1922. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of Italian Medical Society, Buffalo, N. Y., opposing that part of the Johnson immigration bill that discriminates against immigration from southern Europe; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1923. Also, petition of members of Lodge Med. Narod. Zarta No. 405, S. N. P. J., opposing the Johnson immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1924. By Mr. O'SULLIVAN: Petition of the United Lithuanian organizations of Waterbury, Conn., protesting against the passage of the Johnson immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1925. By Mr. ROUSE: Petition of the McKinley Council, No. 18, Daughters of America, of Bellevue, Campbell County, Ky., in favor of the immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1926. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petitions of Lodge Glas Noroda No. 89, S. N. P. J., Midway, Pa.; Lodge Postonjska Jama No. 138, S. N. P. J., Canonsburg, Pa.; and Lodge No. 241, S. N. P. J., Slovan, Pa., protesting against certain proposals before the Congress of the United States regulating immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1927. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Boston Central Labor Union, favoring modification of the Volstead enforcement act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1928. By Mr. WEFALD: Petition of 17 farmers of Fanny Township, Polk County, Minn., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, providing for the relief of agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1929. Also, petition of 20 farmers of Arveson Township, Minn., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, providing for the relief of agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1930. Also, petition of 29 farmers of Good Hope Township, Minn., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill providing for the relief of agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1931. Also, petition of 24 farmers of Garden Township, Minn., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, providing for the relief of agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1932. Also, petition of 26 farmers of Lake Eunice Township, Minn., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, providing for the relief of agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1933. By Mr. WELSH: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, in re Senate bill 2576, as amended, approving the general purpose of said bill and petitions for its passage; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1934. By Mr. WHITE of Kansas: Papers to accompany House bill 8079, granting a pension to Thomas Colburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

1935. By Mr. YOUNG: Petition of E. A. Johnson, of Harvey, N. Dak., and 25 other rural mail carriers, urging the passage of legislation increasing their equipment allowance; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1936. Also, petition of 38 citizens of Homer, N. Dak., urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill for farm relief; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1937. Also, petition of North Dakota Retail Mercantile Association, urging reduction in first-class postage rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 21, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou knowest us altogether. Everything concerning our history is known to Thee. Our thoughts, our actions, are subject to Thy scrutiny. We would, therefore, walk circumspectly before Thee, so that in all we may think and say and do we shall be in harmony with Thy mind and will. Give us such an understanding of Thyself and of Thy purposes for us that in all the way of life we shall walk in harmony with Thy greatest direction. Be with us to-day. Give us light in our darkness, strength in our weakness, and vision of Thyself in our cloudiness. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 21, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WALTER E. EDGE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. EDGE thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson
Ball	Edge	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bayard	Ernst	Keyes	Shields
Borah	Fletcher	King	Shipstead
Brandeggee	Frazier	Ladd	Simmons
Broussard	George	Lodge	Smith
Bruce	Gerry	McKellar	Smoot
Bursum	Glass	McKinley	Spencer
Cameron	Gooding	McNary	Stephens
Capper	Hale	Mayfield	Wadsworth
Caraway	Harrel	Neely	Walsh, Mass.
Copeland	Harris	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Coxzens	Harrison	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Heflin	Pepper	Watson
Dale	Howell	Ralston	Weller
Dial	Johnson, Minn.	Reed, Mo.	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in a committee hearing.

Mr. WATSON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTIDGE] are absent on official business of the Senate, being engaged in a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PUBLICATION OF COTTON STATISTICS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2113) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton," approved July 22, 1912, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the effect of the House amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. It merely changes the title, making it brief and yet clear.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution of Riverton Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., of Riverton, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAPPER presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Spearville Lodge, No. 388, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Spearville, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation suspending immigration for a period of five years, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from J. H. Steward, director of the Arkansas Service Bureau, at Little Rock, Ark., praying, on behalf of ex-service men of Arkansas, for a cash option in legislation providing adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented a petition, numerously signed, of sundry Chippewa Indians of the White Earth Reservation, of Mahanomen, Minn., praying for the passage of Senate resolution 34 (submitted by Mr. KING on December 10, 1923) instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate the controversy between the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota and the Government of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Minnesota School Board Association, at St. Paul, Minn., favoring the passage of the so-called McNary-Haugen bill, providing aid to agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Christoforo Colombo Society, of Duluth, Minn., protesting against the passage of the so-called Johnson selective immigration bill, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Ramsey County Central Committee of the American Legion, Department of Minnesota, protesting against the adoption of sections 7, 10, 13, and 18 of the second preliminary report of the Select Committee on Investigation of the United States Veterans' Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 2797) to authorize the payment of claims under the provisions of the so-called war minerals relief act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 292) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 668) to establish the Utah National Park in the State of Utah, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 294) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 667) granting to the State of Utah the Fort Duchesne Reservation for its use as a branch agricultural college, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 295) thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. WALSH of Montana, the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 308) to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

WHITE RIVER DAM, ARK.—DIXIE POWER CO.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2686) to authorize the Federal Power Commission to amend permit No. 1, project No. 1, issued to the Dixie Power Co., and I submit a report (No. 290) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the report.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Will the bill lead to any debate? If it will lead to no debate, I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. CARAWAY. It will not lead to any debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. May the bill first be read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Power Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed, on application made therefor by the Dixie Power Co., to amend preliminary permit No. 1, project No. 1, on the White River in Arkansas, issued on March 3, 1921, as amended by order of said commission on March 14, 1923, extending the expiration of said amended permit to March 1, 1924, so as to extend said permit as amended by authority of this act for 18 months from the approval of this act, such extension being desired and necessary in order to enable the permittee to prepare maps, plans, and estimates for incorporation in its application for license and to finance its project and to enable it to further test the river bed by core drilling to determine the most suitable foundation for its dam under said permit, and to enable it to comply with any other requirements of law and regulations of said power commission in making an application for a license.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARKING THE SITE OF CHARLES FORT, S. C.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back without amendment the bill (S. 1530) providing for the marking with an enduring monument the site of Charles Fort, S. C., and I submit a report (No. 291) thereon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the passage of the bill just reported by the Senator from Wyoming will be agreeable to the Members of the Senate, and I therefore ask unanimous consent, if it does not create debate, that it may be now considered.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the bill for which the Senator from South Carolina asks consideration, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of marking with an enduring monument the site of Charles Fort, on Parris Island, S. C., the site herein designated being the place where a fort was erected by a colony of Frenchmen, who settled at this point in the year 1662.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL OIL LAND LEASES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record, without reading, an editorial which appeared in the North American of Philadelphia of yesterday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record, without reading, an article which he has sent to the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and such an order will be made.

The editorial is as follows:

GETTING BACK TO THE LEASES.

Somewhere beneath the towering accumulation of charges countercharges, wild rumors, and sworn testimony concerning the multiple scandals in Washington there lies buried the immediate cause of the devastating avalanche—buried so deep that it has passed out of the memory of most citizens. In a vague fashion readers of the news are aware that all this turmoil, with its amazing revelations ranging from irrelevant improprieties to monumental corruption, had its origin in the leasing of public oil lands to private interests nearly three years ago. But few of them retain any clear idea of what the initial offense was. And their uncertainty of mind is increased by the persistence of some Republican statesmen and newspapers in echoing the defiant assertion of the accused men—that there is no real oil scandal at all, but that, on the contrary, the officials who signed away the Nation's resources were far-seeing patriots and the oil speculators who obtained control of the properties acted from motives of the purest altruism.

By no means are we overstating the case they present. An eminently respectable Republican newspaper, for example, recently derided the Senate investigating committee and charged that the diversion of the Navy's oil reserves was authorized by Congress at the solicitation of Secretary Daniels, of the Wilson administration.

"As to the terms of the leases," it went on; "Mr. Doheny makes them appear skillful bargains, yielding the country urgently needed and costly naval protection for no outlay of money. Was Mr. Denby after all a courageous defender of his country, who won oil tanks in Hawaii and a ready supply of oil the country round in place of oil below ground that outsiders were rapidly draining off?"

Secretary Fall, recipient of the $100,000 satchel from Doheny, has not yet had the hardihood to argue that in making the leases he performed an unselfish service to the Nation, but others concerned, including the donor of that costly piece of baggage, vehemently defend the transactions. "If I had it to do, I would do it all over again tomorrow," said Secretary Denby. "The leases were beneficial to the United States, and my action was as clean and patriotic as any other act of my life." Doheny says his leases "are the best the United States ever got," and asserts that the deal he made with Denby and Fall, by assuring to the Navy stores of oil, "saved the Pacific coast from attack." His explanation of the $100,000 payment to Fall is equally conclusive. "Any man," he declares, "who says I ever corrupted any public official is a liar."

The determined propaganda designed to minimize the corruption that has been exposed by contending that the oil leases of themselves were beneficial to the country is transparent enough. On the other hand, it is no more than just that the leases should be considered apart from any criminal taint they may have derived from the actions of those who made them. Unfortunately for the men accused and for their partisan apologists, such an examination exposes more clearly than ever the falsity of their pretensions. It shows that the leasing was wrong in conception, contrary to public policy and the judgment of all competent experts, illegal in execution, and immeasurably injurious in its terms to the interests of the United States.

The Roosevelt policy of conserving national resources foreshadowed the setting apart of petroleum-bearing lands for emergency use. In 1911 the construction of the first oil-burning battleships suggested to the Navy authorities that reserve supplies of fuel should be assured, and in the following year President Taft, under an act of Congress, withdrew from entry large areas of public lands in California, constituting naval oil reserves Nos. 1 and 2. In 1915 President Wilson set aside reserve No. 3, in the Teapot Dome district of Wyoming. The purpose was thus stated in the proceedings of the naval consulting board:

"It was the intention to hold these areas, and not utilize their oil content until the shortage of domestic production or the increased price of fuel rendered it advisable. These reserves were designed to serve as an assurance against the possibility of having a large fleet of exclusively oil-burning warships, with no oil available. At this time many students of the petroleum reserves of the United States had estimated that the supply in the ground would last only approximately 22 years."

That policy was reaffirmed in a report by Secretary Daniels to President Wilson in 1914, in which he wrote:

"I am of the opinion that the Navy should use its own oil lands, and ultimately produce, transport, refine, and store its own supply of oil, in order that the Navy may at all times be assured of an adequate and dependable supply of fuel oil at reasonable cost."

But the policy was to receive support so authoritative that its reversal by Denby and Fall stands out as an act of hardihood utterly indefensible. In 1915, when the World War was casting its shadow over this country, Secretary Daniels invited the great engineering societies of the United States to form a civilian naval consulting board. Thomas A. Edison became president of the board, which was made up of foremost representatives of the engineering professions—chemical, mathematical, civil, aeronautical, automotive, mining, electro-chemical, and mechanical—together with high officers of the Navy. This body spent nearly a year in studying the various problems in its field.

One of its main sections was a committee on fuel and fuel handling, which made an exhaustive investigation of the whole subject of naval fuel, and reported at sessions held in July and August, 1916. At these meetings there were present, besides the civilian engineers, the members of the naval fuel board and the ablest experts on oil problems in the whole country. The discussions covered every phase of the subject, and the conclusions reached were tested by delegating experts to make cruises on naval vessels. In December the final report was issued, with these precise and unequivocal findings:

"It is the unanimous opinion, therefore, of your committee that the requirements of national defense demand that the Nation hold with unassailable title reserves of oil land within its own borders, located with reference to economical transportation and containing sufficient oil to meet the requirements of our Navy for a period of not less than 50 years."

That was the judgment reached after months of minute inquiry by civilians representing every branch of American engineering, cooperating with the Engineering Bureau of the Navy. The passage of time, revealing the rapid depletion of the world's petroleum supplies, only added force to the authoritative conclusions. Yet within a month after the change of administration in 1921 Denby and Fall were busy upon the scheme of turning over the Navy's oil reserves in California to Doheny and the Wyoming reserve to Sinclair.

Denby's "clean and patriotic act" was committed in the face of urgent warnings. Admiral Griffin has testified as to his protests to Denby when he heard of the proposal to transfer the reserves to the keeping of Fall:

"I told him I hoped he would reconsider; that the Navy for 10 years had been fighting to retain this oil, and that if he turned the administration over to the Interior Department we might just as well say good-bye to our oil. I told him I did not agree with him that these were public lands; that I thought that after they had been set aside for the exclusive use of the Navy they were as much naval property as the navy yards."

Denby and his partisans join Doheny and his press agents in contending that the policy of turning over the Navy's oil reserves to private exploitation was initiated by Secretary Daniels, whereas in fact Daniels stood like granite against the intrigues of the speculators to get control of the deposits. The basis for the false pretense is that early in 1920 naval engineers reported that private wells on the borders of the Navy's lands were draining off some of the oil; as a result Daniels procured an amendment to the naval appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary to "conserve, develop, use, and operate" the reserves, "in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof."

Undoubtedly the authority here given was broad. Possibly it was broad enough to render technically legal the leases signed by Denby. But the plain intent was to "conserve" the supplies for the Navy, not to deliver them into the hands of private interests. One fact will show how this purpose was distorted for the benefit of Doheny and Sinclair. The Daniels amendment limited the Secretary to the expenditure of $500,000 out of the royalties from leases; the Denby-Fall deals provided that more than $100,000,000 worth of the oil received by the Government in royalties from the lessees should be expended for storage facilities constructed by them. In other words, the Navy Department was to spend $100,000,000 without authorization of Congress.

"My recommendation," says Daniels, "was to preserve and protect underground storage of oil, and only oil that otherwise would have been lost. Neither my recommendation nor the act of Congress justified the leases subsequently made. They have no warrant in law and are illegal spoliation of the naval reserves and a worse blow to the Navy than any enemy has ever struck."

But the interests that resent the exposure of corruption in the oil deals keep asking, What about the leases? Why not tell the public that Denby and Fall drove a shrewd bargain, inducing the oil interests to supply "costly naval protection for no outlay of money"? Well, let us look into this.

Under Sinclair's Teapot Dome lease the Government gets a royalty ranging from 12½ to 50 per cent, depending upon the production of the wells. The average is less than 17 per cent. But the Government does not get the royalty in oil. Sinclair gives for it oil certificates, which may be used in three different ways—first, in buying fuel oil from Sinclair, a barrel of fuel for a barrel of crude; second, in buying gasoline or other products from Sinclair at market prices; third, in paying Sinclair to construct steel storage tanks at the seaboard.

Now, it takes two barrels of oil to pay for one barrel of storage capacity, so that while getting 17 per cent of the Teapot Dome oil as royalty the Navy ultimately receives less than 6 per cent in oil, the rest being paid back to Sinclair for tanks to hold it. A similar arrangement was made with Doheny, who was to construct a huge storage plant in Hawaii, taking about two-thirds of the Navy's oil royalty in payment. In other words, the Denby-Fall leases provide that out of the reserves set apart for national defense the Navy would get between 5 and 6 per cent of the oil in the ground, plus storage tanks built by the oil interests without competitive bidding. If this is not sufficiently convincing as to the pure and profitable nature of the deal made for the Government by these two patriots, there are two additional facts—Fall received $100,000 in cash from Doheny, who blandly told the Senate committee, "We will be in bad luck if we do not get $100,000,000 profit."

But those who profess to believe that the leases were legal, honest, and advantageous to the Nation need not any longer pretend that those documents have not been adequately explained to the public. They are quite minutely analyzed in the bills filed by the Government in Federal courts at Cheyenne, Wyo., and Los Angeles, Calif., asking their cancellation upon grounds of fraud, corruption, and conspiracy.

The complaints set forth that President Harding's order transferring the Navy's oil reserves to Fall's custody was "invalid and illegal," procured by false representations from Fall. The Teapot Dome lease is declared "null and void," being "effected without authority in law"; likewise the contract for building tanks. It is charged that Fall and Sinclair "did combine, conspire, and confederate to defraud the United States" by leasing the lands "at an improper, inadequate, and fraudulent consideration."

The California leases and contracts are described as being illegal and void, the result of a corrupt deal by Fall and Doheny, who "conspired to defraud the United States," pursuant to which conspiracy Doheny paid Fall $100,000 "lawful money of the United States" as a "reward." It is charged that the proposals for the Hawaii storage plant were part of the conspiracy "to insure to defendant, to the great detriment and in fraud of the rights of the United States, any and all oil which might be found within said naval reserve." Wherefore orders are sought declaring all the agreements void and restoring the oil reserve to the Government.

Some astonishing miscalculations have been revealed by the uncovering of the oil scandals. But quite the most fantastic delusion is that afflicting those who, for partisan or even less creditable reasons, hope to gain something by turning the searchlight from the corruption in the diversion of the Navy's oil reserve to the leases themselves.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2888) for the relief of James H. Kelly; to the committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 2889) for the relief of John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Wills; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY (for Mr. McCormick):

A bill (S. 2890) for the relief of Dennis Sweeny; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 2891) for the relief of William Sands; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2892) granting an increase of pension to Anna Mapel (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 2893) providing for the erection of a monument over the grave of Patrick Gass, at Brooke Cemetery, Wellsburg, W. Va., a soldier of the War of 1812 and the last surviving member of the Lewis and Clarke expedition; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 2894) to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved May 18, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAMERON:

A bill (S. 2895) for the relief of W. P. Dalton; and

A bill (S. 2896) for the relief of Joseph B. Tanner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2897) to reinstate Charles McKee Krause as a captain in the Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2898) for the relief of William R. Bailey and Charles G. Dobbins; and

A bill (S. 2899) for the relief of the heirs of Frank Boddeker; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 2900) for the relief of E. C. Cook and others; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2901) granting an increase of pension to Ann E. McKinnon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to modify certain contracts entered into for the sale of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities intended for operation upon the New York State Barge Canal; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 103) authorizing expenditure of the Fort Peck 4 per cent fund now standing to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians of Montana in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, agreeably to the notice which I gave on yesterday, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7440, being the first deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7440) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may, as is usual, be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment—the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF—ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN FUND.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we have been trying to legislate in the Senate now for something over three months to aid agriculture in the United States. What the farmers of this country need is to be enabled to get a better price for what they produce. If they produce more than the domestic demand for consumption, Congress should aid them in exporting the surplus. Some time ago Senator STEPHENS, of Mississippi, and I introduced a bill, being Senate bill 2710, for the purpose of using $150,000,000 of the money in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian as a revolving fund with which to export raw agricultural products to Germany, Austria, and Hungary; but nothing is decided under the bill as to the rights of those claiming ownership of the fund.

The bill is strongly recommended by the Alien Property Custodian. It seems to me to be sound, and, if enacted, will accomplish the purpose which we have been laboring here to accomplish for three or four months past.

I notice in Commerce and Finance, a most influential publication, in the issue of March 12 a short article concerning the bill to which I refer, and I shall ask unanimous consent to have that article inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks. First, however, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a paragraph or two of the article, which appears at page 528 of the publication:

The proposal—

Referring to the bill which I have introduced—

The proposal is quite unlike that of the McNary-Haugen bill which contemplates the formation of a $200,000,000 corporation financed by the Government to buy farm products at a stated price and sell them abroad. The Dial-Lowrey bill is far sounder in principle, and if any of these bills are to pass, it or its magnificent prototype may with advantage be substituted for the entirely vicious McNary-Haugen measure, which would merely leave the Government holding a bag full of unprofitable losses as well as invite retaliation by "dumping" our wheat abroad.

Mr. President, I myself am saying nothing against the McNary-Haugen bill at this particular time.

This article says further:

If some way could be found by which ultimate repayment could really be made and which no future Congress would block, we would strongly favor the passage of the Dial-Lowrey bill or some similar measure. It would be, as its sponsors declare, a wonderful aid to the depressed agricultural industry, on which our national prosperity depends so largely, and a real help to the distressed countries of Europe.

I ask that the entire article may be published in the Record. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

REVIVING AGITATION FOR EXPORT CREDITS.

(By Stephen Bell.)

It is an accepted axiom of physics that what goes up must come down. An economic analogue of this axiom would seem to be that goods exported from a country must be balanced by the importation of an equivalent value, if a fair commerce is to continue. We are led into this reflection by a revival of the agitation for credits with which to finance our export trade.

Senator DIAL, of South Carolina, and Representative LOWREY, of Mississippi, have simultaneously introduced in their respective branches of Congress a bill to provide for the utilization of $150,000,000 now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian as a revolving fund, after the methods of the War Finance Corporation, for the financing of exports of raw materials to Germany, Austria, and Hungary. It is proposed that the consent and cooperation of these foreign governments are to be secured, that the use of these funds shall not affect the rights of their alien owners, that ample security shall be exacted for loan by liens on the raw material as they pass through their successive stages of manufacture and marketing, and that the revolving fund shall be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Alien Property Custodian, and three others appointed by the President.

It is no secret that the bill aims at the facilitation of cotton exporting, and cotton already has responded favorably to the stimulating nature of the suggestion, but the American Farm Bureau Federation, representing more the agricultural West, is quite as favorably impressed with the possibilities of the principle, and the agricultural bloc in Congress is considering a Government revolving fund of some half a billion dollars to be used to finance all manner of farm products and raw materials to the countries named and to many others.

The proposal is quite unlike that of the McNary-Haugen bill, which contemplates the formation of a $200,000,000 corporation, financed by the Government, to buy farm products at a stated price and sell them abroad. The Dial-Lowrey bill is far sounder in principle, and if any of these bills are to pass, it or its magnificent prototype may with advantage be substituted for the entirely vicious McNary-Haugen measure, which would merely leave the Government holding a bagful of unprofitable losses as well as invite retaliation by "dumping" our wheat abroad.

At the conclusion of the war, commerce and finance strongly favored the continued extending of credits to Europe to rebuild her shattered industrial fabric that had been destroyed, but there was then only the low rates of the Underwood tariff law to block the ultimate repayment of such credit loans. Congress in its wisdom decided otherwise. But it may as well be understood once for all that Europe has not now and probably never will have the means to pay for these exports with cash, for American dollars do not grow in Europe. The only money crops which grow there are pounds, francs, lire, marks, pesetas, crowns, etc., which are quite valueless here.

If some way could be found by which ultimate repayment could really be made and which no future Congress would block, we would strongly favor the passage of the Dial-Lowrey bill or some similar measure. It would be, as its sponsors declare, a wonderful aid to the depressed agricultural industry, on which our national prosperity depends so largely, and a real help to the distressed countries of Europe.

In fact, we are inclined to believe that if European countries were now free to pay in the only way payment can be made for the foods and raw materials they need, there would be no necessity for these elaborate, costly, and risky financing plans. It was because of this belief that we opposed the enactment of the Emergency and Fordney tariff bills, whose perfect fruits the farmers are now eating so disgustedly.

It may be pointed out that the prospects for the passage of the Dial-Lowrey bill are good, if it is so drawn as to command the joint support of the South and West. If the $150,000,000 were equally divided between wheat and cotton credits, it would represent 75,000,000 bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of the cotton. The McNary-Haugen bill, on the other hand, is sure to meet violent opposition, even from those sections of the West which it is designed to benefit. And Secretary Wallace, who favors it, may resign if President Coolidge refuses to back it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. DIAL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator if he has taken into consideration the fact that the Alien Property Custodian has declared in court and in several public documents that he considers himself a trustee for the money now held in his hands?

Mr. DIAL. I have taken that into consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. He considers himself a trustee for the purpose eventually of turning the money or the property in kind, whatever it may be, back to the people in Germany, if it shall be decreed that they own the property, money, or in kind.

Mr. DIAL. I fully realize that.

Mr. BAYARD. What would be said of the Alien Property Custodian if he should take trust funds and should engage in a business with those trust funds which may not be for the benefit of the real beneficiaries in the end when the matter is settled, but may perhaps be lost? Would this Government guarantee the owners of that fund?

Mr. DIAL. I think the Government should be very careful indeed how it handles that fund. This bill proposes to have the consent of the nationals of those other countries through their governments to this proposition. The idea is to lend this money to parties who need our raw agricultural commodities and to encourage them to trade. By so doing we would get relief in this country from a surplus here, particularly of cotton, wheat, and tobacco. The prices are depressed in this country because we have too much of those commodities. The countries with which we are trying to trade need those commodities, and they ought to be encouraged to use this money in that way. The bill decides nothing as to the ownership of the money, but merely allows its use as a revolving fund temporarily to encourage trade with those countries.

Mr. BAYARD. The expression "those countries" as I understand, means Austria and Germany.

Mr. DIAL. It means Austria, Germany, and Hungary.

Mr. BAYARD. How is the question to be determined as to the amounts to be used as against the individual Germans, Austrians, and Hungarians?

Mr. DIAL. It is to be determined according to the amount of the fund that is impounded in this country from the nationals from each of those countries.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the claimants in Austria, Hungary, and Germany have no individual say as to the use of this fund?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; they would have a say, and they would have to put up security if they borrowed.

Mr. BAYARD. Then it would not be used until the individual say of the claimants upon the other side is had?

Mr. DIAL. No; not the say of the claimants, but the respective Governments must consent for the claimants; but the borrower will do as he pleases with it. Take, for instance, cotton. Under the law in those countries the raw commodity can be followed through its various processes by lien, and that lien is stamped on the commodity. It would be a perfectly safe proposition. I do not believe in the Government dealing lightly at all with a question of this kind; but those who get the money must put up security, and I understand they are willing to put up security. They are anxious to get these commodities.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think the Senator understands me. The point I make is that the individual claimants are in Austria, Hungary, and Germany.

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. And eventually they may or may not be determined as the owners of their several portions of this fund now held by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. BAYARD. And they will not have anything to say about this matter, because their governments will represent them and will take over the responsibility on their behalf.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; the respective governments are required under this bill to consent.

Mr. BAYARD. Can those governments act without the consent or approval of the individuals?

Mr. DIAL. That is a matter between those governments and their own nationals.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes; but does not the Alien Property Custodian hold this fund as trustee for the individuals and not for the governments?

Mr. DIAL. We are holding that fund to protect our nationals here against claims which they may have against those governments. As I understand, their respective governments pledged those funds for this purpose. That question will be settled by the Congress at the proper time. I wish we could adjust it one way or the other. I am not willing to turn that money, so far as I am concerned, back to those claimants until those governments settle for claims that our people have against them. But in the meantime this bill does not decide anything. If they can not put up satisfactory security, they do not get the money. The bill has been considered very carefully by a subcommittee of the Senate and also a committee of the House of Representatives, with the aid of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. BAYARD. Has the question of his power as trustee been gone into with the aid of legal advice?

Mr. DIAL. I presume the Alien Property Custodian has legal advice. He is a lawyer himself and advocates the measure very strongly. It is before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, and I hope they will consider it most carefully. I will say to the Senator that my whole thought is safety, not only for private but for public loans. I do not believe in adopting unconstitutional methods, and I do not believe in taking great risks; but, under this bill, if we can get rid of our surplus cotton, which we are now selling under cost, before the next crop comes in, then we will be enabled to help our people get a better price. I understand that the tobacco market is stagnated now, and yet one of the claimants of this very money wants to buy $4,000,000,000 worth of our tobacco, but his own money amounting, I believe, to $8,000,000 is impounded with the Allen Property Custodian. If he could get the use of that money he would buy that large amount of tobacco and help the market for that commodity.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DIAL. I will be glad to yield in a moment.

Mr. McNARY. I am not asking the Senator to yield; I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to know what was the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I am speaking on a bill before the Senate, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY. I want to know what the request was respecting the article which the Senator from South Carolina handed up to the Secretary?

Mr. DIAL. I do not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon desires to be informed what the Senator from South Carolina wished to have done with the article he sent to the desk.

Mr. DIAL. I desired to have it published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put the request, but heard no objection, and the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, as I was saying, we have a surplus of these raw agricultural products, and for that very reason the price is depressed. If the farmers of the Northwest and the West could get rid of their surplus wheat, they would be able to get a better price for the growing crop. So it is with us in the South with our cotton and tobacco. There is not so very much there, but according to figures it is made to appear a good deal, and we should like to get rid of that before the next crop is harvested.

Under the law of Germany, particularly, a loan can be made to buy cotton, and a lien can be had on it, and the lien follows the cotton through the various processes of manufacture, and it still obtains until the goods are sold and the money is paid; and that is one of the objects of this bill. Now, the Germans want a very large quantity of our cotton. I understand that they want a very large quantity of wheat. They have been here recently and wanted 50,000,000 bushels of wheat. I see nothing unconstitutional about this bill. I see nothing radical about it. I see nothing wrong about the bill. By passing it we would encourage the people to whom the money belongs to trade with us. They would thereby be using practically their own money; and if they thought they were using it to make interest upon it and at the same time benefiting their people and building up their country and giving employment to their labor, they would be encouraged to do the very thing that this bill undertakes to accomplish.

I know that the Agricultural Committee is very busy. It is one of the busiest committees of the Senate; but I should be very glad if the committee would consider this bill at the very earliest opportunity, and if it considers that there is merit in the bill report it back. I believe that if the bill were passed we would be relieved of a good many measures here that are unsound, such as the one we defeated the other day, the Norbeck bill. This would answer the purpose, and would get our Government out of business at as early a date as possible, and would help us prosper in the United States. We can not afford to go on raising cotton at the present price.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, what is the present price?

Mr. DIAL. About 28 to 30 cents a pound.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What was it before the war?

Mr. DIAL. Before the war it ranged up to 18 cents or above; but we have had the boll weevil since then. It costs about twice as much to produce cotton now as it did before, and not only that, but everything else is higher. Fertilizer is higher; labor is scarce; land is depleted; and plenty of other things have come along. Furthermore, I will tell the Senator from Missouri that even before the war, in the case of an average crop, a man and his wife and four children working on a farm, getting 18 cents a pound for cotton, earned the magnificent sum of 10 cents a day each. That was figured out by a joint committee of the House and the Senate, and the figures are on record, and I put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a few years ago. With a few exceptions, we have never since the Civil War gotten what it cost to produce cotton if we had taken into consideration the labor necessary in its production and some other costs which we ignored. The time has come, however, when we can not clothe the world by making cotton under the cost of production; and in all probability in the next year, perhaps, or certainly in a very short time, unless the Creator helps us to destroy the boll weevil, there will not be enough cotton raised to keep the spindles of the world at work. Cotton was scarce last summer, and many mills shut down. It is scarce now, and our mills are shutting down, and the people who work in them are being thrown out of employment almost daily on this account. They have my deepest concern and sympathy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DIAL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, if there is a scarcity of cotton all over the world, and mills are being shut down for want of it, and people are going naked because they do not have it, and there is this universal demand, I should like to inquire why cotton markets need any stimulation?

Mr. DIAL. One reason is that we can not export. The doors of import to this country are closed by our high tariff, and the people of the world who need this cotton to-day, who are going naked, can not get their products into this country to exchange them for our cotton or cotton goods. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. REED of Missouri. When the Senator comes to that remedy—opening the American markets in order to encourage foreign manufacture and consumption—he and I will be back on the old Democratic platform, and we will be in complete harmony.

Mr. DIAL. We usually stand together on tariff questions.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But if the Senator has just given the cause—namely, that we have shut foreign countries out of our market and thus destroyed manufacture abroad—why should he now propose this remedy, which is not a remedy for the evil that he says has caused the trouble?

Mr. DIAL. This is a partial remedy. I think this would help Germany get on its feet and thus enable us to export our cotton to Germany. A few years ago, as the Senator knows, we exported more than 8,000,000 bales of cotton per annum.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; I know we did.

Mr. DIAL. During the last year or two we exported only about 5,000,000 bales.

Mr. REED of Missouri. A few years ago we did not have the present tariff. It seems to me that if we say that the trouble with a man is that he has not enough food to eat the thing to do is to give him food and not to give him a pair of boots. The Senator says the trouble here is not that these people do not desire the cotton, not that they do not need the cotton—that desire and that need exist—but that they can not gratify that desire or meet that necessity, because when they manufacture the goods we have shut them out of the market where they must sell those goods. It is perfectly plain, therefore, if that statement of facts be correct, that the remedy they need is not money to help them manufacture goods which they can not sell because they have been shut out of the market but to open the market to them so that they can sell even the goods they now produce.

Mr. DIAL. We ought to do both. We ought to let them have cotton with which to make goods to sell to other countries, even if they can not sell their product in this country. Both would help.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That means a modification of the statement the Senator made awhile ago. Now it appears from the Senator's modified statement that there is this sort of condition: They want cotton, the world wants cotton, and there is a market for it outside of the United States if they have money to get the cotton to manufacture. That is the Senator's present statement?

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And that this bill, in his judgment, will furnish them some of that money with which to buy this cotton?

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, will the Senator tell me this. I am not asking this question in a controversial spirit. I want to get at the facts.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I understand.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has studied the bill. I have not. If it be true that under the German law a lien is created upon the raw material for the purchase price, and that that lien follows the article clear through to its ultimate manufacture—

Mr. DIAL. I am so told.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that is the case, will the Senator tell me why it is that a German manufacturer, with his factory in working order, with the labor there to operate the factory, with a law which creates a lien on behalf of the seller of raw cotton, can not under those circumstances get raw cotton on credit, manufacture it, and sell it? In a word, without taking the Senator's time or proceeding too far in the argument, will the Senator tell me why the very character of security which the Senator says under this bill can be given to our Government, and through it to the owner of the German securities or property which we hold, and which security he says is good enough for the Government and good enough for the German citizen, is not good enough for the cotton planter or the cotton factor?

Mr. DIAL. That process has been practiced to a limited extent; but the cotton planter is not organized sufficiently to grant that accommodation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But there are plenty of large dealers in cotton who buy it in large quantities and look for a market for it; and if it be true that they can sell it over there and have a perfectly good security so far as lien is concerned, and then that there is a market for the goods so that the price can be realized and the lien holder can realize upon his lien, it seems to me that if that be the case these large dealers in cotton would speedily enter that market and dispose of their goods on that market.

Mr. DIAL. It takes a very large sum of money to handle cotton, and the turnover has to extend over a long number of months. It takes a good long while to realize upon it, and this practice has not been indulged in much so far. My idea in presenting this bill was that it would encourage the Germans to buy more of our commodity when they feel that they are using their own money, and that the bill will encourage good feeling between the nationals of that country and the nationals of this country. I shall be glad if the Senator from Missouri will read the bill and give it his consideration on its merits.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is not this the difficulty? The Senator says the proposal is to use their own money.

Mr. DIAL. This money is impounded. This money has been taken from them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We frequently make mistakes by the mere use of terms and get in a very illogical position. Whose money is it? The money is the money of a large number of individuals who reside in Germany. It is not proposed to take this money and turn it over to the people who equitably own it, because that would discharge our obligation, and would, of course, give these people the money with which to proceed in business as they saw fit; so when we propose to turn over money we do not propose to turn it over to the owners of the money at all. We propose to turn it over to different individuals than the owners, and to take some kind of security and hold ourselves obligated in the future to pay to the real owners of the money that which is due them, just as we are at present obligated to do that. In other words, we are going to take the money of A, B, C, and D and turn it over to E, and then tell A, B, C, and D that at some time in the future we are going to settle with them.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator did not catch my remarks earlier in what I had to say. We do not propose to turn over the money to anybody without security; but some of the persons who want to use this money were in the manufacturing business, some of this money was taken from them, or at least property out of which it arose, and they would like to borrow some of this very money for the present.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Some of their own, or some that belongs to other people?

Mr. DIAL. Some of the people from whom this money was taken. I cited one.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator will limit his bill to loaning to a German citizen that portion of this fund which we already owe him, turn the money over to him and discharge his obligation—

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no; not without security. I am not ready to do that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That would be all right, because I think this money has been held an unconscionable time now, and has been handled in a most unconscionable manner, and in some instances in a disgraceful manner. If it were proposed to turn over to A $4,000,000 which we owe A, paying him, and then letting him buy cotton or wheat with it, I should have no objection to that, provided, of course, that the claims of American citizens are properly taken care of, and in a way we are holding this money as a sort of a guaranty of that; but that matter ought to be settled, and ought to have been settled long ago. I am not saying that I am going to oppose the Senator's bill, but I have had this colloquy for the purpose of trying to clarify the matter in my own mind.

Mr. DIAL. I thank the Senator very much for interrupting me. As he knows, there are two schools of thought here in Congress. One believes that this money ought to be turned back to the parties from whom it was taken. Another school thinks that this money ought to be held until the claims of our people against those Governments are settled. I do not propose to go into that question at the present time, but I agree with the latter view on that point. This bill does not propose to turn the money back to the claimants without security, but, as a matter of information for the Senate, I am informed that a great deal of this money was taken away from people who are in the manufacturing business. I have not the list before me, but I was told that there was one claimant who was in the tobacco business, and who wants to buy a very large quantity of tobacco, perhaps $4,000,000 worth, and we have impounded something like $8,000,000 of his money.

If we can encourage trade and good feeling, we will have accomplished two purposes—getting rid of the surplus in this country and encouraging industries in those countries, enabling those people to work and to get back on their feet, to regain their prosperity, and to be better able to trade with us and trade with other parts of the world. I think everybody ought to be encouraged to go to work.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator this question, following the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri: Suppose part of this fund is loaned on behalf of some Germans or Austrians or Hungarians whose property is now held by the American Alien Property Custodian; suppose it is loaned to them individually in the same amount in which they hold claims against funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. Having loaned it, or placed it in the hands of these foreign claimants, do we not discharge the trust to that extent?

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no; that is a different matter altogether. They borrow the money from us.

Mr. BAYARD. The claimant borrows his own trust fund?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; he might borrow his own trust fund and put up security, or some one else might borrow it.

Mr. BAYARD. Who puts up the trust security for him?

Mr. DIAL. The borrower, whoever he is.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator means that under this bill the Alien Property Custodian has to go around and look into the national solidity of all these people who borrow money in their individual names?

Mr. DIAL. This bill provides for a commission of five—the Secretary of the Treasury, the Alien Property Custodian, and three other commissioners to be appointed by the President. They are a body to handle this matter. If satisfactory security comes to them, they make the loan; but if not, they do not make it. I am told that a great many applicants are now just ready and willing and anxious to borrow this money for the purpose of building up trade with those countries.

Mr. BAYARD. Would these loans be made pro rata to these individuals upon their prorated interests in the funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian of this country?

Mr. DIAL. That is a matter of detail to be decided by the commission according to the applications.

Mr. BAYARD. The claimant would have no right just because he is a claimant?

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not know that he would have any prior right. It would be a matter for the commission. They would inquire, in the first place, whether it was safe; in the next place, the equity of the claim would be considered, no doubt.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will consider the bill, because we are getting along late in the session, and if we are going to do anything to benefit agriculture we had better go ahead and act quickly.

RAILROAD ACROSS FORT SNELLING MILITARY RESERVATION, MINN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1982) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., its successors and assigns, of a line of railroad across the northeasterly portion of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation in the State of Minnesota, which was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "War," to insert: "including proper compensation for use of the land covered by the permit."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. KING. Is this a bridge bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It relates to the railway crossing at Fort Snelling Military Reservation. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL OIL LAND LEASES.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, an article in the New York Times this morning concerning the probable testimony of Mr. Will Hays takes on a new meaning in the light of the proceedings this morning before the Public Lands Committee investigating the Teapot Dome scandal. This article, written in New York, with a New York date line, reads in part as follows:

WILL H. Hays, formerly chairman of the Republican National Committee, is to leave New York this morning for Washington to testify before the Senate oil-lease investigating committee. He spent a good part of yesterday consulting his lawyers in this city, and he declined to make any statement whatever last evening as to matters upon which the committee is to examine him.

At the office of Harry F. Sinclair, who is to appear before the committee to-day, it was said that Mr. Sinclair was already on his way to Washington. Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Hays have been close friends for many years.

It is understood that Mr. Hays will tell the committee that the report that 75,000 shares of Sinclair stock figured in the settlement of a deficit in the fund of the Republican National Committee in 1920 is true. There is reason to believe that he will testify that Mr. Sinclair supplied the stock.

What moved Mr. Sinclair to make so large a contribution and what was done with the stock Mr. Hays will also tell, but until he appears before the committee these and other details are to remain secret.

ESTIMATES STOCK AT $1,875,000.

Mr. Hays made an appeal on November 24, 1920, for funds to wipe out the Republican campaign deficit, stating that the deficit then was $1,000,000.

On December 1, 1920, the Sinclair Oil stock was valued at $25 a share, which would make the 75,000 shares, said to have been presented to the Republican National Committee, worth $1,875,000 at that time.

This morning, Mr. President, the brilliant and able lawyer, Mr. Martin W. Littleton, appeared before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys when we were about to call Mr. Sinclair and questioned the right of that committee to subpoena anybody before it. He stated in his argument that the committees of the House and Senate have no right to call a man by subpoena before them and ask questions concerning their affairs. He made an argument which took up more than an hour, and on cross-examination clearly showed that he is now leading the fight to stop all congressional investigations which would be effective.

It is significant that just when Mr. Sinclair is to be asked questions relating to this campaign fund, and when Mr. Hays is to be asked questions relating to this fund, the great New York lawyer appears and contends that these committees have no right to subpoena anybody. He had prepared a printed brief on the subject, which he presented to members of the committee.

It is an interesting fact that in the estimation of the editors of the big newspapers of the eastern cities the argument that these investigations on the part of committees of Congress became nauseating, that they were the product of hysteria, began the day the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys exposed the White House telegrams. Since then we have been told by these editors, through their newspapers, that the country is tired of this. Senators in this body have been called all the objectionable names that can be applied to men who seek to ferret out the facts underlying the conditions which caused these investigations.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I just rose for information. Does the Senator take issue with an editorial statement that these investigations are nauseating, that everybody is nauseated, that the country is nauseated, and that even the culprits who have been brought to the bar of investigation are nauseated? I think the term a very happy one, and very appropriately applied, myself.

Mr. DILL. I want to say, in answer to the Senator's question, that no doubt they are nauseating to everybody; but I was commenting on the fact that the big newspapers did not find them sufficiently nauseating to publish that argument all over their front pages until we began to get close to the big characters in the Republican organization. As long as we were exposing the little fellows, as long as we were exposing individuals here and there, it was not so bad, but it got extremely nauseating when we published telegrams from the White House sent to Mr. McLean, who had admitted that he had deceived the committee and lied to them about a loan of Mr. Fall, which Mr. Fall tried to get another man up in Cleveland to lie about.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But was not that all calculated to disturb the stomachs of these great newspaper writers?

Mr. DILL. Ah, Mr. President, it did disturb their stomachs, and they knew it was disturbing the mental stomachs of the common people of America, too.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. DILL. And now, when not able to stop the men on these committees from pursuing the investigations, they send the most brilliant lawyer, probably, at the New York bar to challenge a right Congress has had and exercised ever since the Government began, namely, to call witnesses before the committees of Congress investigating facts, the effort being to stop us from asking the questions which may bring forth the truth, which they do not want the country to know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just rise for information. Did the committee take the same view of the matter that was presented by Mr. Littleton?

Mr. DILL. I may say, in reply to the Senator, that the committee has not yet acted on the matter. From expressions given by the committee, they certainly did not take that view at all; but that matter will be passed upon at the next meeting of the committee. No testimony was taken this morning, because the time was taken up in the discussion of the rights of the committee to bring about these investigations.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri that these facts are nauseating, but the most nauseating thing about it is that there should be men, honorable men, supposedly, men in high positions of power, controlling great newspapers, who want to suppress the facts that are nauseating. That, to me, is the most nauseating thing about it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the course of the Senator's remarks—

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But I want to ask him if he does not think that about the most nauseating spectacle presented to the American people to-day is to be found in the fact that with all the evidence of graft and criminality it has been at least suggested, if not absolutely proven, that the Department of Justice not only found its arm paralyzed, but worse than paralyzed. Apparently it has been used, to some extent, for the protection of these culprits, and, with all that evidence before him, or a large part of it before him for four or five weeks, the Chief Executive of this Nation has not placed some one at the head of the Department of Justice who can start its vast machinery in motion for the protection of the people, as it would be in motion promptly if some small criminal were to commit some petty offense. Is not that the most nauseating spectacle we have to-day?

Mr. DILL. I agree with the Senator that it is, in view of the facts now coming out in the committee hearings or about to come out, showing that oil stock was turned over for the purpose of paying campaign debts, the other story of which we have had rumors so continuously that the Republican presidential nomination in Chicago in 1920 was controlled by the oil interests becomes doubly important to the committee.

I, for one, and I hope I speak for others on the committees that are doing investigating, not only will not be deterred by agitation and propaganda against investigations, will not be turned aside by any legal phraseology which brilliant lawyers of the New York bar may present here, but instead will become more determined, more intent upon finding out all the facts connected with the oil scandal and with the other scandals that seem to permeate one department after another.

Mr. President, I do not want to take more of the time of the Senate, but I did want to call attention to the fact that with these questions about to be propounded to men whom the

New York Times, a great reliable newspaper, says will tell these damaging things at the very hour when we are ready to ask those questions, the jurisdiction and right of the committees of the House and Senate is challenged even to call anybody before them at all in order to get facts upon which to legislate intelligently.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can tell my good friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] why certain people are becoming so nauseated at oil-scandal disclosures. I hold in my hand an editorial from the Wheeling Register, a West Virginia paper, of March 6, 1924. I will read an excerpt from it:

The Senate is not hysterical. It is the Republican politicians and Republican newspapers that are hysterical. Therefore the attacks on the Democrats who are honest enough and have courage enough to continue pushing the probes under way. Because they have exposed Fall and Denby and Daugherty and are going further they are termed "character assassins."

Mr. President, that editorial presents the situation as it exists here. Some of the agents of the subsidized press are seeking to injure and discredit the Senate of the United States. Instead of trying to help the Senate get at the truth and punish those guilty of wrongdoing, they are trying to hamper and hinder the Senate, and even to discredit and destroy Senators who dare to stand here and fight for clean politics and common honesty in the Government service. They would have us shut our eyes and remain silent while scandals are cropping out on every hand under the disgusting order of things that now so sorely afflict the country. They are attacking every Senator who is wholeheartedly trying to punish crime and drive criminals from office. I, for one, feel complimented when I have one of these pusillanimous and villainous sheets assail me. I feel complimented, because they do not attack a Senator unless he is interfering with the plans and purposes of predatory interests.

If a Senator will show himself friendly to their interests and do their bidding, they will praise him as a great constitutional lawyer and as a broad-minded statesman. But he who puts his country first and makes bare his arm for battle against the sinister interests of the country they immediately turn loose upon him their venomous attacks and denounce him as a demagogue, a slanderer, or a mud gunner. So whenever they assail me, along with others in this Chamber who are doing battle in their country's cause at this time, I feel that it is a mark of honor and distinction that we ought to appreciate, because we are driving the sword of righteous indignation up to the hilt in the bowels of scandal and crime in the Capital of the Nation.

They are not going to frighten any Senator worthy to be a Senator. They are not going to intimidate anybody in this Chamber. The Republican Speaker of the House may go up to Massachusetts and make a speech about how the Senate has lowered itself in dignity and in intellectual standing, and remind his hearers of the old days when the Senate used to discuss great constitutional questions and do so in a dignified way.

When the Senate was far removed from the people and the people had but little to do with the selection of Senators, and this Chamber was filled largely with men who looked wiser than they really were, and many of them never condescended to discuss matters that merely affected the well-being of the masses of the people, these brazen agents of the subsidized press would have us believe that those were the glorious days of the Republic.

But, Mr. President, I honor more the Senate which responds to a conscious sense of duty to the country, a Senate that will not hesitate to attack and continue to attack the things that it believes are harmful and hurtful to the Government that it has sworn to protect and safeguard. The founders of the Republic never intended that the Senate should be the rendezvous of crooks and the citadel of special privilege. I honor more that Senate which seeks to do that which will redound to the common good of our common country. We are one branch of the greatest law-making body of the greatest Government on the globe. Why should we not be bravely responsive to the demands of duty, and is there any higher duty than that of exposing crooked officials and driving criminals from positions of trust? I know that these brazen agents of the crooked interests want the Senate to sit here or sleep here and never say a word against those who, through Republican connivance or Government license, have made millions in making barter of Government property. Oh, Mr. President, I thank God that we have come to a time when the people can elect their United States Senators, when they are in close personal touch and contact with them and feel a direct interest in them, and when a Senator is made more responsive to the people who sent him here,

I know that this bunch that is carrying on this propaganda would like to have men here who are afraid of their shadows. They would like to be able to tell a Senator, "If you take this stand or that we will pounce on you with our editorial columns and we will mistreat you in the matter of carrying news about your service in the Senate; not only that, we will do everything we can to destroy you in the estimation of the people of your State and to get you out of the Senate." In order to get yourself properly played up in such newspapers—I mean the crooked and corrupt ones, because there is a portion of the press, I am thankful to say, which is clean and honest—they tell you, in effect, "If you want to have yourself properly played up in these papers, you just do what we want you to do. You do our bidding and we will make you, whether you are or not, a great constitutional lawyer. We will hold you up as one of the biggest men who ever came to the Senate of the United States. Oh, we will play you up so strong that the people back home will think that you are the whole cheese up here. If you will serve the interests we represent, we will not let anything appear in our papers that is at all detrimental to you."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to what kind of cheese he refers?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say oil cheese or old cheese. I said the whole cheese.

Oh, Mr. President, we have some men in public life who are weak-kneed, namby-pamby creatures, and we wonder sometimes when we see their indifference and inactivity just how they got into places of importance and trust. I repeat the concerted plan to frighten Senators away from their duty will not be successful. It can not succeed as long as we have men in this body who appreciate the duty and responsibility that are theirs. I believe that there are Senators here to-day who realize that the fight we are making is a fight to save the life of this Nation from the dangers that threaten it.

Mr. President, I have another newspaper clipping which I will read. This is from the Buffalo Commercial, of Buffalo, N. Y. A great many of these attacks are coming from New York. If there is a place that ought to be grateful to those fellows who have had a pipe line connected with the Treasury of the United States it is that New York bunch. I want to know soon just how much of that $123,000,000, which Mr. Mellon gave back to them, refunded in taxes in one year—1923—went to Wall Street and to that New York bunch that has editorials like this written. What I have said before and am saying now are the reasons they do not like me. For similar reasons they do not like the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and others that I could mention, because we have dared to speak out about them and their crooked conduct and to put the facts concerning them in the record of Congress which will be preserved as long as the Government lives. They do not want men here who can not be controlled. They do not want men here to whom they can not go and say, "Now, you lay off of this. It is all right for you to make a speech on this or that subject, providing you do not touch on this phase of it. We want you to do what we want you to do, and if you do that we will praise you to the skies." That is their game.

Here is the item from the paper I have just mentioned:

Already the high traditions of the most august, deliberative body in the world have sunk to degrading depths. A Senate that once discussed the constitutional questions with statesmanlike dignity and gave time and thought to legislation for the best interests of the Nation, has degenerated into an assembly of vile slanderers, character assassins, political freebooters, Bolshevik sympathizers, and blatant blackguards.

Oh, Mr. President, I just wonder what it would take to arouse that paper to a sense of its duty to the country. We have shown here by the testimony that those in charge of the treasure house of the Nation, its great oil reserves, have opened the doors, the officials have been bribed, and the pillagers and plunderers have gone in and helped themselves to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars worth of oil in this country. And yet that does not affect a paper like this; that does not cause this paper to cry out to the Senate and to the country to "go to it and punish those guilty of wrongdoing—go to it and restore this property to the Government." Not a line in that direction, not a word, but an attack is made upon Senators who are commenting upon that awful situation, and who are urging that the property be restored, and yet this agency of the crooked interests assails Senators who are daring to expose crooks and do their duty to their country.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the testimony has shown that Doheny, the great oil magnate of America, had his taxes refunded to him from the Federal Treasury to the extent of $40,000.

Yes, Mr. President, Doheny, the great oil magnate of America, had taxes refunded to him to the amount of $40,000; and it turns out that the clerk in the department who worked that out, and made it possible for Doheny to get back that $40,000 has been employed by Doheny and is now drawing a fine salary out of the Government-filled purse of that great oil magnate. This morning the newspaper discloses the fact that in a hearing before another committee conducted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] the Standard Oil Co. got $18,000,000 lopped off its taxes at one sitting, and the clerk in the department who brought that about is now working for that company at a big salary.

Oh, Mr. President, the awful doings disclosed here are enough to arouse every patriotic man and woman in the country. Have we come to a time when the mighty rich, with their dollars constituting passports right into the citadel of the Government itself, can buy immunity from taxation, and if, through the processes constituted by Congress we force them to pay, they can go back afterwards and have the money refunded and thereby escape their fair share of the burdens of government?

The able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said the other day that the people out in his section of the country and in other places were hard pressed to get money with which to pay their taxes; that some of them had had their property sold for taxes. I said then that that was an awful situation. Yet while those poor unfortunate people are struggling to get money enough in order to pay their taxes and save their homes to themselves and their children the Standard Oil Co. and Doheny's company can come right into the heart of the Government itself and have money refunded to them by hundreds, thousands, and even millions of dollars.

Another thing of importance was discussed here the other day by the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] in a strong speech, replying to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who took the Senate to task for criticizing the President. That is something new under the sun—that the Senate of the United States can not discuss the policies, the acts, the conduct of the head of the Government. Who ever heard of such a thing? Of course the President's policies are open to discussion. He is not a king, as I have heretofore said; and one of the ablest speeches which I have ever heard since I have been in the Senate was the speech of the junior Senator from West Virginia when he pleaded a few days ago for the preservation of free speech in the Senate of the United States. Not only are certain interests trying to frighten us with attacks from their great daily newspapers, but they are trying to suppress free speech in the Senate. They do not want the facts of these terrible disclosures to go to the country.

Mr. President, I trust that the people of the country are finding out something about what is going on here. This morning I read an editorial from the Philadelphia North American, a Republican newspaper, criticizing the President for continuing Mr. Daugherty as Attorney General. The Department of Justice is hamstrung; the Department of Justice is out of commission, so far as functioning in the interest of the American people. The head of that great department is under fire; he is under serious charges. Testimony day by day is hampering and associating him with all kinds of crooked doings; yet we can not get any relief from that situation. I have made the statement before, and I am going to continue to make it, that the Attorney General has no business being at the head of the Department of Justice when we are trying to get testimony out of that department with which to establish the charges against him. Yet he has got charge of all of it. He has no right to be in possession of it.

Mr. President, think of the agents under him. I have in mind now a case where a young man prepared the papers; he was ready to bring suit, I am told, against a certain big concern and he was just ready to file the suit, but the story is that Mr. Daugherty told him to do nothing until he heard from him, and he has not heard from him yet. The committee would like to summon that young man to ask him how long ago this incident occurred and what it was Mr. Daugherty said to him, to tell the whole story about it, and other things like that, but they are not going to do it.

The Attorney General is telling the department agents and the public that he is going to come out all right and be acquitted. The agents under him, having been appointed by him, are not going to testify against their chief. I repeat that the papers all over the department which ought to be opened and ought to be laid before the investigating committee are under the charge of the Attorney General. He can either let them come to light or not do so. If there were any damaging statements in those papers, it would be easy to destroy them and not leave a trace behind.

Mr. President, suppose a man were in charge of some great department of the Government where the Government kept its ammunition in war time, and it should be charged that faulty explosives were being used by our soldiers in the Army, and that such a man were a party to that act, and we were to arraign him and bring charges against him, do Senators think that the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy would let that man stay in that department continuing to send out such material to the battle front until he could have a trial and find out whether or not he was guilty? No; Mr. President, the head of the Government would say, "We are not going to take any chances; we are going to try this matter out; but the first thing we are going to do is to remove that man from the position which he holds"; and he would be removed. Why? In the first place, in order to keep him from being in a position to do any harm to the country; and, in the second place, because a man with such charges resting on him ought not to be trusted in a place like that at a time like that; and he would be ousted.

Suppose in another situation, Mr. President, that you were trying a case before a judge and you could show that when the court adjourned to-day the witnesses went home with the man whom you were prosecuting; that the State's witnesses, the Government's witnesses, were found with him, subject to his orders, and the testimony on which you relied to convict him was turned over to him and nobody else had access to it; and suppose you should go into court the next morning and say to the judge, "Do you know that these witnesses are going and spending the night at this man's house? Do you know that all the testimony we are relying upon to convict him is in his care and keeping and nobody else can get it?" The next morning when the court opened the judge would issue an order or he would make a statement that would break up that situation. But here we are in the Nation's Capital, with the Attorney General under the most serious charges that ever rested on anyone, in control of all the testimony and with all the living witnesses right under his hands in the Department of Justice, and the President sits silent as the tomb.

The Philadelphia North American uses this language referring to Roxie Stinson's testimony against Daugherty:

The story has opened lines of inquiry which the committee will undoubtedly find helpful. Not only has it put Daugherty on the defensive but it has made his continuance as Attorney General a gross affront to the Nation, for the evidence is direct that Smith made corrupt use of his position, and the man who gave Smith his opportunities and power and who was Smith's closest friend and confidant is, through that circumstance, unfitted to administer the Department of Justice. To expect Daugherty to yield to the dictates of propriety would be absurd; to await legal judgment upon his record would be to continue for months the demoralization of the Department of Justice. President Coolidge alone has the power to end a situation which has become intolerable, and he alone bears the responsibility of ending it without further delay.

Mr. President, there is a newspaper that dares to speak out. It does not belong to that common herd of the crooked interests that assails the Senate and tries to destroy Senators because they are uncovering and disclosing an ugly, corrupt condition that exists in the Government. Every newspaper in the Nation ought to be crying out daily that the Senate should go on and on, until this fight is finished and we have had a genuine house cleaning at Washington.

Mr. President, it has been the history of every government in the world that when it reached that point where predatory interests get together and become a danger and a menace to the liberties of the people, they buy newspapers and employ such vehicles to shape public opinion and crush those who fight them and promote those who serve them. It has been the history, I say, of all governments that such things have happened. We have reached the point where the dollar is more potent and corruption in politics more dangerous than at any time ever in the history of this Government.

Mr. President, it is a challenge to the courage and honor of every honest man who sits in this body. I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, I propound to him—as the inspired writer did in the old days—the question "Who is on the Lord's side?" On which side do you battle in this conflict? Are you on the side of those who would pull down these institutions, who would barter justice, who would sell immunity from prosecution, who would rob the Nation and paralyze the instrumentalities of government to enrich themselves? Would you support and truckle to those who would refund money to the mighty rich and impose tax burdens upon the pitiful poor until their very homes are sold on the block for taxes? Oh, Mr. President, it is disgusting when we consider just how many agents of that kind there are under this Government.

And now, to-day, we have one of the ablest lawyers of the country—who also comes out of New York—challenging the right of a Senate committee to summon witnesses and take testimony. That is the climax of the whole thing. They have been trying for months to suppress the truth; they have tried to suppress free speech in this body; they have slandered those of us who dared to fight to get at the truth against the crooks in the Government; and now comes one of their brilliant lawyers and tells the constituted authority of the country, "You have no right to bring in these witnesses and ask them to tell their Government the truth."

I made the statement here the other day that if "Old Hickory" Jackson were living he would not hesitate to act in a situation of this kind, and a Republican paper—the official organ of the Republican Party, the National Republican, of March 22, 1924—attacked me in its columns. It says:

Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, leader of the Democratic mud-gun battalion in the United States Senate, has asked the question, "What would 'Old Hickory' say if he were here?" The National Republican herewith gives the answer in the precise words of "Old Hickory" himself.

On March 28, 1834, the then President of the United States—Andrew Jackson, "Old Hickory"—having removed from office the Secretary of the Treasury—

The President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, made a statement regarding a resolution passed by the Senate condemning him not for failing to remove a Cabinet officer but for removing the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, it is nice to have a paper like this call you "the leader of the mud-gun battalion." It shows that they have felt my sword point, and I can assure them that they are going to feel it a good many more times, and they have also felt the sword points of the other members of the battalion. So when they single you out and mention you in an attack like this you may know that you have been operating on them and bringing great discomfort to them; so I appreciate the compliment.

Mr. President, I would rather have that said of me by this crooked bunch than to have them praise me as the greatest statesman who ever sat in this body. If I were ever to see such a statement from men like that about myself I would fall on my knees immediately and search my heart in an effort to find out what crooked thing I had done to cause that bunch to compliment me.

Mr. President, this very bunch would have called Patrick Henry a mud gunner. He was the eloquent man who went through the Colonies in the old days, when many were halting and hesitating about what they would do, and threw himself into the thick of the debate and said, "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death"; and schoolboys to this day quote him the country over yet and the world over.

This crowd that call me a "mud gunner" are descended from those who burned Washington in effigy in New York in the days of the Revolution. They are descended from those who fled the country and went to Europe and remained in Great Britain until liberty had been achieved, and then they, who were too pusillanimous and cowardly to remain to fight for liberty, came back and enjoyed that which they were afraid to contend for in the days of the Revolution.

Here is the Jackson resolution that the Senate passed at the time I mentioned:

Resolved, That the President, in the late Executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue (removal of the Secretary of the Treasury), has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the Constitution and laws but in derogation of both.

Here is the point I want to call attention to in that:

President Jackson went on to discuss the proposition in his reply to the Senate. Speaking about to whom the President was responsible, and so forth, he said:

Subject only to the restraints of truth and justice, the free people of the United States have the undoubted right, as individuals or collectively, orally or in writing, at such times and in such language and form as they may think proper, to discuss his official conduct and to express and promulgate their opinions concerning it.

I commend that to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Indirectly, also, his conduct may come under review of either branch of the Legislature, or in the Senate when acting in its executive capacity; and so far as the executive or legislative proceedings of these bodies may require it, it may be examined by them.

He was for free speech, and he was for these bodies performing their proper functions.

At another place he said:

But to authorize the Senate to enter on such a task—

Inquiring into the President's acts—

In its legislative capacity the inquiry must actually grow out of and tend to some legislative or executive action; and the decision, when expressed, must take the form of some appropriate legislative or executive act.

What was the situation here? We had just passed the legislative act. We passed a joint resolution condemning the leases of the oil lands. We said that they were corrupt, that the act was fraudulent, and that Denby had violated the law and set aside the established custom of the Government when he did it. After this legislative act was out of the way we recited these things, and asked the President to call on the man guilty of them to retire from the Cabinet. I submit that we were within our rights when we did it; but the President rather lectured the Senate for even suggesting it to him. The right of petition has not yet been denied the common masses of the common people of this Government. They can petition the President now, signing their names to petitions; and surely the Senate of the United States, elected by the people in the various States in the sisterhood, has the right to petition the President in the form of a resolution asking him not to do something against the best interests of the country, but to do something in the interest of good judgment and in the interest of keeping honest, clean men in office. That is the offense of which we were guilty. The Republicans who printed President Jackson's letter overlooked the things that I am reading. Continuing, he said:

But the moral influence of a solemn declaration, by a majority of the Senate, that the accused is guilty of the offense charged upon him has been as effectually secured as if the like declaration had been made upon an impeachment expressed in the same terms.

Mr. President, in that instance it was a bare majority. They condemned the President for removing a dangerous public official, a member of his Cabinet, the Secretary of the Treasury. A bare majority passed a resolution condemning the President, and he was making answer to them; but what was the case here? My recollection is that there were 91 votes in favor of our joint resolution. Does anyone remember as to that?

I do not think there was a dissenting vote in the passage of this joint resolution. My recollection is that the whole Senate unanimously voted for it. So there was no division here; and some of the President's own partisans were in that column, in the list of those who voted to ask him to take this action, when we passed the Robinson resolution.

Here is another statement which runs parallel to the situation we have here. Listen to what "Old Hickory" said, this man of the people, who is quoted to this day as saying, "By the Eternal, the people shall rule!" If this bunch that attacks us and calls us "mud gunners" were to have something to say on that line now, they would say, "The oil magnates and purse-proud plutocrats shall rule," instead of the people.

Here is what he says:

The whole executive power being vested in the President, who is responsible for its exercise, it is a necessary consequence that he should have a right to employ agents of his own choice in the performance of his duties and to discharge them when he is no longer willing to be responsible for their acts.

Mr. President, how is it with the present President? Is he willing to be responsible longer for the acts of Mr. Daugherty? "Old Hickory" says that is the measure; that is the standard to go by. If the President is willing to be responsible for his acts, let him take the responsibility. Again I say the Republican editor of this paper, whoever he was, got the wrong document and printed it here.

In strict accordance with this principle, the power of removal, which, like that of appointment, is an original executive power, is left unchecked by the Constitution in relation to all executive officers for whose conduct the President is responsible.

Mr. Daugherty is under fire. Complaint is coming from all over the country. Senators are assailing him on this floor. Members are attacking him in the House. The committee is bringing out damaging testimony every day, and still he sits at the head of the Department of Justice, refusing to retire. Jackson said it was up to the President as long as he was willing to be responsible for his conduct. Well and good.

Here is what he said in conclusion:

The President is the direct representative of the American people, but the Secretaries are not.

Meaning members of the Cabinet.

If the Secretary of the Treasury be independent of the President in the execution of the laws, then is there no direct responsibility to the people in that important branch of this Government to which is committed the care of the national finances?

Now, listen:

And it is in the power of the Bank of the United States or any other corporation, body of men, or individuals, if a Secretary shall be found to accord with them in opinion, or can be induced in practice to promote their views, to control through him the whole action of the Government (so far as it is exercised by his department), in defiance of the Chief Magistrate elected by the people and responsible to them.

Mr. President, what has been shown here? President Jackson was right. He ought to have removed this man. The situation in many respects was different. In the other instance the Senate was moving to ask the Chief Executive to remove a Cabinet officer. Why? Because the Senate had found that he had done something born in corruption and fraud, in violation of the law of the land, and against the fixed policy of the country. If that is not enough to cause a lawmaking body to ask the President to take action, I should like to have some Senator suggest to me what would be good cause for action. What did President Jackson say? He said that if a Secretary of the Treasury could be controlled by the United States Bank or other interests at that time, and the President had no control over him to remove him, the people would be helpless and that those interests could control the finances of the country.

What have we now? We have testimony here to the effect that an agent with the knowledge and consent of the Department of Justice was sent into the various States of this Union to see Federal district attorneys and Federal district judges; for what purpose? To see if arrangements could be made for these people to violate the law and not be punished, so that they could make thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

As they were journeying around the country to corrupt district attorneys and corrupt district judges in order that they might carry on their criminal practice, the head of the Department of Justice was as silent as the tomb. Is there any testimony to the effect that he tried to stop it? Not one scintilla.

Mr. Quimby, you are the owner of these fight films?

Yes, sir.

Was any injunction ever issued to stop you?

No, sir.

Mr. President, that is an awful situation. The man whose duty it is to sit at the head of this great department, to see that the law is enforced, to see that criminals the country over are apprehended and punished, what is he doing? We are told that his friends and agents are going to the temple of justice and trying to corrupt those who are sworn to administer justice, and some district attorneys were satisfied, they tell us, and some judges, too, it would seem from the testimony, were satisfied, and no real prosecutions were had. One judge was so hostile, the witness states, and so angry when they sought to corrupt him, that they got away from there in a hurry, they did not get any comfort from him; therefore, they did not violate the law in that State.

Senators, these are terrible disclosures. This editorial in the Philadelphia paper calls attention to the fact that Jess Smith killed himself in Mr. Daugherty's apartment, and that he had willed Mr. Daugherty some of the estate he had left behind. Still, these foul and pusillanimous papers are assailing Senators for daring to bring these things out.

Senators who are shocked at these terrible disclosures are criticized and condemned because they do not hush and let the Republican Party have smooth sailing in its efforts to force upon the country another four years of corruption and scandal and crime.

Mr. President, the truth must be known. A political party ought to be held responsible for its acts from the time it takes control of the Government until it goes out of power. No party should and no party can escape that responsibility. Whenever the Democratic Party comes into power I want that party held responsible for the conduct of the President, of his Cabinet, of the Democratic Congress, and of Democratic officials the country over. If my party does not conduct the affairs of the Government in such a way as to commend it to the judgment and favor of the people whose Government this is, it ought to be driven out of power; and if my party should forget its oath and should forget its training and its traditions and follow off false gods, and do what the Republican Party has done, it ought to be driven out of power, scorned and lashed from power.

Here we find the Republican Party, puny, whining, whimpering around, trying to hush up discussion and saying that the Senate is hysterical, that we have hysteria down here. I imagine they would say, "What if they did sell all the oil reserves of the Nation? What if they did leave the Government without a gallon of oil to fight some day to save the life of the Nation? What if they did sell hundreds of millions of dollars worth of oil? What of it? What if they did corrupt district attorneys and district Federal judges, barter justice, and sell immunity from prosecution? What if they did refund millions of money to big taxpayers and drive the poor man to the wall and sell his home for taxes? What of it?"

Mr. President, they will find "what of it." There are enough men and women in this country who have such courage and conviction, who have such an abiding love for right principles, that when they are heard from there will be a new order of things in the Capital of this Nation. If the things which are going on here now are not changed, if they are not destroyed outright, this Government can not survive.

Every public man who has dared to fight predatory interests in the past has been assailed and denounced as a demagogue or Bolshevik. What do I care for their denunciation of me when I stand and fight for the liberties of the people, the preservation of free institutions, for clean conduct in governmental affairs, for honest officials at the Capital of the Nation.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, is in the Chamber. I do not want to delay the consideration of the appropriation bill, but I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not give us some information as to when the Muscle Shoals bill passed by the House may be considered? I know he is doing his utmost in the matter and that his committee has been hard at work, but I wanted to ask him about this matter, as the farmers are deeply interested in the completion of the Muscle Shoals project so they may obtain cheaper fertilizers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Georgia, I will say that it will be taken up by the committee, in my judgment, just as soon as the committee can consider it. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been meeting every day since Congress began, with the exception, I think, of about four days. We have ahead of us now at least one bill besides the one on which we are having hearings, which we have agreed to take up, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] was talking just to-day about a bill, unique in its character, I think something new along agricultural lines, but if it will work out as the Senator from South Carolina has outlined it, it will be something of a great improvement in the handling of agricultural products, including, particularly, cotton, in which the Senator from Georgia is himself interested.

I express no opinion about the Muscle Shoals bill. I have not examined it. I have been waited on by quite a good many people who are demanding a hearing on it. I expect to lay it before the committee, and inasmuch as it touches directly the present agricultural situation, I think we ought to take it up just as soon as we can possibly reach it. The committee will not take any recess, it will not take any rest, it will keep on going every day, and it will get to the Muscle Shoals matter just as soon as it possibly can. There is no doubt but that the bill will be properly and fully considered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I know the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been busy ever since this session began; but in regard to the so-called Dial bill, to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred, I hope the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will consider the Muscle Shoals matter first, and before anything else is considered, after they get through with the bill now before them. There is no doubt but that a majority of Senators would like to have the Muscle Shoals question settled ahead of the matter suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, or any other new measure, and I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator from Nebraska that there will be no delay about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in this connection I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that day before yesterday the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and myself took up the matter of the Muscle Shoals development with the committee, mentioned our interest in the Ford offer to the chairman of the committee, and told him how anxious we were to get it up at an early date for consideration. My understanding then was that the forestry bill was pending, and that they wanted to get that out of the way first. We hope to take the Ford offer up immediately following that. We will work to that end, and I may say to my friend from Georgia that we will leave no stone unturned in our efforts to get early and favorable action upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, of course those who are opposed to the development of Muscle Shoals are going to try to delay it by bringing in new offers, and doing everything else they possibly can to keep it in the committee and delay it, hoping Congress may adjourn before it is disposed of, but I know the Senator from Nebraska, as well as other Senators, members of the Agricultural Committee, will not allow that.

The people of my section are more interested in this legislation than almost any measure before Congress, and I sincerely hope there may be no unnecessary delay. I visited Muscle Shoals last fall and was assured by those in charge that the plant would be ready next year, and I think Congress should dispose of the matter during this session. It means cheaper fertilizers for the farmers who are now in such financial distress and we should give them every assistance possible.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF—ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN FUNDS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] a few moments ago called attention to a bill now pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. On its face the bill is very intriguing and commends itself to many persons. However, there are questions both national and international in character, which are involved and deserve careful consideration before this bill is passed. I rise not for the purpose of combating the general purpose of the bill but to call the attention of the author of the bill and the chairman of the committee [Mr. NORRIS] to some important international questions which must be considered.

In the first place, Mr. President, property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian has been pledged by the German Government for the liquidation of claims of American nationals as they may be determined by the Mixed Claims Commission. The German Government has exercised the sovereign power, which belongs to all governments, to expropriate the property of its nationals. I do not go so far as to say that it has expropriated the corpus of the property, but it has expropriated the corpus for the time being, and the use of it for an indefinite period, and perhaps perpetually.

The Government having expropriated it and placed it in our hands as bailee or as custodian charged or impressed with certain obligations and restrictions, manifestly we may not dispose of the property, even though benefits might inure to the advantage of German nationals who may have an equitable interest in the property.

The constitution of the German Empire authorized the expropriation of property by the Government. The Republic of Germany has embodied in its constitution provisions authorizing the Government to exercise the right of eminent domain and to take the property, both real and personal, of its nationals for public use.

If the Government may take the fee of the property, the corpus of the property, for public use, obviously it may take the use of the property for a limited or for an indefinite period. If it may confiscate, so to speak, the body of the property, it may confiscate the use of the property, or any lesser part of the property than the entire fee or the entire ownership.

Under the treaty of Versailles Germany exercised its undoubted rights to expropriate the property of its nationals which was then in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian of the United States. It did exercise that right. It took that property, which was then in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, by virtue of American statutes and in virtue of a treaty between the Government of Germany and the United States; agreed to leave it in the hands of the United States until Germany made suitable arrangements to pay whatever sums might be found to be due to American nationals from the German Government.

The Alien Property Custodian now holds such property in virtue of a statute of Congress or in virtue of the treaty which was negotiated between the United States and the German Government; he holds it as trustee, or as a bailee. When Congress legislated and authorized the seizure of the property of German nationals found within the United States it was solemnly declared upon the floor of the House and the Senate that the property was to be held in trust. It was understood by Congress that when the war was over the property would be returned to its owners. No public official of the United States would have dared to espouse a cause which contemplated confiscation of the property of German nationals for any purpose. The United States for more than 100 years has led the fight for the immunity of private property of nationals of belligerent nations. We have stated that the property of American nationals upon the high seas, where not contraband, ought not to be subject to seizure in time of war. We have contended for a theory and practice more in consonance with civilization and with the development of a spirit of comity in all international relations.

So I say that when we passed the act of sequestration, we, in effect, said that the property seized was to be held in trust, not confiscated, not to be applied to the payment of the claims of the American Government or American nationals against Germany. However, when the treaty of Versailles was written Germany exercised, as I have stated, her undoubted right to say "The German Government will expropriate the use of the property of its nationals and will leave it in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian until the Mixed Claims Commission which may be established shall determine what is due to American nationals by the transgressions of the German Government against American nationals and until suitable provisions have been made to pay all just claims of American nationals."

When the treaty of Berlin was ratified nearly two years afterwards between the United States and the Berlin Government the same provision was placed in the treaty, but in the treaty it was stipulated that the property should be held by the Alien Property Custodian until the Mixed Claims Commission should report and Germany had made provision to pay any judgments that might be awarded against the German Government. It therefore becomes clear that the property, or at least the use of it, does not belong to the German nationals. I regret it. I regret that Germany seized, under the power of eminent domain, the property of its own nationals, because I have believed ever since the war was over that the property ought to have been restored to the German nationals; and in 1919 I offered a bill in the Senate to restore that property regardless of the claims which American nationals or the American Government might have against German nationals or against the German Government. I was unwilling that the United States should be charged with having confiscated the property of the nationals of any country who had invested their property in virtue of treaty provisions in the United States.

So the German Government having taken over the property, at least the use of it, we can not legislate respecting it without the consent of the German Government. If we should tomorrow pass an act of the character indicated by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] and organize a corporation and use that property for commercial purposes as indicated by the Senator's bill, without the consent of the German Government, the German Government could say to us, "We put into your hands as bailee three or four hundred million dollars to guarantee the payment of claims of American nationals against the German Government. You have squandered the assets so placed in your hands as bailee. We therefore claim a credit pro tanto upon all judgments that may be entered by the Mixed Claims Commission against the German Government."

Mr. DIAL and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I first yield to the Senator from South Carolina, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DIAL. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that my bill does not change the existing situation in that respect at all. It provides merely for the use. Perhaps the Senator has overlooked the idea that the consent of Germany to these things must be obtained. If they do not consent there is no way to compel them to do so. Therefore I fear the Senator has not studied the measure carefully on that point.

Mr. KING. If we attempt to control the use of it or to use it, that is a violation of the terms under which the ballment was created and to that extent is an infringement upon its title even if we transmute it from bonds into cash and from cash into stocks which are employed for commercial purposes. The bill of the Senator if enacted into law and executed would be tantamount to a conversion of the property.

Mr. DIAL. By consent of all the parties in interest.

Mr. KING. Of course, if the consent of every owner and the consent of the German Government is obtained, and if the German Government will waive its rights as an owner of the use, if not the corpus of the property, and consent that the terms of the bailment may be abrogated, a different question is presented.

Mr. DIAL. I do not want to mislead the Senator. I do not mean the consent of the former owner, but the consent of the German Government itself, and, of course, of the Alien Property Custodian, if that be necessary.

Mr. KING. I yield now to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I am very much interested in this matter for two reasons; first, because, from the slight examination I have made of the bill, it is a very unique proposition. If it can be worked out, I have no doubt that vast good would come to the agricultural people of the country as well as to the people of foreign countries with which we would do business with this money. I have not tried to analyze it yet, but the thing that struck me right away was that we have no honorable right to use this money that is not ours unless we use it with the consent of the people to whom it may belong.

I understand the fund is being held as a guaranty only for the losses that our nationals may have sustained by the acts of the German Government. When those losses, if any, are ascertained and paid for, whatever balance is left in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian goes not to the German Government or the Austrian Government or the Hungarian Government but to the nationals of those Governments whose property has been seized by our Government. Now, this question arose at once in my mind—

Mr. KING. But the Senator will see that the assertion of the right of eminent domain was exercised by the German Government in taking the use of the property, if it did not take the corpus. It said, "We take the use of that property for an indefinite period under the power of eminent domain and we leave it with the Alien Property Custodian and make him our bailee." There probably is a divided ownership of the property. The German Government has an interest in it, asserted under the power of eminent domain, and the owners of the property have an interest in it, equitable or otherwise. We can not determine that until we know exactly the position which Germany is going to take with respect to the property.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the question I wanted to ask the Senator: Would we clear ourselves and be acting in a perfectly equitable way if we use this money, even with the consent of the German Government?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I am speaking now of the Government. If it is required, furthermore, not only in order to act honorably—and I assume nobody would want to take any other course—if we provide in the law that it should be necessary before any of this money could be used that the consent not only of the German Government should be secured but of the German nationals to whom the money might ultimately have to be paid, would that relieve it of all question, assuming we could get the consent from those two sources?

Mr. KING. I will say frankly to the Senator that the matter was called to my attention a moment ago by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I did not hear all of his discussion. I came into the Chamber when he was speaking. I was prompted to make these rather desultory observations because of a statement which he made which seemed to me did not recognize the restrictions under which title to the property was held.

I am inclined to think, and I am merely thinking aloud without having carefully reflected, that if we could get the consent of all owners of the property freely expressed, and of all persons who may have any liens or interest in the property, as well as the consent of the German Government expressed by a proper and solemn declaration, as solemn as the treaty itself—perhaps it should be a statute—then, speaking as a mere question of right, we might have the right to carry out the plan suggested by the Senator from South Carolina.

The question of policy is one as to which I express no opinion, but I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that much of that property is held by estates or by corporations. It is impressed with various trusts. A multitude of people in Germany may be interested in one trust or one piece of property. We might have to get the consent of the courts, of minor heirs, of insurance companies, of hundreds and thousands of individuals and organizations and corporations and partnerships and trustees, so that it would be practically impossible to clear the title and to secure consent. It would take years.

We would have to bring an action in equity, perhaps in Germany, and bring into court all persons having an interest and then get a decree of the court authorizing and permitting the thing to be done.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is assuming in that statement that we would have to get the consent of all of those people. I do not know what the facts are, but I understand that some of the items making up the large fund now held by the Alien Property Custodian are very large and that there could be used a large amount of this property by getting the consent of a comparatively few corporations or individuals. I do not know what the facts are in regard to it, though I have been told that is true by persons before whom I have laid practically the same proposition which the Senator has now so much better laid before the Senate. I have been told that that is the case; that in carrying out the idea there would be no difficulty, and that there is no intention of those behind the bill to use any of the money in a manner that would in any way violate any duty that the Government owes as custodian and trustee of the fund. As I said to the Senator awhile ago, I do not know whether or not it can be worked out, and at first blush I cast it aside, as I had cast aside hundreds of propositions which had been presented to me in the last year or so to relieve the agricultural situation. I thought there was nothing in it. It struck me, however, when I went into the matter a little further and talked to others about it, without ever attempting to go to the bottom of it, that it was well worthy of investigation. If it can be done, if we can devise a scheme by which this fund which is now lying idle may be utilized in promoting trade in agricultural products between this country and the countries of the nationals who really own the fund or are expected to own it in the end, in my judgment, it would be a wonderful thing; and because I think it would be so wonderful I am in favor of the committee examining the matter, going into it, and seeing whether we can reach any solution. We have been rather unsuccessful so far in getting any relief which, in my judgment, would be of very much benefit to agriculture in this country.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Utah that last summer, when the case of the Alien Property Custodian against the Allied Chemical Foundation was tried in the district court of Delaware, Mr. Miller, the Alien Property Custodian, testified, in substance, on the stand upon cross-examination, that if he were able to get back into his hands as custodian the several patents for which he was suing in that case he would eventually, after the adjustment of the fund in his hands, turn those patents over to individual owners in Germany. He kept protesting all the way through his testimony that he was the custodian, the trustee of this fund. If the power is given to obtain a repossession of those patents, which had been sold by a prior custodian, for the purpose eventually of turning them back to the owners, with his continued reiteration of his trusteeship, I do not see how he could possibly undertake in this case to father this measure, thrust aside the terms of that trust, and let the property go out of his hands under any guaranty of legislative action, of court action, or otherwise, he being a continuing trustee. Nor do I see how we, having created his office, having created the possibility of his becoming trustee and therefore having made him trustee, can undertake at this time to turn around and allow him to do otherwise with these trust funds than the original act provided. That is the suggestion I have to make to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Delaware has stated the matter very clearly. In brief, the proposition is this: For many years we had treaties with Germany. The first one was negotiated with Prussia in 1787—more than a hundred years ago—and another treaty was negotiated in 1832, as I recall, or 1837. Under the terms of those treaties—and I might say that their terms were perpetuated and existed between the United States and the German Government when the World War broke out—the nationals of the United States had the right to invest in Germany and German nationals had the right to invest in the United States and to come here freely subject, of course, to the immigration laws. Under those treaties German nationals invested in the United States hundreds of millions of dollars.

When the United States entered the World War Congress passed a law authorizing the sequestration of this property. It was stated in solemn manner, however, that that property was to be held by the United States as trustee; and it was clearly indicated in the debate, both in the House and in the Senate, that when the war was over the property would be returned to its owners.

When the war was over, however, we did not return the property. I introduced a bill in 1919 providing for the restoration of the property, which slumbered in the committee. The sentiment was against it, and I could get no favorable action. At the last session, in a spirit of magnanimity and belated justice, we did enact a law for the restoration of property aggregating between forty-five million and fifty million dollars.

The Allen Property Custodian holds that property either as trustee for the German nationals or trustee for the German Government or both. It is clear that it would be a violation of all of the obligations resting upon the United States if we should take that property, convert it or change its form without the consent of every person and every government that has the remotest interest therein. So I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that the legislation proposed should be carefully scrutinized. Otherwise, we shall be charged in the years to come with a breach of international duty and of solemn obligations, and we may lose property or lose guaranties under which we may require the German Government to pay the claims of American nationals for the transgressions of Germany during and before the World War.

During the delivery of Mr. KING's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of permitting the Senate to continue consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill now before it.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator, and hope permission may be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. KING's speech,

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I have been very much interested in his bill, as other Senators have, for the able Senator from South Carolina always has practical suggestions to offer. I want to know, however, if he will not agree not to press his bill before the Agriculture Committee until after action shall have been taken on the Muscle Shoals proposition by that committee. I know the Senator, in common with other Senators from the South, is greatly interested in the Muscle Shoals measure, as it means cheaper fertilizers for the farmers and makes our Government independent of Chile nitrates, which are necessary in war time in the manufacture of munitions.

Mr. DIAL. I am greatly interested in the Muscle Shoals bill. The people of my State need a great deal of fertilizer, and they need cheap fertilizer. I hope that the Muscle Shoals bill will provide it. I have no objection to giving way to the Muscle Shoals bill, if a promise can be made as to early action on it. I do not wish, however, to lie down here and go to sleep and accomplish nothing. I think we ought to go ahead and pass some real legislation for the benefit of the country, and especially the agricultural interests.

Mr. HARRIS. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry says there will be no delay in the consideration of the Muscle Shoals measure, and I sincerely hope the matter may soon be disposed of by the Senate.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Legislative," on page 2, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Ida G. Nelson, sole surviving child and heir at law of Hon. Knute Nelson, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

To pay Paul Dillingham, sole heir at law of Hon. William P. Dillingham, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to insert:

To pay Edward D. Nicholson and Ruth Nicholson Melville, sole surviving children and heirs at law of Hon. Samuel D. Nicholson, late a Senator from the State of Colorado, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 12, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation for 1924, for compensation for clerical assistance to Senators not chairmen of committees, to Henry G. Telgan for services as clerk rendered Hon. MAGNUS JOHNSON, Senator from the State of Minnesota, at the rate of $2,500 per annum, and increase of compensation at the rate of $240 per annum from July 17 to 31, 1923.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 19, to insert:

For payment to James R. Wick for services rendered the Committee on the District of Columbia during the investigation of traffic conditions in the District of Columbia, from November 10, 1923, to February 10, 1924, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to insert:

For additional salary of the Deputy Sergeant at Arms and storekeeper of the Senate for the fiscal year 1924, $860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to insert:

For stationery for Senators and the President of the Senate, including stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 6, to insert:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

For expenses of the Public Buildings Commission, including an allowance of $20 per month, from October 1, 1923, for the use of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, and the General Accounting Office is authorized to credit the account of the disbursing officer of the said commission with $180 for expenditures heretofore made for such purpose, and to remain available until expended, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Architect of the Capitol," on page 5, after line 19, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For construction of an additional suite of rooms, including personal and other services and printing, as authorized by the Senate Committee on Rules, $12,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have here an amendment to correct an error in the amendment as printed, striking out the words "and printing," and inserting "painting and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The PRINCIPAL CLERK. On page 5, line 22, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "and printing," and in line 21, after the word "including," to insert the words "painting and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, after line 23, to insert:

For the purchase of rugs and repair of old rugs for the Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 22, to insert:

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY DEPARTMENT BUILDINGS.

Of the appropriation for salaries, office of the Superintendent State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, provided by the executive and independent offices appropriation act for the fiscal year 1924, approved February 13, 1923, $75,000 shall be available for the erection of a temporary boiler plant for heating the Navy and Munitions Buildings and other Government buildings in the vicinity of such buildings, including expenses incident to the setting of the boilers, the procurement of oil-burning equipment, and so forth, and shall remain available therefor until June 30, 1925. Any balance of the appropriation for fuel, light, and miscellaneous items provided by the aforementioned act for the same office shall be available for use in connection with the erection of the temporary heating plant referred to above if expended during the fiscal year for which it was appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "District of Columbia, contingent and miscellaneous expenses," on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

For rent of offices of the recorder of deeds, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

PUBLIC CONVENIENCE STATIONS.

For maintenance of public convenience stations, including compensation of necessary employees, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 10, to insert:

PARKS.

Kling Valley Boulevard and Highway: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the land that may be necessary for boulevard and highway purposes to preserve the Kling Valley Road, as said land is designated on the map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, known as Kling Valley Park Map No. 1002; and for the purposes stated there is hereby appropriated $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That should the said commissioners decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (Stat. L., vol. 26, ch. 837): Provided further, That the said commissioners are authorized to reduce the area to be acquired as indicated on said map, where, by reason of improvements constructed, or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgment, the public interest may require: Provided, That said lands, when acquired, shall form part of the park system of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture," on page 17, after line 2, to insert:

General expenses, Office of Experiment Stations: For necessary expenses to repair damage by typhoon to buildings, fences, etc., of the agricultural experiment station on the island of Guam, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 20, to insert:

Protection of the so-called Oregon and California railroad lands and Coos Bay wagon road lands: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against and check fires upon the land revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916, and the lands known as the Coos Bay wagon road lands involved in the case of Southern Oregon Co. v. United States (No. 2711) in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit, $11,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 6, to insert:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Preventing spread of moths: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy moth by conducting field-control operations in the New England States, New York, and New Jersey, in cooperation with the States concerned, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere and all other necessary expenses, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Labor, Bureau of Immigration," on page 32, after line 13, to insert:

For refund to French Line, New York City, of immigration fine erroneously assessed and collected in the case of the alien Mordechai Waintraub, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

TRANSPORTING REMAINS OF DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS, CONSULAR ASSISTANTS, AND CLERKS TO THEIR HOMES FOR INTERMENT.

For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1923, $1,675.74.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 15, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL RADIOTELEGRAPHIC CONVENTION.

For an additional amount to meet the share of the United States, as a party to the International Radiotelegraphic Conventions heretofore signed, of the expenses of the radiotelegraphic service of the International Bureau of the Telegraphic Union at Berne, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1922 and 1923, $2,439.76; for 1923 and 1924, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 39, to insert:

EMBASSY BUILDING AND GROUNDS, PARIS, FRANCE.

For the acquisition in accordance with the acts approved February 17, 1911, and March 2, 1923, of a site and building or buildings in Paris, France, to be used as the American Embassy, and for the repair, alteration, and furnishing of said building or buildings, $150,000, in addition to the amount already appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL RAILWAY CONGRESS.

To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 10, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

For an additional amount to meet the share of the United States of the expenses for the calendar year 1922 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague July 29, 1899, $575.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY BUREAU.

For an additional amount to meet the annual share of the United States for the maintenance of the International Sanitary Bureau, $154.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 21, to insert:

CAPE SPARTEL LIGHT, COAST OF MOROCCO.

For annual proportion of expenses of Cape Spartel and Tangier Light on the coast of Morocco, including loss by exchange, $136.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 40, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE AT ROME, ITALY.

For expenses of delegates to the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, to be held at Rome during the year 1924, $10,045, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, and for the payment of additional quotas of the United States incident to the admission of Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands to membership in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, $5,000; in all, $15,045; to remain available until June 30, 1925: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for travel pay of any person unless said person travels on United States ships.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome has done a splendid work. I happen to be familiar with what it has accomplished. If a personal reference may be pardoned, when I was Director of the Census and Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce Mr. David Lubin, who was entirely responsible for the organization of this institute and has done great work, was in Washington and had a meeting of representatives of the different departments of the Government interested in this work. I was chairman of the committee of the Government department representatives, and I took a great interest in it.

Heretofore the United States has sent only three delegates to this institute. The sending of nine, to my mind, is a waste of money and is simply to let several men have a junket.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I was going to ask if we had not better lay this amendment aside now and take it up at the end of the bill. There is a rather small attendance here now, and we may want to call in other Senators.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be glad to do so, and will discuss the matter later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Federal Farm Loan Bureau," on page 42, after line 6, to insert:

For traveling expenses of the members of the board and its officers and employees; per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4; and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including books of reference and maps, and exclusive of stationery and printing and binding, payable from assessments upon Federal and joint-stock land banks, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue," on page 42, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into the Treasury as internal-revenue collections, under the provisions of the act approved May 27, 1908, $242,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 7, to insert:

MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Boise, Idaho, assay office: For incidental and contingent expenses, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 19, to insert:

MARINE HOSPITALS.

Key West, Fla., Marine Hospital: For wells, pump, pump house, electric feeders, pneumatic-pressure tank, piping and fittings, to provide water supply for plumbing and for fire protection, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judgments, United States Courts," on page 51, line 13, before the word "House," to insert "Senate Document No. 69 and," so as to read:

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," as amended by the Judicial Code, approved March 3, 1911, certified to Congress during the present session by the Attorney General in Senate Document No. 69 and House Document No. 146, and which have not been appealed, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judgments, United States Courts," on page 51, after line 15, to insert:

Under the Department of Commerce, $7,500;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 17, to insert:

Under the Department of Labor, $3,074.30;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 21, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$10,331.14" and to insert "$12,381.44," so as to read:

Under the War Department, $12,381.44;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$50,355.93" and to insert "$62,980.23," so as to read:

Under the United States Shipping Board, $4,782.47; in all, $62,980.23, together with such additional sums as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 22, before the word "House," to insert "Senate Document No. 70 and," so as to read:

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to Congress during the present session in Senate Document No. 70 and House Document No. 147, excluding the judgment in favor of the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Co., namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, at the end of line 1, to increase the appropriations for payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, under the Navy Department, from "$454,294.17" to "$547,837.05."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the rest of the bill consists of judgments of courts and adjustments of accounts which have been settled and which merely require the appropriation of the money. Unless there is some desire to have them read we can accept them as they are, because there is no question as to their origin or their settlement, I think; but, of course, I will conform to whatever the pleasure of the Senate may be. I have, however, some amendments here to offer in the meantime.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether the amendments of the Senate committee have been passed upon?

Mr. WARREN. The amendments of the Senate committee have been passed upon; and there is one which I think the Senator will wish to have reconsidered, as it was agreed to in some haste. I am sending to the desk, however, a matter that I am instructed by the committee to offer, which may be out of order, and I simply present it for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 31, line 5, after the word "years," it is proposed to insert:

And amounts heretofore and hereafter appropriated under this title shall be available for expenses properly chargeable thereunder authorized or approved by the Attorney General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

For the employment of special legal services for the Public Utilities Commission, as authorized by paragraph 91, section 8, of the act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," to continue available until June 30, 1925, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 43, line 22, after the numerals "1925" and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That any part of this appropriation may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for repairs or alterations to, or for equipping and placing in commission, vessels or boats transferred from the Navy Department to the Treasury Department for the use of the Coast Guard.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator if that is the appropriation of some $13,000,000 for the buying of boats to be employed in the enforcement of the prohibition act?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there are appropriations other than the $13,000,000 that the Senator speaks about; but this matter of changing the boats is undoubtedly for that purpose, either under appropriations that are made in the regular way, annually, or under that particular amendment. It simply provides that he may spend a small amount to alter boats or to buy new ones.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator, with respect to the very large item under the head of Coast Guard, nearly $14,000,000, whether the question was considered of utilizing the boats which are now owned by the Navy, and which with perhaps but slight repairs would be available for the purpose desired?

Mr. WARREN. It not only was considered, but it is so provided, and right in line with that is the amendment which has just been read. In order to make these boats useful it is necessary to have some that are very swift. There are some of these Navy boats that can be made useful that are not sufficiently swift to overtake others within the limit. Consequently, these small craft that are provided for in the appropriation will be so equipped as to make perhaps 30 or 35 knots, where these other slower vessels could not do the work. The proposition is to use everything that the Navy has that can be spared for this new use, and, as I have said, the amendment at the desk deals with repairs. Of course we shall increase the speed of the boats, because then they will be in perfect order. The Senator does not object, does he, to the amendment that I have just sent up?

Mr. KING. I confess that I did not understand its full significance. If the Senator will explain its purpose I shall be very glad.

Mr. WARREN. That is the purpose; to put those boats of the Navy in condition for this work of the Coast Guard.

Mr. LODGE. What is the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. It is no appropriation at all in itself. It simply provides that of one of the appropriations made some of the money may be used in this way.

Mr. LODGE. I have not looked into this carefully, but I do know that at the close of the war, and at the time of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, we had a larger number of destroyers than any other power. We had more than Japan and England together, because we set aside all other building, as that was the weak point, and, as the Senator will probably recall, our allies wanted us to build that class of ships.

Mr. KING. I remember.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what boats are referred to, but we have a great many more destroyers than we can possibly use; they are out of balance with the rest of the Navy, and most of those boats which are built must be new boats. I have always understood they were 30-knot boats. They are the last word in destroyers.

Mr. KING. That was my understanding.

Mr. LODGE. They are 1,100-ton boats, and very fast. I do not know whether those are the boats they plan to use or not, but they are extremely fast.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think I can tell the Senator about those.

Mr. LODGE. No doubt the Senator can.

Mr. HALE. The plan is to take 20 of the older destroyers of the Navy, which are now out of commission, and turn them over to the Coast Guard for their use. Those are the smaller of the destroyers, and most of the 20 boats are destroyers of 750 tons, with a speed of from 30 to 32 knots an hour. They are boats about 238 feet long, I think. In addition to those 750-ton boats, there are also a few boats of 1,000 tons, which are to be used, which have a little higher speed than the 30 to 32 knot boats. None of the more modern destroyers, which have a speed of 35 knots and which are now in the first line, are to be used; but, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, we have a large number of older destroyers which are now out of commission, and some of which can well be used for this purpose.

Mr. LODGE. But the more recently built boats are very fast, as the Senator from Maine knows. They are about 1,100-ton boats.

Mr. HALE. They are 1,200-ton boats.

Mr. LODGE. I thought we had a great surplus of those.

Mr. HALE. We have a surplus of those also, which are kept out of commission.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Maine if it is not the intention to build new ships with this $12,000,000 or more?

Mr. HALE. I think not at all. Certainly no large ships.

Mr. KING. Is there any limitation?

Mr. HALE. I have not seen any limitation. My information is simply about the ships of the Navy.

Mr. WARREN. Would it not simplify matters to have the paragraph of the bill as it passed the House, commencing on page 43, under the head of "Coast Guard," read for the information of the Senate?

Let me say that at the end of that paragraph there should be read the last one of the amendments I offered, so that the Senate may have that in mind. Before that is read, I want to say that it does become a part of that $12,000,000 item as an amendment.

Mr. KING. It is obvious that under this the Secretary has the right to construct boats. He can spend that $12,000,000 in that way.

Mr. WARREN. Would it not be better to have the amendment read?

Mr. KING. I would be glad to have the section read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Following the amendment heretofore agreed to, on page 43, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer to the Treasury Department, for the use of the Coast Guard, such vessels of the Navy, with their outfits and armaments, as can be spared by the Navy and as are adapted to the use of the Coast Guard.

"The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized, in his discretion, temporarily to appoint in the Coast Guard not exceeding 2 captains, 15 commanders, 25 lieutenant commanders, 45 lieutenants, 42 lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns, 1 commander (engineering), 11 lieutenant commanders (engineering), 10 lieutenants (engineering), 40 lieutenants (junior grade) (engineering) and ensigns (engineering), in addition to the number now allowed by law in those grades; said temporary appointments shall continue in force only until otherwise directed by the President or until Congress shall amend or repeal the same.

"All original temporary appointments shall be made in grades not above that of lieutenant in the line or lieutenant (engineering) in the Engineer Corps; Provided, That the original temporary appointments authorized by this act shall be made only after the candidate in each case has satisfactorily passed such examinations as the President may prescribe; the maximum age limit shall be 40 years for original temporary appointment.

"Names of all persons who receive original temporary appointments as commissioned officers of the Coast Guard, other than as chief warrant officers, under the authority contained in this act shall be placed upon a special list of officers of the Coast Guard as distinguished from the list of regular officers of the Coast Guard as now authorized by law. Officers on said special list may be promoted, in the discretion of the President and without regard to length of service, to grades not above lieutenant or lieutenant (engineering) on said special list, or may be reduced in grade in the discretion of the President, provided that the number of additional temporary officers as authorized in this act for any grade be not exceeded; Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, call for the resignation of, or may dismiss, any officer on said special list for unfitness or misconduct; Provided further, That no person on said special list shall be entitled to any right of retirement on account of his status as a temporary officer of the Coast Guard.

"Officers holding permanent commissions in the Coast Guard may be temporarily advanced in order of seniority to fill any of the temporary commissioned positions authorized by this act. The permanent commissions of officers thus temporarily advanced shall not be vacated by reason of such temporary advancement nor shall said officers be prejudiced in their relative lineal rank in regard to their promotion as provided for in existing law; Provided, That no officer who shall receive a temporary promotion under this act shall be entitled to pay or allowances except under such temporary promotion; Provided further, That upon the termination of the temporary promotions authorized by this act the regular officers so promoted shall revert to the rank and grade from which temporarily promoted unless such officers in the meantime, in accordance with law, become entitled to promotion to a higher grade or rank in the permanent Coast Guard, in which case they shall revert to said higher grade or rank, and shall, after passing the prescribed examinations, be commissioned accordingly.

"Any regular officer of the Coast Guard temporarily promoted in grade or rank in accordance with the provisions of this act who shall be retired from active service under his permanent commission while holding such temporary grade or rank, shall be placed on the retired list with the grade or rank to which his position in the permanent Coast Guard at the date of his retirement would entitle him.

"The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized, in his discretion, temporarily to appoint in the Coast Guard not exceeding 25 chief warrant officers who shall have the same rank, pay, and allowances as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed for chief warrant officers of the Navy; Provided, That such temporary appointments shall be made, under regulations prescribed by the President, from the list of warrant officers of the regular Coast Guard who are in the service at the time of the passage of this act; said temporary appointments shall continue in force only until otherwise directed by the President or until Congress shall amend or repeal the same. The warrants of warrant officers thus temporarily advanced shall not be vacated by reason of their temporary appointments as chief warrant officers; Provided, That any warrant officer of the Coast Guard temporarily promoted to chief warrant officer under the authority contained in this act who shall be retired from active service while holding a temporary appointment as chief warrant officer, shall be placed on the retired list with the grade or rank to which his position as a warrant officer in the permanent Coast Guard at the date of his retirement would entitle him.

"The Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, temporarily appoint warrant officers in the Coast Guard and make special temporary enlistments, and persons thus temporarily appointed as warrant officers or thus specially enlisted shall not be entitled to any right of retirement on account of such temporary or special status.

"Nothing contained in this act relating to the Coast Guard shall operate to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Coast Guard except for the passage of this act."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is nothing in the amendment which has just been read, and which, of course, I have had no chance to examine, as it is very long, and contains numerous provisions, many of which are somewhat complicated, to indicate that the Secretary of the Treasury may not enter into the construction of ships, and consume a very large part of the appropriation of $13,000,000 for the construction of ships. The Senator from Massachusetts has very properly just stated that the Government has a large number of boats, which are of the very best, not needed by the Navy. We have a superfluous number of certain swift sea craft. My recollection is that there are nearly 210 of the boats I have in mind.

Mr. HALE. There are about 300 destroyers.

Mr. KING. So that it seems to me most absurd that we should authorize construction when we have boats which are now rotting in the harbors and deteriorating every year.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the 20 destroyers which the Coast Guard is to take over are all that they want of that class of boats. They also looked at the Eagle boats and subchasers, and they decided that they would be of no particular use to them because of their draft and because they are not fast enough boats. All they want from the Navy, I think, is the 20 destroyers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment and this provision we are now considering might very properly have been labeled "A bill to increase the number of employees in the Government service," and particularly to increase the number of officers in the Coast Guard. We are very particular here to authorize the creation of places for a multitude of new officers—captains, warrant officers, and lieutenants—hundreds of them, so far as I can see from a hasty reading of this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator probably has noticed that they are all to be temporary. For instance, this language appears:

The Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, temporarily appoint warrant officers in the Coast Guard and make special temporary enlistments, and persons thus temporarily appointed as warrant officers or thus specially enlisted shall not be entitled to any right of retirement on account of such temporary or special status.

Mr. LODGE. They have to have men to run the boats.

Mr. KING. The Senator can see that the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed 25 warrant officers, and various other officers.

Mr. WARREN. They have to have the officers temporarily to run the boats.

Mr. KING. And those in the service will have promotions by reason of the creation of these new positions.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error in that.

Mr. WARREN. The boats are not run only by captains, or by commanders. Of course, they have to have the bone and sinew of the men of lower grades.

Mr. KING. I call the Senator's attention to this provision:

Officers holding permanent commissions in the Coast Guard may be temporarily advanced in order of seniority.

This provides for the advancement of a large number of officers who are now holding commissions in the Coast Guard.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand that it opens up the number any further than is authorized by law.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that it would mean the advancement of a large number, and therefore does automatically raise them.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator probably noticed that in the World War time a man who served overseas might be a captain in the Regular Army, but might be made a lieutenant colonel, perhaps, or a major, during his service there, during the emergency, and then be sent back to his regular commissioned grade when the war was over. To prevent the permanent enlargement of the number of officers of high degree, it is much cheaper and more reasonable from every standpoint to take those of lower grade and temporarily advance them. It is more satisfactory, both to the men and to the Government.

Mr. KING. As I understand, this bill adds to the expense of the prohibition service more than $30,000,000. If I am in error, I should be glad to be advised.

Mr. WARREN. The exact amount is $12,194,900.

Mr. KING. The Senator must be in error. The Senator will find in page 43, $12,194,900; on page 44 he will find a large number of appropriations; and at the bottom of page 45 the figures $13,887,000. Does the Senator say that the $12,194,900—

Mr. WARREN. Thirteen million eight hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars is the total for the Coast Guard, but the $12,194,900 is that part which is directly appropriated for this particular purpose, which may be called, if you please, rum running on the ocean.

Mr. KING. With all due respect to the Senator, he has not answered my question.

Mr. WARREN. What was the question?

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator now if the $12,194,900 found on page 43 is included in the item of $13,887,007.07 found on page 45?

Mr. GLASS. It undoubtedly is, as may be seen by an examination of the proposed amendment printed on page 5.

Mr. WARREN. On page 45 the language is:

In all, Coast Guard, $13,887,007.07.

Mr. KING. I am not satisfied that the Senator's construction is right. It says:

For additional motor boats and their equipment for the use of the Coast Guard, etc., $12,194,900.

Mr. WARREN. This is simply the usual deficiency for the year under these subheads, but when we come to the end of the subheads the total for the Coast Guard includes all.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator gives me the assurance that the committee understands that the $12,000,000 is included as a part of the $13,000,000?

Mr. WARREN. That is my understanding and that is the understanding of the committee, I think.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, undoubtedly that is correct.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether or not this is a deficit for the current year?

Mr. WARREN. The $12,194,900 is a supplemental estimate, and is not only for the balance of the year but for the future; but the difference between that sum and the $13,887,000 is composed of the deficiencies in the various items here set forth.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator how many additional officers and employees will be added to the pay roll of the Government by virtue of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I can not tell the Senator how many. I do not suppose they could tell us at headquarters until the work is commenced. I think we shall have to trust that to the future. But with the appropriation made and the statements that have been made before the committees we have no question about it. The item could not go in as a committee amendment, as it might smack of legislation; but I can assure the Senator that it has been thoroughly digested.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator willing to appropriate without knowing the number of employees that are to be added? It seems to me the committee ought to have inquired how many additional employees are to be added to the rolls.

Mr. WARREN. We are starting a new enterprise. If the Senator is opposed to it, of course he can object, and that would cut out the particular thing we have asked for, but the $12,194,900 rests simply upon the question whether we shall undertake to carry out the law, or not. Shall we undertake to carry out the law about ending the use of wet goods, so called, and shall we protect the sea according to treaty and laws, or not? I do not wish to go into that angle of the discussion.

Mr. KING. I do not think that is a frank answer to the question which I propounded. I signified no opposition to the measure, but I do want to know the obligations we assume and how many additional employees will be added.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, the money, of course, is to furnish additional and fast boats for the Coast Guard Service in order to put down the smuggling of liquor. The boats are to be furnished, as I understand it, for the most part by the Navy Department. I do not understand that they are going to build new boats. I think they will be furnished by the Navy Department. It is almost impossible to tell beforehand just how many men will be required for a crew on each of those vessels. They must be manned, because otherwise they would be useless. The Navy has no men to spare, and the Treasury Department, which has charge of the Coast Guard, of course must have additional men in the Coast Guard for temporary service, but it gives them no place on the permanent list.

Mr. KING. I understand that, of course; but I wanted to know, if it could be determined—and the Budget committee must certainly have had it in mind—what the increase in the personnel would be.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose they could make a general estimate of about what number of additional men would be needed.

Mr. WARREN. It would be a mere guess, and a guess might make the whole matter ineffective if it were incorporated in the amendment. We have to trust to them in these matters, of course.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that the $12,000,000 of it is to be used exclusively for the purchase or the repair of boats?

Mr. WARREN. For providing the temporary help necessary. That comes out of the appropriation covered in this item.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I state that the Commerce Committee had under consideration yesterday a bill that passed the House a few days ago, the bill (H. R. 6815) to authorize a temporary increase of the Coast Guard for law enforcement? I have in my hand a favorable report which the Commerce Committee authorized me to make to the Senate. It is the same proposition as is presented in the appropriation bill, and I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be accepted. I would like to present the report out of order, but of course action upon it will be unnecessary if this item is put in the pending bill and accepted in conference. There was only one member of the committee who was opposed to the general proposition of taking vessels over from the Navy. I therefore report the bill favorably without amendment and submit a report thereon (Rept. No. 293).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EBOE in the chair). The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming in behalf of the committee, on page 43, after line 22. The amendment was agreed to.

The reading clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 54, at the end of line 3, to increase the appropriation for payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, under the Treasury Department, from "$15,840.82" to "$17,918.82."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, at the end of line 5, to increase the appropriation for payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, under the War Department, from "$869,670.94" to "$1,050,592.46."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 54, line 7, after the words "in all," to strike out "$1,439,805.93" and to insert "$1,616,348.33, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on judgment No. A-177 as specified in such judgment"; so as to read:

In all, $1,616,348.33, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on judgment No. A-177 as specified in such judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Are these amendments offered by the committee? The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. KING. Is the bill still open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator have an amendment that he desires to offer on page 18?

Mr. KING. I will ask a question first, because I am not sure that I want to offer it.

Mr. WARREN. I asked that because the item was agreed to while my attention was otherwise engaged. I will move to reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to if the Senator wishes to offer an amendment to it, because he was not present at the time it was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I find an item on page 18 containing an appropriation of $70,000 for the Bureau of Entomology. May I inquire of the Senator what number of additional employees is contemplated to be required in the District under that appropriation item?

Mr. WARREN. I would not be able to give the Senator any information upon that particular point, because it came in as a supplemental estimate after the committee closed its hearings; but we have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Director of the Budget that explains it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator accept my amendment and let it go to conference to inquire into that feature?

Mr. WARREN. Let the proposed amendment be stated.

Mr. KING. It is in my own handwriting, so I will read it. On page 18, line 14, after the numerals "$70,000," add the following:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay compensation of additional employees within the District of Columbia; And provided further, That all persons employed under this appropriation outside of the District of Columbia shall not be continued in service after said appropriation has been exhausted.

I find that in many of these appropriations there is no limitation, and they get employees on the rolls and keep them there.

Mr. WARREN. May I say to the Senator that the purpose of the appropriation is to prevent a continuance of the gypsy moth in the New England States, New York, and New Jersey, in cooperation with the States concerned, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses. I imagine that the amendment would prevent further employment of any stationary employees in the District. Whether that might injure the service or not, I am unable to say.

Mr. KING. It may be that a full investigation would demonstrate that the language ought to be somewhat modified. I ask that the Senator accept my amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. WARREN. The matter came up at the last moment. It is a Senate committee amendment, and therefore the whole matter goes to conference and, of course, the conferees can accept it all or part of it.

Mr. KING. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept it and make such disposition as a more complete examination may disclose to be desirable.

Mr. WARREN. I am willing to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah request that the vote by which the amendment on page 18 be reconsidered so that he may offer his amendment?

Mr. KING. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which that amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I now offer my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 18, line 14, after the numerals "700,000," and before the period, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay compensation of additional employees within the District of Columbia; And provided further, That all persons employed under this appropriation outside the District of Columbia shall not be continued in service after said appropriation has been exhausted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, after line 3, to insert an additional section, as follows:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the General Accounting Office under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1921 and prior years unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 68, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 13, to change the section number from "3" to "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that completes the amendments reported by the committee, with one exception.

Mr. WARREN. There is one item that was laid aside on account of something the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] wished to discuss briefly in connection with it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the item appropriating for nine delegates to attend the International Agricultural Institute at Rome is one to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate.

I hope that I may be pardoned a personal reference. My knowledge of this is by virtue of the fact that Mr. Lubin, who had established the institute, was here in August, 1913, when I was Director of the Census and Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce.

I am heartily in favor of sending delegates to the institute. I am in sympathy with the work they are doing, but to increase the number of delegates from three, which is the number we have been sending heretofore, to nine is, in my judgment, simply paying Government money out for a junket for six additional men. I think this is more of a statistical bureau than it is otherwise. They do other work, but that is the principal thing. I have been disappointed in what they have accomplished in regard to statistics on cotton and the world supply. The purpose of the institute was to give condition of crops, the world supply of wheat and cotton and other products, but they have not given us the information about cotton that I had hoped for.

Last year, at my request, the Secretary of Commerce did this work, issued a report as to the amount of cotton in the world, and it was very beneficial to our cotton-producing people. I believe in and have voted for appropriations to help the farmers of the country in the West, in the South, and in other sections. I know how the farmers of the South and West have suffered financially and I believe in helping them, but when we decline to vote for measures that would be genuinely beneficial to the real farmers and then propose to send nine men to Rome when we heretofore have sent only three, I think we are not warranted and that the extravagance is inexcusable. We should first be generous to the farmers in finding some way to get rid of the boll weevil, produce cheaper calcium arsenate, and find markets for the surplus crops of the farmers in the West and South before we squander the Government's money on a junket for six additional delegates. No Senator is more anxious to help the farmers, but they know these junkets do them little good. The farmers can not be fooled as formerly, and they want and need substantial help from Congress.

I have no criticism of the Senators who differ with me in my viewpoint, but I think that it is time we were cutting down on all of these junket trips. There have been a large number of them under this administration and under past administrations. I am not making a partisan speech; I am simply criticizing what I consider is a waste of Government money and what is a bad thing in many ways. I know the committee feel differently about the matter, but I feel it my duty to make this statement.

I wish to say further that I make this statement, too, although I understand that one of the men to be appointed is to be from my State; but I am not going to let that deter me from calling attention to the abuse. It is a waste of money to send nine delegates, three times the number heretofore sent by our Government.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. When was the number of these delegates increased from three to nine?

Mr. HARRIS. During the World War the Institute of Agriculture at Rome did not hold a convention, or whatever it may be called. The last time such a convention was held my understanding is that only three delegates were sent from this country, the Director of the Census and two others. Mr. Durand went, as I recall; that was before I was Director of the Census. I do not think we have sent any delegates since 1912, when the Democrats came into power. Before that, on one occasion, Mr. Stuart, who is now the very able Director of the Census, was one of the delegates, and Mr. Armstrong, of the Agriculture Department, was another. I have forgotten the name of the third one; but we have never, according to my information, sent more than three delegates. I repeat, to send more than that number, Mr. President, in my judgment, would be simply a waste of the money of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the difference in the expense of sending three delegates and sending nine delegates?

Mr. WARREN. The difference would be between $6,000 and $7,000.

Mr. LODGE. The proposition came through the Committee on Foreign Relations; it was reported here and agreed to. I do not know how much it would cost for each delegate. The total amount is $10,045.

Mr. BORAH. The first I knew of any increase in the number was just now. I thought the proposition was to provide the same number as has always been provided for.

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined the matter to ascertain the number of delegates who were previously sent, but I should have said that six were previously sent. The ocean transportation is $4,500, and the per diem allowance for 60 days, at $5 each, is $2,700. It is not a very large amount. They get no salary.

Mr. WARREN. They will receive $116 each.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; $116 each.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] as to the number of delegates. It does not seem to me that it is necessary to send nine delegates over there for the purpose for which I understand they are sent.

Mr. WARREN. We propose to send one from Hawaii and one from the Philippine Islands and one from Porto Rico. Our dependencies have not heretofore been represented.

Mr. BORAH. Have we passed a bill here providing for nine delegates?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to further amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on page 42, I move to strike out from line 19 to line 25, both inclusive, being the provision reading as follows:

Refunding taxes illegally collected: For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the acts of February 24, 1919, and November 23, 1921, including the payment of prior year claims, $105,467,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the acts of February 24, 1919, and November 23, 1921.

Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Finance Committee is now investigating the Internal Revenue Bureau. Recommendations have been made, and I am sure recommendations of some character will be crystallized into law for the purpose of providing suitable machinery to determine the claims by the Government for taxes and the claims for refunds by taxpayers. The hearings this afternoon disclosed that $25,000,000 of the $105,000,000 proposed to be appropriated has been allowed and refunds have been ordered. Refunds have not as yet been ordered to cover the remainder of the amount carried in the bill. This measure anticipates what refunds to the extent of $105,000,000 will be authorized, and accordingly we appropriate, though the future is uncertain.

Mr. President, the information obtained by the subcommittee referred to seems to indicate that the method of adjusting tax claims is not scientific, or rational, or fair either to the Government or to the taxpayers. We ought to have some judicial or quasi-judicial body for the purpose of passing upon these claims. We are now asked to appropriate $105,000,000, seventy-odd million dollars of which has not been allowed, in anticipation of some future act by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1921 the Treasury Department paid back in refunds $28,000,000; in 1922, it paid back $48,000,000; in 1923, it paid back $123,000,000. I wish to say to the Senator that if his committee or the subcommittee of his committee is examining into this matter, I believe it would be well for the committee to examine the records in which the 1921 and 1922 refunds are shown and the Record of a short time ago in which the 1923 refunds were shown. It seems to me to be rather an alarming situation. In 1922 one concern in Chicago, the Cudahy Co., was refunded about $2,200,000, and Mr. William Rockefeller's estate was refunded over $1,000,000, possibly $1,200,000. There are other numerous instances of this kind. Evidently the Treasury Department is very inefficient in assessing the taxes if they make such enormous blunders in the collection of taxes as the refunds would seem to indicate. I am glad to know that a subcommittee of the Senator's committee is investigating this matter, and I think it will save the Government a great deal of money if it will make that investigation effective.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think that in addition to those items to which the Senator has referred an examination will disclose that some taxpayers have had refunds of more than $3,000,000, and I think one or two have had refunds aggregating approximately $9,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, as shown by the records for 1923.

Mr. KING. And it is claimed that one corporation in the United States which has a number of subsidiaries received refunds the aggregate of which was approximately $18,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from that question I should like to interrupt him for a moment longer.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It appears also from statements by the Secretary of the Treasury that in April, 1923, a refund of $3,300,000 was made to the Gulf Refining Co., a corporation in which Mr. Mellon is very largely interested, and of which I am informed his brother is president. It is due to Mr. Mellon to say, however, that it was done without his knowledge at the time and that the negotiations were carried on under a previous administration; but it is quite remarkable that any man would not know that one of the companies in which he was such a large stockholder had received the enormous sum of $3,300,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is fair to Secretary Mellon and his companies to state that there were probably 13 subsidiary corporations, and that the refund to which the Senator refers covered the refunds allowed to all of the subsidiary companies with which Mr. Mellon was connected. I might say—

Mr. McKELLAR. But they are all owned by the Gulf Refining Co.

Mr. KING. I understand that. I might say that Colonel Drake, one of the principal officers of that organization, was before the subcommittee yesterday, and he referred us to Messrs. Ernst & Ernst, attorneys of Cleveland, Ohio, for full information as to the reasons for those refunds, and, as he contended—and I make no comment one way or the other—the justice of making such refunds.

Mr. President, I do not mean to assert that in some instances refunds ought not to be made; indeed, I believe there have been assessments which were illegal and unjust. What I am complaining about is that we have, in my judgment, no satisfactory machinery for passing upon contested claims. The Government, in many instances, insists upon increasing the taxes—the increases being very large in a number of instances—and it is unfair to the taxpayer to be denied a proper tribunal before which his rights may be vindicated. I am as interested in setting up a court or some proper tribunal to protect the taxpayer as I am to protect the Government. Injustices undoubtedly have been inflicted upon some taxpayers, and they should be protected against a repetition of these wrongs. The reason I have made the motion is not that I believe refunds ought not to be made to taxpayers in some cases, but I do think that, in view of the investigation which is now going on, which will result, in my opinion, in legislation which will rectify what is manifestly an unsatisfactory condition, we ought not to make this large appropriation, particularly when approximately from seventy-five to eighty million dollars of it have not as yet been allowed.

We will be in session at least until the day when the Republican convention meets and possibly longer; and the Committee on Finance will report before that, and there is every reason to suppose that it will in the bill reported make satisfactory provision to protect both the taxpayer and the Government. The present system of handling claims, contested and uncontested, for refunds and for additional taxes is wholly unsatisfactory. It provokes criticism, suspicion, and charges of fraud, graft, and inefficiency. Inferior and subordinate officials pass upon claims of millions; this is done in secret and often without full information or upon ex parte statements. It is charged that undue influence is sometimes exercised over them and that extraneous matters are brought into the picture. The present system is unfair to the taxpayer and to the Government, and it is provocative of suspicion against the taxpayer if a refund is ordered and against the Government if the contrary course is pursued, all of which, it is urged by many, reveal the necessity of amending the present tax law so that the reports of taxpayers shall be open to the public and the controversies over taxes shall be determined in the open and not in secret.

If the subcommittee, when it completes its investigation, recommends some other system, then the items which it is contemplated will be cared for by this $76,000,000 may be properly provided for. Why should we appropriate seventy or eighty million dollars now in anticipation that refunds will be made when they have not yet been made? There might be some excuse for Senators to insist upon a division of my motion, so that $25,000,000 might be carried in the bill to cover refunds already ordered, but eliminating the residue of the appropriation to be cared for when the Finance Committee reports.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the same ratio of increase is maintained in the repayment of these refunds that has been going on for the last three years, the $105,000,000 appropriated in this bill will not be sufficient to pay the refunds of the ensuing year. As I have already stated, they amounted to $123,000,000 this year, and only $48,000,000 last year; and if they increase in that way we will have nearly as large a sum to appropriate in the next year's deficiency bill as we are now appropriating in this bill.

I wanted to ask the Senator what kind of a tribunal he would suggest. My own judgment is that it ought to be a tribunal unconnected with the Treasury Department, where a claimant for a refund of taxes can go; and, of course, I am not disputing the accuracy of these refunds. I do not know what the facts are; but I do believe there ought to be an independent tribunal before which any taxpayer who has paid too much taxes may go and prosecute his claim for refund in exactly the same way that other claimants against the Government now have the right to go into the Court of Claims and prosecute their claims there. It seems to me that such a tribunal ought to be composed of not exceeding three men, and it ought to be wholly disconnected from the Treasury Department, so that the taxpayer and the Government can have an absolutely square deal in the matter of refunds of taxes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, any opinion that I might venture at this time I am afraid would not be entitled to much weight; but, answering the Senator's question as best I may, my opinion is that the proper course to pursue would be to organize within the Treasury Department a tribunal with quasi-judicial powers, having jurisdiction over all questions growing out of the enforcement of the tax laws. This tribunal would hear all cases and matters in the open, not in secret; there would be no star-chamber proceedings. If Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Doheny or the Standard Oil Co. or any other individual or organization contends that an illegal assessment has been made, he or it ought to go before this tribunal and file a suitable complaint, as would be done in a court of law or equity.

The Government would plead to the complaint, and the matter would be set down for hearing and tried as any other lawsuit is tried, with right of appeal both by the Government and the taxpayer, to a court outside of the Treasury Department—either the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs Appeals or some other court of the United States.

May I say to the Senator that many controversies grow out of mistakes that can be easily corrected and without trial by any judicial or quasi tribunal? Challenging attention to such mistakes will usually correct them, but where there is a controversy, where the Government claims that the return is not sufficient or where the taxpayer claims that the assessment is too high and asks for a refund, that ought to be made a matter of public investigation and not a secret investigation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as the Senator suggested a few moments ago, publicity of tax returns would do away with probably nine-tenths of the refunds that are made. There would not be the necessity for doing it if we had publicity of tax returns.

Mr. KING. I do not care to take up any further time. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will not accept my amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; I think instead the Senator should withdraw the motion, because I know the Senator does not want to put thousands of men in the position, first, of having to pay a tax about which they are none too happy, and having taxes assessed to them improperly, and then put a bar across so that they can not get their money back after the errors are found and refunds are ordered. It may be that Doheny and the Standard Oil Co. and some other persons or corporations have paid large taxes, as undoubtedly they have, and they may have had large sums coming back. The main portion of the people who pay these taxes, however, are people who do not pay large amounts, but are unacquainted with the law; they live out in the country, and they either neglect paying them entirely—that number amounts to thousands—or they return what they believe is right, and afterwards additional assessments may be made against them, and when they are called upon they bring the proof and clear themselves, and then this money goes back to them.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that the facts are, as I understand them, and Mr. Nash and other officials of the Treasury Department have stated within the past hour, that not to exceed $25,000,000 of this appropriation has been ordered refunded, and that the residue is in anticipation of refunds which will be ordered or may be ordered by the instrumentalities set up in the Treasury Department as they consider from time to time the cases brought before them.

Mr. WARREN. I take my figures directly from the department, and I will give some of the figures here.

We have collected in the Internal Revenue Bureau during seven years, 1917 to 1923, $26,101,157,118.05. Of that sum, almost two billions—that is to say, $1,920,880,250—covered additional assessments of amounts found, through field audits and investigations, to be due the Government and collected, or not due, perhaps, but supposed to be due. These additional amounts were assessed against those who did not return their taxes or failed to return as much as the revenue office thought they should have returned. Of that sum—a vast sum, surely, over $26,000,000,000—the amount that has been paid back up to the present year is $226,540,269.33. In the first three months of this year there have been $112,062,570 of additional assessments assessed and collected, and the amount erroneously collected and allowed for refund has been but $35,624,968.73.

I do not know whether the Senator meets, as I do, a great many of these people who have to pay taxes, who are out in the far country; but I know that in my State when they started in originally with these taxes there were very few of the farmers, the livestock men, or the smaller business men who kept any sort of books upon which they could predicate a correct statement, and either through their incorrect statements or through the statements of certain specialists who looked after them, they were outrageously overassessed; and, of course, those matters have been brought out and from time to time they have been righted. I may say, however, that a man who has had any experience in undertaking to get back from the Internal Revenue Bureau any overpayment or any amount improperly paid certainly has my sympathy, as I should ask the sympathy of others, for I have had to go through the performance once or twice, and it is one of the hardest things in the world. If any man thinks it is an easy thing to do, let him neglect to put in his tax return and try it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to draw a conclusion from the figures which the Senator just reached, which I think any fair-minded man will agree displays an extraordinary achievement and will go far toward dispelling the criticisms or innuendoes and insinuations about these refunds?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have actually received from the taxpayers, or have assessed additional assessments upon them—and those additional assessments in part are now pending—a total of $26,000,000,000 in the years between 1917 and 1923, inclusive.

Mr. WARREN. It is within a few dollars of $27,000,000,000 altogether.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it would be $27,000,000,000, in round figures. Of that vast sum of $27,000,000,000 there has been refunded only $362,000,000, or less than 1 per cent. To my mind, it is an extraordinary thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the remarkable part of it, if the Senator will permit me, is that of that two hundred and odd million dollars to which the Senator has just referred, $123,000,000 was paid out last year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; as errors were found in the assessments of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, accumulated through the years, and the more difficult cases took longer to dispose of, it is quite natural that a larger amount was paid in 1922 or 1923 than in 1918, when the taxes were first assessed. That is bound to be the case.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me to say so, they are still adjudicating the returns of 1917. Waivers were signed in many instances when they became overcrowded, and claims of those who executed waivers are being adjusted even now, as well as all of those from 1917 up to the present time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interject a further observation on these figures? The new assessments are twelve times as much as the refunds, so that as the years have been going by, instead of paying back money to an extent to reduce the revenues, we have been making additional assessments to an extent to increase the net revenues.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator probably will admit, however, that an increase from $28,000,000 in 1921 to $48,000,000 in 1922, and then $123,000,000 in 1923, is a rather startling increase.

Mr. WARREN. That is simply because we gave them more help, so that they might look up these matters and settle them. They were very short of help for many years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were away behind, up to a year ago or two years ago, in settling these old accounts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently they must have been.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And as they caught up with them in the matter of additional help and the straightening out of many rulings and regulations, the amount refunded for 1923 naturally was much larger than the amount refunded the year before; but we must view this thing from the broad standpoint of what has actually been accomplished. It is an extraordinary record—less than 1 per cent refund of all the taxes collected in all these years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not disputing the accuracy of these refunds, but I do think that unless we either call a halt or establish a public tribunal by which they can be examined and passed upon in a public way this will be a very serious drain upon the Treasury. Talk about a bonus bill—a bonus bill will be a very small drain in comparison with what the refunds will bring about.

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator compel these people, with all these millions of overcharges, to go into court?

Mr. McKELLAR. Anyone who has a claim against the Government can go before the courts now.

Mr. WARREN. The courts are open to any taxpayer, but to insist that they all had to go to court, with the millions that are due, would mean very large expense.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I find myself in sympathy with any effort to enable the taxpayer to get justice before the department in the way of a refund. The little experience I have had with three or four people from Arkansas who were trying to get refunds of taxes paid has shown me that it is very difficult.

Mr. WARREN. It never is overeasy, I assure the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have one particular case in mind of a man in my own town who was overcharged and who got some of the overpayment back after two or three years' work, and the next year they insisted on collecting it back in a penalty. The truth about the matter is that there ought to be some better and more efficient and quicker way of adjusting the differences. I knew of one man who paid $11,000, and after two or three years he got it back, but it cost him a third of it to get it back.

Mr. WARREN. Anyone who deals with the Government in extracting funds must always be ready to leave civilization and God behind him.

Mr. CARAWAY. He certainly leaves the flag behind him when he tries to get anything like quick and exact justice.

Mr. WARREN. That is nothing new. But let me say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that now when we are undertaking to fix this up extending as far back as 1917, to pay back to the smaller men what the Government owes them, is no time to throw obstacles in the way of quick action.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was trying to say that I am in sympathy with making it quick and easy to get it back. In the first place, they should not have to pay it, and as soon as any question is raised about it they ought to have it refunded.

Mr. WARREN. That is in line with what I was about to say. Of course, these required funds will last only until in the summer. They will not last until Congress meets again; and shall we hold up all of these people, when their money has become due? Shall we cut the appropriation down and let them suffer longer, especially when we consider that some of them have suffered so much?

Mr. CARAWAY. I find myself out of patience with any desire to make it more difficult for any man to get justice.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator, and to all Senators who have spoken, that I am very glad we are getting further information in regard to the departments, and, as the Senate and the Senator know, my mind is continually harassed not only by personal appeals, but in connection with the position I occupy, in connection with expenditures of appropriations, and I am very glad that these things are being investigated. I have made no objection to any examination of the Treasury Department or any other department. I hope that if there is any way of making it easier for these things to be adjusted, it may be brought out. But we have reached the time now when we are short of funds and when we have been owing people a long time what is justly due. I remember one case of my own where there was an overpayment of $3,200, and when it was paid back it was $2,700. The balance leaked out at various places along the way. So it does not seem to me that we should cut anything out of this appropriation. I would rather enlarge it than make it smaller.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish there were some way to penalize people who go around and make it their business to try to collect more out of others than they owe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have attempted to make my position clear. I have stated that in my opinion many taxpayers have suffered injustice, and in many instances the Government has been wronged, and I have been anxious to have some instrumentality set up which would obviate these difficulties and speedily dispose of these controverted claims.

My motion, however, is directed more to a practical question. Twenty-five million dollars only have been ordered refunded. I will say to the chairman of the committee that that is the testimony given within the past hour by persons who are familiar with the Interior Department.

Mr. WARREN. How long will that last at the rate at which they are adjudicating these claims? It would last only through-out a period of a few days.

Mr. KING. It may or it may not.

Mr. WARREN. The motion of the Senator from Utah would mean an extension of the time of payment of those entitled to refunds.

Mr. CARAWAY. The money will not be paid out until the claims are allowed.

Mr. WARREN. The claims are being allowed every day.

Mr. KING. If we throw the claims out, the claimants do not get the money. They do not get anything until the claims are allowed.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, of course not.

Mr. KING. But as soon as the judgment has been entered 6 per cent interest is drawn—

Mr. CARAWAY. It ought to be 12 per cent.

Mr. KING. So that the person who is found to be a creditor of the Government will not only get the amount due him, but the interest. But the point I have in mind is this: That many taxpayers are not satisfied with the present method of adjudicating these claims. Before we adjourn we will set up some suitable machinery, and I had in mind the fact that in view of the suspicion attending many of these refunds the contention that refunds are made to great corporations which which are not entitled to them, under circumstances which excited suspicion, it would be wiser to refer the claims to this machinery which we will set up instead of paying out money at the present time. It does seem to me that to make this appropriation in anticipation of claims is not wise.

Mr. WARREN. It is nothing of that kind.

Mr. KING. It is in anticipation.

Mr. WARREN. So are all of the appropriations in the bills we bring in. We bring in appropriations of millions upon millions and not a dollar of it is due until the time comes to expend it. Others are not different from this.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows our appropriations usually take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year. We make appropriations now for the next fiscal year. Appropriations are for payments to be made in futuro. The expenditures will start in the 1st of next July and run for a year. This appropriation may be made before we adjourn. If we were going to adjourn to-morrow, then I would not press the motion which I have submitted.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, these refunds have been paid in this way always, and we make no appropriation of consequence for the future in respect of such claims. The claimants will have to depend on this bill, because the Treasury Department appropriation bill has already been passed. These are matters which develop only as we find out what we owe Tom, Dick, Harry, and so forth; then we pay them.

Mr. KING. The point I am trying to make is this, that we will be in session for at least two months, possibly three.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may think it will be all summer, but I would rather play it the other way.

Mr. KING. By that time, Mr. President, we will know more definitely what the obligations will be against the Government, and what the charge will be upon the Treasury to meet these refunds. It does seem to me that it is injudicious and unwise to make the appropriations now, in view of impending legislation.

Mr. WARREN. It amounts to $10,000,000 a month or more, and it will last only part of the year. I do not want the Senator to be guilty of holding back money that is due to our constituents, where they have overpaid their taxes. I will help him in any future legislation, and help him in any other way, but in view of the trouble we have from the calling for a quorum, I would rather the Senator would recall his amendment, if he will. I think he should do that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to be satisfied with $30,000,000, and if refunds have been ordered to any considerable extent by the end of another 30 days, he can bring in a deficiency bill.

Mr. WARREN. Over $10,000,000 a month of this is absorbed, taking the last few months as a guide.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt that the rapidity with which they are passing upon these claims—

Mr. WARREN. The Senator certainly does not mean to use the word "rapidity." Does the Senator think that it is "rapid" when we are settling claims four or five years old?

Mr. KING. It is rapid if they are paying out $10,000,000 a month on these refunds.

Mr. WARREN. It may be a rapid dispensation of money, but it is going over a wide stretch of country.

Mr. KING. When Uncle Sam is dispensing money, even when the appropriations are in charge of our very economical Committee on Appropriations, it is very rapid.

I will amend my motion, and move to amend by striking out the numerals "$105,467,000," inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000,000." That will more than cover all of the refunds which have been ordered to date, and then if further refunds are allowed, Congress will be in session, and we can speedily meet them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah modifies his amendment so as to strike out of the text of the bill the numerals "$105,467,000," on line 22, page 42, and to insert "$30,000,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish to debate this motion?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not this motion, but I have another matter I wish to take up.

Mr. WARREN. Let us settle this first.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is an item in this bill, on page 33, to which I desire to call attention. The item is as follows:

The appropriation of $6,500,000 for making changes in the turret guns of certain battleships so as to increase the range of such guns, contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 4, 1923, is hereby repealed.

That appropriation of six and a half million grew out of a recommendation made by President Harding and the Secretary of the Navy last March. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy reads as follows:

This department has heretofore maintained the attitude that it was better, in the interests of efficiency, to construct new capital ships rather than to fully modernize, from time to time, similar but older vessels already in service. The treaty for the limitation of naval armaments, which this Nation has ratified, definitely stops, for the powers signatory, the construction of new capital ships for many years and therefore imposes on this Nation a different policy if our capital ships are to be maintained at a standard of efficiency comparable to that of similar vessels of foreign powers. Careful studies have been made as to the measures to be taken to place this new policy in effect, and this department is now ready to proceed with the modernization of certain capital ships provided funds for the project may be obtained. The program tentatively adopted is necessarily spread over a considerable period. The money requested in this estimate is sufficient to make a beginning on the project and to undertake necessary work on 13 vessels. That this policy should be inaugurated at the earliest moment is believed by me to be of major and vital importance from the standpoint of efficiency of our national defense. I strongly urge its favorable consideration.

Mr. President, upon that report coming from the Secretary of the Navy Congress at once appropriated the $6,500,000 for the purpose of elevating our guns on these 13 capital battleships. The reason advanced was that it had been found after the limitation of armaments agreement that British capital ships could throw their shells very considerably farther than the American capital ships could, and that therefore the supposed 5-5-3 agreement, the equality agreement as to the ratio between the American Navy and the British Navy, so far as capital ships was concerned, was not in fact carried out, because the British ships, as a rule, could throw their shells farther, and therefore in certain kinds of warfare the American Navy would be at a serious disadvantage.

The Congress at once carried out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and appropriated the money.

I stop here long enough to call attention to, and I desire to put in the Record at this point, a portion of part 1, chapter 2, of the treaty, rules relating to the execution of the treaty and definition of terms, pages 97 and 98. That is a mere statement of the vessels of each nation, showing that of capital ships the American Navy would have 500,650 tons and the British Navy 580,450 tons. I ask that that may be placed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

On the completion of the two ships of the West Virginia class and the scrapping of the North Dakota and Delaware, as provided in article 2, the total tonnage to be retained by the United States will be 525,850 tons.

Names of ships which may be retained by The British Empire.

	Tonnage.
Royal Sovereign	25,750
Royal Oak	25,750
Revenge	25,750
Resolution	25,750
Ranulph	25,750
Malaya	27,500
Valiant	27,500
Barham	27,500
Queen Elizabeth	27,500
Warspite	27,500
Benbow	25,000
Emperor of India	25,000
Iron Duke	25,000
Marlborough	25,000
Hood	41,200
Renown	26,500
Repulse	26,500
Tiger	28,500
Thunderer	22,500
King George V.	28,000
Ajax	23,000
Centurion	23,000
Total tonnage	580,450

On the completion of the two new ships to be constructed and the scrapping of the Thunderer, King George V, Ajax, and Centurion, as provided in article 2, the total tonnage to be retained by the British Empire will be 558,950 tons.

Mr. McKELLAR. The provision in controversy as to our right to elevate the guns upon our own ships is found on page 701 of the pamphlet from which I am reading and in the treaty, and is as follows:

(d) No retained capital ships or aircraft carriers shall be reconstructed except for the purpose of providing means of defense against air and submarine attack, and subject to the following rules: The contracting powers may, for that purpose, equip existing tonnage with bulge or blister or anti-air attack deck protection, providing the increase of displacement thus effected does not exceed 3,000 tons (8,048 metric tons) displacement for each ship. No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted except—

There are two exceptions, which I need not read. Now, Mr. President, when that appropriation was made Great Britain at once protested to the United States that under this provision of the limitation of armaments treaty the United States had no right to elevate its own guns upon its own capital ships, but was precluded from doing so. It is fair to say that it had been stated in the United States that the British were elevating their guns on their principal battleships, but it seems that that was found to be not correct.

My purpose in bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate at this time is to show that the limitation of armaments treaty, heralded throughout the country as to the wonderful advantage of the United States, has resulted in an agreement that the United States has not the right even to elevate the guns on its own capital ships so as to make them the equal of the guns of Great Britain. Of course, as long as the agreement is in force the United States is at a disadvantage in naval warfare in so far as our capital ships are concerned. Our ships can not throw their shells as far as Great Britain's ships can, and in certain kinds of warfare it might be that we would be helpless.

What is the department doing? I call attention to an article prepared by Capt. Frank H. Schofield, of the United States Navy, printed in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1923, showing that even under the present treaty we might elevate the guns on our capital ships. I ask at this point to have inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks the article by Captain Schofield, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

THE GUN-ELEVATION QUESTION.

[Memorandum by Capt. Frank H. Schofield, United States Navy.]

Foreword.—The Sixty-seventh Congress made an appropriation of $6,500,000 to increase the elevation of the turret guns of 13 United States capital ships. Congress was informed erroneously but with candid intent, that the guns of the British fleet had had their elevations similarly increased. The British Government stated that this information was incorrect. The American Government immediately and unhesitatingly accepted the British statement. The question of the legality of the action contemplated by the appropriation of six and a half millions was not questioned by the British.

As Congress had made the appropriation under the impression that the British guns had been similarly elevated, it was decided to postpone action on increasing the elevation of the turret guns of 13 ships until Congress had again considered the subject.

There has been some agitation in the press to the effect that it would be contrary to the letter or the spirit of the Washington treaty to increase the elevation of our turret guns. The following paragraphs deal with this question:

The gun-elevation question has two separate and distinct parts:

(1) Is it allowable under the treaty?

(2) Is it worth doing?

This memorandum deals with the first question. This question is a matter of written law—the treaty. The decision of this question must depend upon a correct interpretation of written law. There are two separate laws on the subject, each equally operative, equally conclusive, both intended to express identical ideas. These two laws are the English version of the treaty for limitation of armament and the French version of the same treaty.

I shall examine the English version of the treaty first to determine whether or no the elevation of the turret guns on American battleships may be increased without violating the treaty. The following words in the treaty and no others bear on this subject:

"No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted."

The italicized words in the above quotation are the only words in the treaty that bear on the gun-elevation question. Our problem, therefore, is simply to examine what we propose to do in the light of the meaning of these words.

There are five necessary steps in increasing the elevation of the turret guns on the 13 of our battleships that are under consideration.

These steps are:

- (1) Increasing the size of the gun port opening.
- (2) Lengthening the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance.
- (3) Cutting away some of the plates and framing under the breech of the gun so that the breech may be lowered farther.
- (4) Changing the position of the ammunition hoists slightly.
- (5) Making a more powerful counter-recoil system.

Let us consider each step separately.

"(1) Increasing the size of the gun port opening."

The turret guns stick out through holes in the face of the turret. When the guns are pointed at their greatest range—that is, when the muzzles of the guns are elevated, the guns touch, or almost touch, the top of the hole in the armor through which the guns project. If we wish to point the guns higher we must lengthen the hole upward, so that the muzzle of the gun may be raised higher.

Question. Is lengthening the hole (port opening) in the front of the turret armor an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The general type of mounting might be the same if all the turret armor were removed. The guns might still be in the same position with the same general type of mounting. The armor is simply protection to the guns, mounts, and crew. No matter how many or how big the holes cut in the armor the general type of mounting remains the same.

"(2) Lengthening the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance."

The elevating screw extends from under the breech of the gun to a part of the gun mount below where it runs through a nut fixed to the mount. It is connected to an electric motor that turns it in either direction. If the screw turns in one direction the elevating screw runs up through the fixed nut and its upper end pushes the breech of the gun up—thus lowering the muzzle of the gun; if the screw turns in the opposite direction it runs down through the fixed nut and pulls the breech of the gun down—thus elevating the muzzle of the gun. If the length of the elevating screw is increased and if the distance between the breech of the gun and the fixed nut through which the elevating screw travels is increased, it will be possible to raise and lower the breech of the gun through greater distances.

Question. Is the lengthening of the elevating screw so that the breech of the gun may be lowered and raised through a greater distance an "alteration in the general type of mounting"?

Answer. No. It is not a change in type of mounting. The same type of mounting is preserved in making this change but the capacity for up and down motion of the breech of the gun is increased. A short broomstick is of the same general type as a long broomstick. Size does not alter type.

"(3) Cutting away some of the plates and framing under the breech of the gun, so that the breech may be lowered farther."

As guns are now installed in the ships there are various platforms and framings directly underneath the breech of the gun that the breech of the gun comes near to when the muzzle is pointed as high as possible. If we propose to point the muzzle higher, these frames and plates and fittings must have their position changed so there will be a clear road for the breech of the gun when it is lowered for extreme long-range pointing and firing.

Question. Is the cutting away of platforms, frames, and fittings within the turret structure so as to permit the breech of the gun to be lowered farther an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. All fittings that would have to be changed in position would still be retained in a modified form and in a modified position. Nothing would be taken away or added to the gun mount that would change its type, so far as this particular step is concerned. It is not a change in type of writing desk, for example, if more room is made under the desk so that a fat man can get his legs where a thin man gets them without any trouble.

"(4) Changing the position of the ammunition hoists slightly."

Question. Would this be an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The reply to this question is similar to No. 3, and, in fact, might be included under No. 3.

"(5) Making a more powerful counterrecoil system."

When a turret gun is fired, its muzzle is always pointed up some, otherwise the projectile would fall in the water close to the ship. The farther you wish to fire the gun the higher the muzzle must be pointed. When the gun is fired, it recoils some little distance back into the turret. Its recoil is stopped by a hydraulic or pneumatic system, reinforced by springs which act as brakes on its recoil. Before the gun can be reloaded, it must be shoved forward again into the same position it had at the start. This is done by means of the counterrecoil system, which may be by springs, by air pressure, or by hydraulic pressure.

It is evident that the more the breech of the gun is depressed the more the gun has to be elevated in shoving it back into place after firing. When the gun is level it is just a question of overcoming the friction of the gun in the slide enough to push it forward. When the gun is elevated 10° you must not only overcome this friction, but you must push the gun up an incline of 10°. When the gun is elevated 30° you must overcome the friction and in addition lift the gun up an incline of 30°. This requires a considerable increase of power over that required for the 10° elevation. It will therefore be necessary to provide more power to return the gun to loading position after firing, but it will not require a change in the type of the mounting or a departure from established practice in the design in order to accomplish this object.

Question. Is making a more powerful counterrecoil system an "alteration in the general type of mounting of main armament"?

Answer. No. The same type of automobile jack can be used to lift the wheel of a Ford touring car and the wheel of a 5-ton truck. The only differences involved are those of size and power.

From the preceding analysis of the five steps necessary in making changes in our ships to permit of increased elevation of the guns, it is obvious that since no one of these steps involves a change in the general type of mounting of the main armament that the proposal itself does not involve a change of type and that, therefore, it is permissible for us to change the elevation of our guns.

If, however, we should propose installing two turrets for one turret or should take turrets from the center line of the ship and put them on the sides of the ship or should take them from the sides of the ship and should put them on the center line or should take turrets that can not fire over each other and arrange them so they could fire over each other, we would be changing the general type of mounting of the main armament; in fact, we would be making of our ships ships of a decidedly different character. It was this sort of change that the treaty sought to guard against. No such changes as these are proposed or even suggested. We simply propose changes that will enable us to use more effectively and more efficiently the guns and mountings we already have.

We come now to the French version of the treaty and its bearing upon the question under consideration. The following words in the French version of the treaty and no other words in this version bear on this subject:

"Sera interdit tout changement dans la cuirasse de flanc, le calibre et le nombre des canons de l'armement principal, ainsi que tout changement dans son plan general d'installation."

The italicized words of the above quotation are the only words in the French version of the treaty that bear on the gun-elevation question. For convenience in discussing their meaning let us translate these words as literally as possible into English.

"All change in the side armor, the caliber and number of guns in the main armament, as well as all change in its general plan of installation is forbidden."

From this translation we can separate out, by italicizing, the words that bear directly on the question under discussion. It will be found that the whole question hinges on the meaning of "general plan of installation of main armament." No stretch of the imagination can make these words mean that any one or all of the five steps above enumerated as necessary for increasing the elevation of our turret guns are changes in the "general plan of installation of main armament." It is perfectly obvious that these words do refer to such changes as are indicated in a paragraph above, namely:

(1) Installing two turrets for one turret.

(2) Taking turrets from the center line of the ship and putting them on the sides of the ship.

(3) Taking turrets from the side of the ship and putting them on the center line.

(4) Placing turrets that can not fire over the other so that one of them can fire over the other, etc.

Such changes would be changing the "general plan of installation of main armament."

So much for the common-sense legal phases of the question.

The public is very generally under the impression that the British Admiralty have stated officially through the proper channels that by their interpretation of the treaty it would be illegal for us to change the elevation of our turret guns as proposed. No such contention has ever been put forward either by the British Admiralty, the British Government, or by any official in any government signatory to the treaty. This is a categorical denial that can be substantiated by anyone at any time who chooses to make official inquiry either of the State Department or of the Navy Department.

The general intent of the treaty was to grant to each power full right to keep step with material and scientific progress, subject only to specific limitations. Nowhere is there to be found a "spirit" of the treaty that contravenes this right.

Mr. McKELLAR. Notwithstanding this article, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy of a year ago that it was imperative for the national defense that the $6,500,000 be immediately appropriated, and that the guns be elevated at once in order to make them equal to like ships of Great Britain, there now comes to the Congress, without any recommendation from the Navy Department, a provision or bill repealing the appropriation of $6,500,000, and according to the Navy Department or those in charge of the Government we would still be at that disadvantage. In other words, if the Navy Department was correct one year ago in its recommendations, then the American Navy would probably be helpless as opposed to the British Navy. If it was not correct, if that provision is not correct, then the Navy Department a year ago asked us to appropriate $6,500,000 for which there was no necessity whatsoever.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me to make a brief statement in that connection? It will take but a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. I yield to the Senator from Utah for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think there is one aspect of the matter about which the able Senator from Tennessee has not been advised. The Navy Department asked for this appropriation at the last session of Congress, but their request was denied. In the closing hours of the session some of the officials of the Navy Department went before the committee of the House and again asked for the appropriation, and the item was then inserted. When the appropriation bill came before the Senate I challenged it, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] stated to me—and I hope I am not betraying any secrets—that representations had been made to the committee that Great Britain had entered upon a program calling for the raising of the guns on her capital ships, and that as a result the United States would be placed at a disadvantage. As I recall, Japan, it was claimed, was also elevating the guns upon her vessels. The committee felt constrained upon those representations to make the appropriation. I stated to the Senator that I was not satisfied with the representations of the Navy Department, but in the absence of information contravening their position I would not obstruct the passage of the bill. Immediately after Congress adjourned I made investigation and found that the representations made were not true. Neither Great Britain nor Japan had modernized the ships in question or elevated the guns thereon. Our Government was placed in a very embarrassing situation owing to the action of Congress in appropriating so large a sum to modernize our capital ships, and the Secretary of State was compelled to notify Great Britain that our course was not warranted, and, as I now recall, advised the British Government that the United States would not change the battleships as contemplated by the appropriation.

It seemed to me then that the recommendations of the Navy were in violation of the naval treaty prepared at the Limitation of Arms Conference and that the Navy Department was not frank and candid in its dealings with Congress. The facts proved that my surmises were well founded.

After making an investigation as to the representations of the Navy, I wrote a letter to Secretary Denby, copy of which is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
March 26, 1923.

Hon. EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I was greatly surprised to read in the press that both the Secretary of State and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy had made public statements contradictory of statements heretofore made, as I was advised, by the State Department and by the Navy Department, with reference to the so-called modernization of battleships of Great Britain.

When the Navy bill was under consideration in the Senate, I was advised that it was the intention of the Navy Department to ask for a large appropriation to modernize battleships, and particularly to enter upon the work of increasing the angle of elevation of the guns upon the battleships. I stated that I was opposed to the proposition because I believed it was in contravention of the treaty and because I believed that the scheme was unwise and unnecessary. The Navy appropriation bill passed without including this proposed appropriation.

In the closing hours of the session I was approached and urged not to oppose the scheme to appropriate approximately six millions of dollars for the purpose of making changes in the mounting of the guns in order to give them a longer range. I was told that Great Britain had secretly entered upon the work of making similar changes upon her battleships and that Japan had either contemplated doing the same or had already started upon this work. There was some secrecy about the matter which was exceedingly obnoxious to me, but because of the strong representations made as to the necessity of these changes, and the importance of immediate action, I stated that I would not oppose the appropriation.

From what I can learn now, I was deceived, and other Senators were deceived, and I am writing to enter my protest against the method of obtaining the appropriation and also against the inauguration of these changes for which the $6,500,000 was appropriated.

I have seen in the press that some officials of the Navy Department say that they have a "mandate" from Congress to proceed at once to make these changes. Speaking as a Senator, I submit that there is no "mandate" which demands that this work shall be entered upon at once, and I am constrained to state that in my opinion there never would have been any appropriation made for this purpose if Congress had been fully advised in the matter.

With the information which I now have, I shall offer a bill as soon as Congress meets to repeal the appropriation referred to.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM H. KING.

As stated, the action of Congress in authorizing changes in the capital ships resulted in some communication from the British Government, amounting to a protest, and the Secretary of State very properly took steps to relieve our Government of the charge of being a treaty breaker. His action, as well as the general protests which were made by many Americans, restrained the Navy Department in its purpose to elevate the guns and make other changes upon our battleships, or at least some of them. I submit that Congress was deceived by the Navy Department, and the appropriation was improvidently made.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. I just want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to his accuracy in the legal position which he has taken. Unquestionably the limitation of armament treaty prohibits alterations in American ships by the American Navy or the American Government. It provides as follows:

No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted.

Unquestionably it was in contravention of this treaty for us to have undertaken the work that was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy a year ago. Unquestionably that was true, and I am calling it to the attention of the country today to show that as long as we have the treaty there can not be equality of battleships or capital ships in the navies, as between the United States and Great Britain, but the United States is compelled to be in second place in so far as her guns are concerned.

I now take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Maine. Mr. HALE. I thought the purpose of the Senator in speaking to-day to the Senate was to ask that the House provision repealing the appropriation be stricken out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The Senator has not heard my discussion. There has been no suggestion of that at all.

Mr. HALE. Then I was mistaken in the Senator's attitude. I do not agree with the Senator at all about the matter of the elevation of the guns being in contravention of the treaty.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see how it is possible for the Senator to have looked at the treaty and come to any other conclusion than as I have stated. It provides that no alteration of side arms in caliber, number, or general type, and so forth, shall be permitted. Of course the Senator must dispute the ordinary plain everyday meaning of words if he says that the United States Government has the right to change the mounting of its guns with that prohibition against it.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter about which there is considerable argument, and neither the Senator nor I are the ones to decide it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Navy has given it up, and now, as I understand, the Senator recommends that the appropriation be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken. Will he allow me to make a statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have any information the Senator may have upon the matter.

Mr. HALE. In the report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1923, Appendix II, is a statement relative to the gun elevation question, by Capt. Frank H. Schofield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I referred to that a few moments ago and asked that it be printed in the Record, and I have read it very carefully.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator from Tennessee asked that it be put into the Record?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have already done so.

Mr. HALE. I was going to do so, but that is not now necessary.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to state the facts about this matter as I understand them to be. Last year subsequent to the passage of the naval appropriation bill, but prior to the adjournment of Congress, the Navy Department came to Congress and informed us that on information which it had since the signing of the limitation of armament treaty here in Washington the British had raised the elevation of their guns; that with that raised elevation they were getting a longer range than we were getting with our guns; and that, therefore, in order to put us on a parity with them, it was necessary for us to make an appropriation providing for the elevating of our own guns.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that I have here a recommendation from Secretary Denby made at the time, and no reference is made to the change of the elevation of British guns. I will put the statement into the Record so that the Senator can read it in the morning.

Mr. HALE. The information to which I have referred was put before us at the time, and that was the reason for the appropriation. The appropriation, therefore, was put on one of the deficiency appropriation bills and it became a law. Last summer it was found that the British had not done as we had supposed they had done, that they had not raised the elevation of their guns, as the Senator from Utah has explained. A number of people went to the department and protested against our taking action in view of the fact that the British had not done so, and the matter was held up.

In the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1923 the following statement is made:

The matter will again be brought to the attention of Congress at the coming session, and unless adverse action is taken by Congress, the department will proceed with the employment of this money for elevation of the guns.

I do not think that it is a matter of any very great importance whether the House provision be stricken out or not. I think, on the whole, it is probably not best to strike it out. In view of the statement I have just read, unless the provision be stricken out, and unless Congress shall take some affirmative action, the department would feel that it had a right to go ahead. I do not understand that the department objects to the provision being stricken out at the present time. I do not understand that they have taken any new position or made any change in their position about the elevation of the guns. They do not object to this provision being stricken out of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, if the elevation of those guns was vital to the defense of the United States in 1923, as the department then reported, how can it be a matter of no moment at this time?

Mr. HALE. I think it was vital at that time, in their opinion, because they thought the British had raised the elevation of their guns. They now find that the British have not done so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. The Senator from Maine is chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. HALE. I am.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state to us what the facts are? Do the guns on the capital ships which are mentioned in the treaty belonging to Great Britain shoot farther than do the guns on the capital ships which are mentioned in the treaty belonging to the United States?

Mr. HALE. The guns on some of the capital ships of the British do have a longer range than do the guns on some of ours, while on others this is not the case.

Mr. McKELLAR. How are those ships classified?

Mr. HALE. There are seven of our older ships whose guns have an elevation of 15 degrees and a range of 20,900 yards. Then we have six battleships the guns of which have an elevation of 15 degrees with a range of about 24,000 yards. Then the guns on the last five, the newer five of our battleships, have an elevation of 30 degrees and a range in the neighborhood of 35,000 yards. The guns on the British ships all have an elevation of 20 degrees with the exception of the Hood, which is their latest ship. The guns on that ship have an elevation of 30 degrees and a range substantially the same as have the guns on our last five ships. The British have the right to replace two more ships, the guns on which will also have an elevation of 30 degrees and a range of around 35,000 yards; but at the present time we have five battleships the guns on which have a greater range than any which the British have, with the exception of the guns on the Hood. When the British shall have put in their other two replacement ships we shall have five ships to their three the guns of which will have the maximum range.

Mr. McKELLAR. But all the guns on the remainder of the British ships have the maximum range?

Mr. HALE. No; they have not the maximum range.

Mr. McKELLAR. But have they a better range than have the guns on the American ships of the same kind?

Mr. HALE. The guns on those British ships have a little better range; they have from 1,000 to 2,000 yards better range than the range of the guns on our best ships, with the exception of the guns on our five last ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the able chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs think that that is a very serious disadvantage for the United States to be living under while we have a treaty supposedly providing for equality of armament?

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that I want see us with a Navy whose guns have a range second to none in the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator. I also think we should have such guns; but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the administration of which the Senator is a part in 1923 entered into a solemn agreement with Great Britain, Japan, and France by which we are, in my judgment, prohibited from having an equality with Great Britain as to ships.

Mr. HALE. But, as I said to the Senator before, neither the Senator nor I can decide that matter. That is a matter that the State Department has in its hands at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I thought that the State Department had not only decided the question in Great Britain's favor but had humbly apologized for this country having taken a different position.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I think the apology we made was for stating that the increase in the elevation of our guns was necessary because they had increased theirs, if that may be called an apology.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I happen to have here the debate in the House of Commons, from which I read that Commander Eyres-Monsell said:

We do not propose to alter the elevation, and although the Americans appropriated money for that purpose, they have, on our assurance that we are not going to do so, abandoned the idea.

The Senator from Utah, I believe, just a moment ago said that we had apologized for it, and in one of the articles that I have made a part of my remarks—

Mr. HALE. I have never seen any such apology.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is stated that Secretary Hughes has apologized.

Mr. HALE. I repeat I do not recall any such apology.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was commonly quoted in the newspapers, and there is no doubt about it that when it was found that we ourselves proposed to violate our own treaty we naturally apologized for it, and I am rather inclined to think that the State Department was right in making an apology. They certainly were right in making a correction, at any rate, because, in my judgment, under that treaty we have no right to change the elevation of the guns on our capital ships.

Mr. HALE. I still say that the matter of whether the elevation of those guns is in contravention of the treaty is in the hands of the State Department.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. Representative NEWTON of Missouri has written a most instructive statement in regard to this matter. It is very short and is found on page 4587 of the RECORD under the title "Is it worth doing?" He is so clear in his exposition of this question that I ask to have his statement made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

(2) IS IT WORTH DOING?

When we place guns on a ship we do it in the hope that if that ship ever goes into battle it will be able to hit its enemy oftener and harder than the enemy ship hits it, no matter at what range the battle is fought. If we fail to have this object in view all the time, the ship is likely to fail. In naval battle, more than in any other kind of contest, it is the advantage at the very start of the contest that is most important and may be decisive. Let us see what increasing the elevation of our turret guns might do to gain that initial advantage in battle.

When most of our battleships were designed and built 10 miles was considered an extreme battle range. The thought of the day was that no battle would open with gunfire at greater ranges than 10 miles. We know now that effective firing can be done by ships up to a range of 20 miles and that battle is likely to open at that range. Thirteen of our 18 battleships are built to fire at an extreme range of about 11 miles. The gun mounts on these ships can be modified without changing the general type of mounting, so that the guns will all be able to fire at a range of 18 miles. The five newest of our ships can all fire their guns at 19 miles.

The accompanying sketches show what an overwhelming handicap our battleship fleet may have to accept in battle if we fail to increase the elevation of our turret guns. As data regarding foreign fleets are difficult fully to assemble and to understand, no attempt has been made in the sketches to make comparisons of our fleet with foreign fleets. The comparison in each and every case is a comparison of what our present fleet in its present condition can do with what our fleet could do were the elevation of the turret guns of 13 of our capital ships increased to 30°.

In each sketch the column of ships to the left represents our battleship fleet as at present without the mounts altered so as to permit elevating the guns 30 degrees, and the dots near that column represent the number of hits made on those ships, at the range indicated, by the right-hand column of ships.

The right-hand column of ships represents what our fleet would be were they all given a gun elevation of 30 degrees. The dots near the right-hand column of ships indicate the number of hits that might be made by our fleet as at present on the ships of that column while they were making the much larger number of hits shown on the left-hand column.

The number of hits in each sketch represents the same length of time of firing. The greater number of hits shown at the shorter ranges is due solely to the greater ease of hitting at the shorter ranges. For instance, under identical conditions about twice as many hits are made at 25,000 yards as are made at 32,000 yards, and about twice as many hits are made at 20,000 yards as at 25,000 yards.

The sketches make no allowance for the heavy fire that the left-hand column is under as compared with the right-hand column. In actual battle the left-hand column of ships would not be able to fire as many shots nor as well-aimed shots as the right-hand column, because ships that are being hit frequently never fire as well as those under less severe fire. If we should take this fact into account, the right-hand column would have a still greater advantage. As this special advantage can not be determined accurately it is not taken account of in the sketches.

Only about one-quarter of the guns of our fleet can now reach ranges above 24,000 yards. If our fleet were to meet in battle at these ranges another fleet of equal strength that could deliver all its gunfire, our fleet would be hopelessly defeated by superior gunfire before it could get close enough to bring all its own guns into action.

At ranges between 20,000 and 24,000 yards our present fleet is about one-half as effective as it might be. These ranges are likely to be decisive ranges. We know by official foreign statements that our fleet is inferior to a foreign fleet in hitting power at these ranges in about the ratio of 10 to 14. If a battle were to be fought to a conclusion between two fleets of 18 otherwise equal ships at a range of 22,000 yards, and if the ratio of hitting powers of these fleets at the start were as 10 to 14, at the conclusion of the battle one fleet would be entirely destroyed, sunk—ours—and the other would have 11 good ships left. If, however, we were to increase the elevation of our turret guns so that all may fire at the higher ranges, the ratio of hitting powers would then be about as 10 to 11.4, a ratio which, though reduced, is still against us, and one which we can not overcome by any change in our present ships. This is the meaning of the gun-elevation question.

If it is worth while at all to have a navy, then it is worth while to give that navy a fair chance in a self-respecting stand-up fight. It is not only worth while, it is imperative, that we elevate our turret guns so that they all can fire at the highest ranges. Even then we shall still be decidedly inferior to the strongest fleet at certain ranges.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] has well and correctly said, last year the Committee on Appropriations in considering the naval appropriation bill—and the Senator from Maine and I both were on the subcommittee which had that bill in charge—failed to include this item. It was afterwards included in a deficiency bill. The officers of the Navy Department who appeared before us took the position that elevation was different from mounting, and that consequently they had a right to elevate the guns because that was not included in the term "mounting" which was used in the treaty. At the time I thought it was a very doubtful question even if Great Britain had been elevating the guns of her battleships, and so I suggested that it would be well at the time for the Secretary of the Navy to make an inquiry before we should proceed even by indirection to violate or be placed in the position where we could be suspected of violating a treaty to negotiate which we had called a conference and to which we had agreed.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was exercising his usual good sense in making that suggestion.

Mr. SWANSON. So the item was not included in that bill. Afterwards the committee thought from information furnished by the Navy Department that the British were elevating their guns, which would give them a superiority they did not possess at the time the treaty was signed. Acting on that information, which it was thought was very accurate, but which could not be given out inasmuch as it was secret, it was considered urgent that our fleet should be brought on an equality with the British fleet. That was the main idea of the treaty which came out of the Washington conference, namely, that the fleet of Great Britain and the fleet of the United States should be equal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, and that is the main idea that has gone out to the people, that the capital ships of the navies of the two countries should be equal, but when we come to examine the question carefully it can not be disputed that instead of being equal to, our Navy is inferior to that of Great Britain.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, let me say that if one cares to believe the propagandists for a big navy we have always had the worst navy that ever floated on the sea.

Mr. McKELLAR. The propagandists say that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have never seen a time when an appropriation bill was under consideration when we had a fleet that was worth stretching canvas over. I remember the time when we were hurried into an appropriation to elevate the guns on our battleships because of some kind of a propaganda that the British had elevated their guns; but later we were compelled in good conscience to refuse to expend that money because it had been obtained under false pretenses. I do not want us to be swept off our feet as we have been sometimes in the past. At one time the propagandists said we were afraid of Germany, of Japan, of France, and of Italy, and now they try to make us afraid of Haiti on the ground that our fleet is inferior.

Mr. McKELLAR. And in the short space of one year a policy that the Navy Department urged as being vital to the national defense is no longer deserving of any attention?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes. And they wanted more battleships when all we could do with our battleships when the war came was to put them in the York River and stretch a screen around them so that nobody could get to them. We all know that the type of fighting ships has changed and why should we want to rush in and expend millions of dollars on ships that are obsolescent, if not obsolete, right now?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am through; I yield the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in connection with this matter of $6,000,000 to increase the elevation of the guns of the American ships, as I previously stated, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and the Appropriations Committee of the House refused to include it in the general appropriation bill. It was presented to us, I think, under great stress. We did not think it was wise to do it at that time. The information furnished us did not satisfy us that the British were elevating their guns, and even if they were elevating their guns the Appropriations Committee thought it was a doubtful question as to whether we had a right under the treaty to elevate our guns. Afterwards, on information that the Navy Department was satisfied was accurate, the Appropriations Committee included this item in the deficiency bill. If Great Britain had been elevating her guns and thus giving them a greater range, the equality would have been destroyed and the American Navy would not have been equal to the British Navy, which was the central idea under the treaty.

I think the American Navy is equal to the British Navy under that treaty, with the new ships that we have built, with their superior range of guns, and all that; and, regardless of this propaganda that a great many naval people are always putting out to the effect that our Navy amounts to nothing, I think our Navy is equal to the British Navy; and I think if a war should come our present Navy would be able to meet, on fair and equal terms, the British Navy.

Mr. CARAWAY. Our Navy is always all right except when they are trying to get more money for it; is it not?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know; I generally speak for the Navy, whether more money is asked for it or not. I do not know to whom the Senator is alluding.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am alluding to a whole lot of folks who come around here every time an appropriation bill is on and want more and more money for the Navy and claim that the Navy is absolutely worthless for the time being.

Mr. SWANSON. I have never thought that. I think we have a fine, splendid Navy.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator never ought to have been on the Committee on Naval Affairs then, because he could not be swept off his feet by this propaganda that the vessels of our Navy could not float.

Mr. SWANSON. I have an idea that our Navy now, regardless of what the Senator from Tennessee thinks, is equal to the British Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I know nothing about the relative strength of the two navies. I am just taking the statements of others. The distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee stated a few moments ago that quite a large number of British ships could shoot farther than the American ships.

Mr. HALE. And also quite a number of American ships can shoot farther than the British ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; only a very small number of American ships.

Mr. SWANSON. Not a very small number. As I understand, five of our recent ships can shoot farther and have larger guns than any ship in the British Navy, except one.

Mr. HALE. Except the Hood.

Mr. SWANSON. Except the Hood. These later ships, equivalent to the older ships of Great Britain, I think, make our Navy really a better navy than that of Great Britain.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is an expert; and I am delighted to know that we are in good condition, notwithstanding the emergency proposal of the Secretary of the Navy of a year ago, wherein he said that the defense of America was absolutely dependent upon the elevation of these guns on our ships.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator may remember that the Naval Affairs Committee refused to make that appropriation because we were not satisfied that the British were elevating their guns. Not being satisfied, they convinced the members of the Appropriations Committee that that necessity existed, and the Appropriations Committee gave them what the Naval Affairs Committee had refused.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sincerely hopeful that that confidence in the American Navy will last beyond the next appropriation bill, but I do not think it will.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think anything along this line is contemplated in the next appropriation bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. It does not make any difference whether it is contemplated or not; it will be in there, and I am just hopeful that we will have some faith in our ships long enough to get by one appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. As to the Japanese Navy, our Navy is vastly superior to the Japanese Navy; but, as I was stating to the Senator, when this accusation was made the British Government came out officially and stated that they were making no elevation of their guns, and did not think they could do it under the treaty.

Mr. McKELLAR. And thereupon our Secretary of State apologized.

Mr. SWANSON. Our Secretary of State apologized for the misinformation, or rather corrected it, and accepted the official statement of the British Government that they intended to make no elevation.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I recollect, our Secretary of State said that he had merely repeated the rumor that he had heard, and that he had ascertained that the rumor was not well founded.

Mr. SWANSON. The Naval Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee did not think it was well founded at the time, and they did not give the appropriation; and I think this ought to go out. At the time I thought it not to have been passed. I think if there is any question with regard to the interpretation of that treaty, which was made in pursuance of a conference called by America, of which we were the inviting party, we ought honestly to comply with our treaty and have a fair interpretation of it before we proceed to violate the treaty framed at a conference that we called. I felt so at that time, and I feel so now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is exactly right about that. I do not see how there can be two opinions with regard to it. Unquestionably there is an inhibition in that treaty against changing the elevation of our guns.

Mr. SWANSON. The Navy Department insisted that the elevation was different from the mount, and that the treaty limited the mounting; but I do not see how they could change the elevation much without altering the mount. If, however, Great Britain had violated the treaty and had proceeded in violation of that treaty to create a navy greater than ours—the navies were to be on a parity—she having violated it, as they understood, secretly, they felt themselves justified, even if it took that interpretation, in doing so.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator knows that Great Britain was not the only party to that treaty. France and Italy and Japan were also parties to it. Would not the Senator say that we ought not to have commenced by violating the treaty because Great Britain had done so? If we felt that she had violated it, we ought to have denounced the treaty. We ought not to have gone ahead to violate it ourselves.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is correct in that. We ought to have denounced the treaty before we violated it. I think the Senator's suggestion is right.

Mr. CARAWAY. We certainly ought to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I apprehend that it is not the desire of Senators to take up the joint resolution for serious discussion this afternoon, as it is now 4.35 o'clock. I do desire, however, to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the text of the original joint resolution which will be found on page 2 of the print.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "proposed," strike out all down to and including the word "vote," on line 15, and insert in lieu thereof:

That any State may provide for a popular vote to affirm or reverse the action of its legislature, such vote to stand in lieu of the prior action of the legislature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment just sent to the desk and read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be reprinted with the amendment just adopted contained in it in order that the Senate to-morrow, when it takes up the joint resolution, will have an opportunity of having before it a print containing the original proposition as finally perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be reprinted with the amendment just agreed to incorporated therein.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I remind the Senate that the pending amendment—which will be taken up, I assume, on to-morrow—is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the status of the pending amendment has been in no way changed by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 22, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 21, 1924.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. TILSON).

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We gratefully pause in this silence, O Lord! Thou art our loving Heavenly Father, whom we embrace by faith—trusting Thee where we can not prove. Thou hast shared Thy infinite nature with man and thus so wondrously endowed him; may we not fail in its use and in its development but strive little by little to grow characters that are after the pattern and similitude of the Master's. Bless us with the sense of gain that comes with grateful hearts. May our love and faith look out upon the future and fear no ill. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 229.

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House, as follows, to wit:

Irrigation and Reclamation: SAMUEL B. HILL, of Washington.

War Claims: C. B. HUDSPETH, of Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the House allowed me to extend my remarks on the wheat problem and to insert some remarks I made before the Committee on Agriculture. I ask leave now to extend those remarks, made before the Committee on Agriculture, in 8-point type, so that they will be like the rest of the speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Driver	Kless	Ransley
Andrew	Eagan	Knutson	Reed, N. Y.
Anthony	Fairfield	Kunz	Reed, W. Va.

Domnick	Kahn	Oldfield	Zihlman
Doughton	Kelly	Perkins
Doyle	Kendall	Perman
Drewry	Kent	Phillips

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and eighteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will please resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6820, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday a point of order had been made to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]; a point of order had been made by the gentleman from Idaho, and also one by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], the ground in each case being that the amendment was not germane to the section. The question then arose whether a point of order could be made at that time after the former point of order made by the gentleman from Idaho had been overruled.

The Chair has looked into the precedents a little about the matter, and while he announced tentatively yesterday that he thought the point of order could be made, he was not entirely sure of his ground. He has looked somewhat at the authorities. In the fifth volume of Hinds' Precedents, page 935, is a decision made by the Hon. Henry S. Boutell, of Illinois, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. It seems to be the only decision in point on that particular subject.

I will read the decision as it appears in Hinds' Precedents:

On March 22, 1904, during consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. THOMAS S. BUTLER, of Pennsylvania, proposed an amendment, against which Mr. Jesse Overstreet, of Indiana, raised a point of order.

Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, and John S. Snook, of Ohio, having risen to parliamentary inquiries concerning additional points of order, the Chairman said:

"The Chair will state that he considers the better practice for all points of order to be made at one time. The Chair thinks that if one makes the point of order against an amendment which should be overruled that other gentlemen have the right to raise points of order against the pending amendment. * * * The Chair stated that the gentleman making the point of order should, according to the best usage, include all the reasons for making his point of order, but that other gentlemen could make other points of order if the Chair overruled the point first made."

In view of that decision, which the Chair thinks is sound, the Chair will entertain the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] that the amendment is not germane. Is anything to be said on that point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks. I submit that the amendment is germane for the reason that this section provides for the pay of all men in the service, officers and enlisted men, and if there is any recruiting to be done it necessarily follows that some officer or some enlisted man will perform that duty.

Now, the Chair suggested that because on a preceding page of the bill there was a heading entitled "Recruiting" that necessarily this amendment ought to be offered to that particular section, but if the Chair will examine that section I think he will find that it refers to advertising, contingent expenses, the transportation of the recruits, the care of the recruits pending enlistment and incidental expenses of that kind, but in no way affects the pay of the officers and men who may be engaged in recruiting. So if that be true it seems, in the opinion of the gentleman from Texas, that both of these items—the items included under the heading of "Recruiting" and the items included under the heading of "Pay"—would necessarily enter into the matter of recruiting and that this amendment might properly be offered at either place. If offered to the recruiting section it would be germane to the items of expenses included therein and if offered to the pay section it would be germane to the pay of the men who are engaged in that particular service.

I would like to call the attention of the Chair to what is commonly called the Hull amendment—with which the Chair is familiar—appearing in the last part of the bill and which applies to all portions of the bill, the Hull amendment providing that no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for time devices, and so forth. As the Chair knows that has repeatedly and almost immemorially been held in order, with one exception.

I do not care to argue at length, but it seems to me this amendment is germane because it affects the pay of officers and men who do the recruiting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is as follows:

Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, of such boys for such enlistment.

The particular language to which the Chair desires to call attention is this: "For the recruiting or enlistment." The question is whether that is germane to the paragraph just read. The paragraph which has been read provides for the pay of officers and men, some of whom, doubtless, are engaged in the business of recruiting. The amendment, however, does not allude specifically to the pay of officers and men but to the expenses of recruiting. The paragraph beginning on page 9, headed "Bureau of Navigation, transportation and recruiting," contains the following language, which appears on page 10:

Expenses of recruiting for the naval service.

Now, manifestly, this amendment alludes to that same thing, namely, the expenses of recruiting. The Chair is of the opinion that if this amendment is germane it should have been offered to that paragraph. It does not refer to the pay of officers and men, but refers to the expenses of recruiting, which are expressly carried in the paragraph on pages 9 and 10. For that reason the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 27, at the end of the paragraph, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for the pay of any officer or man who may recruit or enlist any boy under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parent or guardian, if any, of such boy for such enlistment."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, and the point of order is that it is not germane to that section. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is almost a waste of time to argue the point of order after the recent decision of the Chair, but I do want to call the attention of the Chair to this added fact: That this paragraph has to do solely with supplies and the keeping of accounts; that it has to do with various classes of men and not with their activities at all. The activities of the men are not specialized in the paragraph at all, but it is only the classes of men that are referred to in the paragraph, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas specifically selects the kind of work that is to be limited, and that class of work is not referred to in the paragraph anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes it there is no doubt about one proposition. The pay of the officers or the men who would do this recruiting work is included within the paragraph which has just been read. If the Chair is wrong about that, he will be glad to be corrected, but it is the judgment of the Chair that the pay of such officers and men was included in this paragraph. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is almost exactly the same amendment offered in the Army bill, to which the Chair referred yesterday in his decision. That amendment, which was also offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be available for the pay of any enlisted man or officer who may be assigned to recruiting men or boys under 21 years of age, without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor or minors.

The language is almost identical, with just a slight change.

As the Chair called attention yesterday, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], on that occasion held that that was a proper amendment; that it was a limitation, and overruled the point of order which was made to it.

Mr. BEGG. Would the Chair permit just one interjection there? If that amendment is germane and a man was assigned to enlistment duty, and through accident should happen to enlist a boy 19 years of age, and his pay was to be held up—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not a parliamentary inquiry. That is an argument.

Mr. DOWELL. That is an argument, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BEGG. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the proper form to make the amendment germane would be to make it applicable to the age of enlistment and not to the salary or to the money paid.

In spite of the precedents heretofore, to be consistent and to be at all intelligent in language and avoid complexities, the only kind of an amendment that is applicable is one that says enlistments in the Navy can not be made unless the boy under 21 years of age has the written consent of his parents; and, again, let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this paragraph does not refer to enlistments in any way, and an amendment should not be held in order simply because it says "no part of the moneys." What moneys? The moneys that are to be paid to the retired officers or what class of appropriations in this paragraph is to be curtailed in case an officer does make such enlistments? That is the point I want to submit to the Chair for his consideration. How would the comptroller know to which paragraph to apply this limitation in case the officer did make a mistake and enlist such a man?

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestions made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] are pertinent in an inquiry by the committee as to the merits of this proposition. They do not, however, go to the matter of parliamentary law involved. The Chair is not called upon, nor is the committee now, to decide just how this would be administered. The only question involved is, Is it such an amendment as the House ought to consider? The Chair thinks he should follow the precedent, the only one there is; however, if the Chair were deciding it upon the merits, as to whether it is a limitation or not, the Chair is entirely frank in saying he thinks it is a limitation and that the former ruling of Chairman LONGWORTH was correct. The Chair, in view of that opinion, feels that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to debate the amendment. I understand the Chair holds the amendment in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if we can agree on a limit of time for the discussion.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would be glad to agree.

Mr. FRENCH. Would 20 minutes on a side be satisfactory?
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would suggest making it 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, the time to be in control of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, no; I want control of half of the time.

Mr. FRENCH. All right; then I ask that one-half the time be in the control of the gentleman from Texas and one-half to be controlled by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in one hour, one-half the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I said yesterday, I do not want the gentleman on that side of the House to conduct a filibuster here. We ought to get this bill through, and if the gentleman does not reduce the time I will object.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina has suggested his objection to 30 minutes on a side, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that we limit debate to 30 minutes, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and the other half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. This is the most important question we have had before us in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would have much preferred that this amendment could have been considered in the original form in which I drafted it, but, gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] made a point of order against the form in which it was originally presented, and it will not lie in the mouths of gentlemen of the committee or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] to now make the objection that the amendment is drawn in a fashion that will be objectionable on account of its form.

What is proposed by this amendment? It is simply proposed that the Navy Department in recruiting boys who are minors, who are under 21 years of age, who under the law of every State in this Union are supposed to be under the control of their parents for the purpose of their education, for the purpose of contributing to the support of the families, shall, before it enlists any boy under 21 years of age, secure the consent of the parents of that minor, if he has parents. Of course, if he has no parent or guardian, he may enlist in the Navy under this amendment. The amendment in practically the same form is already the law with reference to the Army.

Mr. MADDEN. It cost the Army about $1,000,000 last year.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, while I did not yield to the gentleman, I shall yield to him retroactively. The gentleman says that it cost the Army nearly $1,000,000 last year. I do not see how the gentleman can arrive with exactitude at those figures. How can he speculate as to how many men and at what expense the Army would have enlisted if it had not been governed by this provision? I have a quotation here from the press, from the War Department, headed as follows, showing that the Army has not been embarrassed by this provision:

ARMY GETTING RECRUITS.

War Department gets increases in enlistments. Recent figures show that recruiting for the Army is improving in a most satisfactory manner.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No.

Mr. BEGG. It is a serious question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Since it is a serious question from the gentleman from Ohio, I yield.

Mr. BEGG. What would happen in case the naval officers were to enlist a boy who looked the age of 24 and who was only 18, but who swore that he was 24?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will answer the gentleman. Here is what the effect of this amendment on the Army bill was: The effect of the amendment on the Army bill was that the War Department simply issued instructions to its recruiting officers not to enlist boys under 21, and when they did enlist them under 21, without the consent of their parents, their discharge was ordered. That is all it amounted to. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] had not made the point of order against my amendment in the form originally drawn, it would have been in identically the same language as it is in the Army appropriation act, and the Navy could have adopted that same policy, so that if recruiting authorities should make a mistake in the enlistment of a boy without the parents' consent, the error could be rectified by discharging the boy when the fact was ascertained. What does The Adjutant General of the Army say? Under this amendment he says in the news clipping that the recruiting by the 1st day of June of this year will be up to the limit that is permitted under the law, that the Army will have all of the enlisted men on June 1 that is permitted by existing law, and it is operating under practically this very amendment as to enlistments.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I have great respect for the gentleman and his opinion, but I merely want to point out to him something that he does not know because he was not on the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am sorry.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The Adjutant General's Office, through Major Carter, gave evidence before the Military Affairs Committee that they had lost 16,000 men during the first five months of this fiscal year because of this restriction.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Very well. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. It is not a matter of answering me. I merely wanted to put that into the Record.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Suppose the Army did lose 16,000 men. What does that mean? It means that the parents of 16,000 boys wanted those boys at home rather than in the Army. [Applause.] That is all it means.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Oh, no. If the gentleman will kindly yield again, it shows the difficulty of getting hold of the parents or getting any answer from the parents. That was the difficulty.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There ought not to be any difficulty about getting in touch with the parents. Where are those boys when they want to enlist? Why does not the boy get the consent of his parents and then go to the recruiting officer to enlist?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; if it is to close debate.

Mr. FRENCH. I want to move to fix the time. I move to close debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho moves to close debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto in 25 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for a motion of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman whether he yielded for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yielded for a unanimous-consent request. I did not know that I was yielding for a motion to break up my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman declines to yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In all good conscience I thought the gentleman was going to propound a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. FRENCH. I thought the gentleman had just concluded his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had his time extended by unanimous consent for five minutes and had been recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand this situation, there is not a State in this Union which permits a boy 18 years of age to sell or purchase property. He can not do anything, so far as the sale of property is concerned. The gentleman's amendment does not want him to be permitted to do a thing which his father and mother may think that at 18 years of age may affect his whole life.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Absolutely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is all.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Absolutely.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does not the gentleman know that in nearly every State in the Union a boy 18 years of age can be licensed by the State to teach school and that the Civil Service Commission accepts them into the civil service at 18 years of age without first getting permission from the parents, either to teach school or to enter the Government service at that age?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will ask the gentleman this question: Does not the gentleman from Iowa also know that there is a great deal of difference between entering into voluntary civil employment which can be terminated at the will of either the parent or the child and enlisting under a military contract to serve for five years or three in the Army or the Navy? [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSEYER. A minor teaching school contracts, and he is held to his contract and—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. A minor—

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; one over 18 years of age.

Several gentlemen rose.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I can not yield any further just now. But the gentleman from Iowa says that a minor can contract to teach school, and is bound by his contract. How is he bound by it? He can put on his hat and walk out of the school-room and never come back.

The gentleman from Iowa taught school and he ought to know that fact. Let the boy pick up his hat and walk out of the Navy and he will have a sheriff or a deputy United States marshal with a lasso around his neck dragging him back and putting him in the brig for some two or three years; that is what would happen. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield for a question in regard to the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. The amendment states that no pay shall be made to an officer who enlists a boy?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Suppose the Navy had a volunteer officer who enlists the boy, could not the Navy enlist them just the same?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If that is true, the gentleman ought not to object, for then he can get men in the Navy. If that is true, then the gentleman ought to be in favor of my amendment, because it will not hinder the Navy from doing what the gentleman wants it to do, and that is enlisting boys in the Navy, regardless of the wishes of their parents.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is not that the real effect of it?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If it is, the gentleman ought to be mighty well comforted, because it will not hurt the Navy's wishes. I can not yield any more. What does the Navy do about these boys? It tells them in flaming headlines, "Join the Navy; travel; see the world; get an education and promotion; get good pay," and about two weeks after the boy enlists, running away from home and leaving his old father out in the field and leaving his mother at the cowpen milking cows; why, he runs away and joins the Navy, because he wants to see the world, and then in about two weeks this boy, filled with dreams of travel and romance, wakes up down in the bowels of the ship heaving coal, and he wires the old man, "For God sake, get me out." The old man wires his Congressman, "For God sake, get my boy out," and the Congressman beats it down to the Navy Department, and the Navy Department says, "We are sorry; we have no power under the contract of enlistment to discharge the young man, because the law allows us to enlist men 18 years of age and over without their parents' consent, and we have entered into a contract with this young man, and we can not release him unless you show that the old man is almost dead with paralysis and the old woman is not able to do the milking and housework." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask for an additional two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I shall have to object to that. I do not think any one man should consume all the time to be consumed on this question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I proposed this amendment, and the burden is upon me to show that it is a proper amendment.

I hope the very genial and gallant gentleman from Illinois will not do that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am overpersuaded.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think if we are going to get through with this bill this session there ought to be a limitation made upon debate, and without any limitation on it I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing this poster from the Navy Department [exhibiting]. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. That can not be done, because no such thing can be printed in the Record without the consent of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is no greater abuse practiced anywhere than by the Navy on the question of enlistment. [Applause.] Last year when we were considering the Army appropriation bill I read into the Record a letter from a widow woman whose boy had just been taken into the Navy. I inserted that into the Record at that time, and in my time I am going to ask the Clerk to read the letter I received from the lady whose boy had just been taken into the service. The letter is addressed to the governor of my State, Hon. N. E. Kendall. I want you to listen to this letter because it represents what is going on over the country to-day. Since that time I have received letters where they claim misrepresentations have been made and boys have been taken into the service under 21 years of age and who are not able to get out afterwards except under the usual form of securing a release. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter designated.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADEL, IOWA, January 5, 1923.

HON. N. E. KENDALL,
Governor State of Iowa.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you in regard to my son, Raymond Marker. Thursday there was a Navy recruiting officer came to Adel and got my son with another boy to run away from home and enlist. Got the boys to go to the high-school superintendent and tell him a falsehood to get their age, and also got them to come to their own homes to take their insurance policy, not letting me know one thing about it. As soon as we found it out our sheriff called the recruiting station to find them. We asked them to hold the boy until we got there, and the captain said he would do so, but instead he turned right around and sent the boy out on the 5.15 train, only giving us 40 minutes to make the trip in, and they were gone when we got there, and they only laughed and made fun of us. Does this Government approve of such work? I have been left alone with my family on my hands to support and I have did it by washing and day work. Now I am sick and broke down, when my boy was trying to help me along, and then to have some officer come and do as he certainly has done surely can't be the ways our Government should do. Is there any way I can get him out, as I sure need him, as you will find? I have lived right here in this town and people here know. Would you please do what you can to help us get the boy? I will sure appreciate it more than I can tell.

His mother,

Mrs. MINNIE MARKER STEELE.

Mr. MADDEN. How old was this boy?

Mr. DOWELL. Over 18. And, gentlemen, this is going on all the time. These men are representing to the boys the great things that will come to them if they will enlist. They get them into the service, and when they take it up with the department the department invariably indorses the action of the recruiting officer, and they can get no consideration from the department. In this case I took the matter up with the department, and this is the last clause of the letter which the department sent to me:

Before the bureau can consider the question of discharging young Marker it will be necessary that he present a written request by way of his immediate commanding officer, with affidavits from disinterested persons, testifying as to the circumstances of the case.

That, in fact, means that the boy could not be released from the service. Since that time I have had others call upon me and tell me that their boys had been taken into the service upon representations which they claimed, at least, were not correct. It seems to me, gentlemen, that the Navy Department ought to be required to consult the mothers and fathers of these boys under 21 years of age if they desire the enlistment of the boys.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was interested to know whether the boy made his request, and whether or not the proof outlined in the letter was presented and what action the department took on that.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know what was presented to the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEARNS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by making it close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to amend by making it 30 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute that the debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho moves as a substitute that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. The question is first on the amendment to the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Are these speeches all to be made on one side of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter to be decided later. The Chair will, as far as he can, alternate if gentlemen ask for recognition. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] fixing the time at 30 minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, what are we voting on?

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the gentleman from Kansas the Chair will state that we are voting on the 30-minute proposition offered by Mr. JONES.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROACH. The motion was first made that the debate be now closed. Then a substitute motion was offered by the gentleman, making it 15 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] to close debate at once. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] moved as an amendment to the motion that it should close in 30 minutes. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] moved a substitute, that it close in 20 minutes. The question comes up first on the amendment to the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is adopted to the motion offered originally. Then will the House vote on the substitute for 20 minutes after it has been fixed at 30?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the substitute, it was a substitute for the amendment. If there is a motion offered by way of substitute for the amendment, then the substitute is first voted upon. If it were a question of substitute for the motion, it would be a different proposition. But when an amendment is offered, Mr. Chairman, and there is a substitute offered for that amendment, that is practically an amendment to the amendment, and before the amendment is voted on you are going to find out whether that amendment is amended by the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the gentleman is right. The question turns to a considerable degree upon what the substitute was, whether it was a substitute for the amendment or for the motion. If it was a substitute for the motion, of course the vote can not be had until the motion is perfected. But if it is a substitute for the amendment, then it is an amendment to the amendment, and then it would be voted on first.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. As I recollect, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman said, "I move a substitute for that that it be 20 minutes." That is, it would be a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds it would be a substitute for the motion to close debate at once.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we would have closed the debate by this time if there had not been a filibuster.

Mr. FRENCH. I had in mind, Mr. Chairman, to move it as a substitute to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is right, then the Chair is proceeding properly.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Can not the Chairman have his motion read? I remember it just as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] did. Can we not have it read and see what the motion was?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk, without objection, will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Idaho made the last motion.

Mr. BLANTON. As a substitute.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to have his motion read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered verbally, and is taken by the Reporter. But the Clerk has no record of it at the desk here.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. LITTLE. The regular order is a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the Chairman have the stenographer read the motion of the gentleman from Idaho? Then we will know what we are talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state what his understanding of it is.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. You can not go back of the demand for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that a statement by the Chair is all that can be furnished at this time. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] had made a motion to close the debate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] moved an amendment to it that the debate close in 30 minutes. As a substitute for the original motion the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] moved that the debate close in 20 minutes. We are now about to vote on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. LITTLE. Is there no way to know what he did say? I remember what he said myself. We are wasting time. I have the right to find out.

Mr. FRENCH. The Chair has indicated to the House what I said.

Mr. LITTLE. No; he thinks he has, but he has not.

Mr. FRENCH. He has indicated what I think I said.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. May we not have the Reporter read it?

Mr. BEGG. I call for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Business will be suspended until the committee is in order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, let me ask this plain question. Does the Chair hold we can not have the Reporter read it?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LITTLE. I insist it is.

Mr. BEGG. The Chair has stated the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now put the motion. The regular order is demanded, and the regular order is—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. JONES. That is not in order, because it is an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will offer his amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas that debate be closed in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves an amendment to the amendment that debate close in 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is an amendment in the third degree. I offered an amendment to the amendment, and the gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment in the third degree. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion to close debate.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the substitute I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion as amended.

The question was taken; and the motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, no one has a higher regard for the judgment of the gentleman from Texas than have I, and I regret to be compelled to differ from him. Here is a matter of policy which has to do with the Navy and its welfare, and it has to do with the welfare of the young men of the country.

I hope the members of the committee will realize that upon the passage of this amendment depends, in large part, the fate of the Navy for the next fiscal year. The passage of the amendment would be one of the most disastrous actions that could be taken by this House.

You are familiar with the present situation. No young man under 18 to-day can enlist unless he has the written consent, in affidavit form, of his parents. More than that, the orders which are issued by the department require that a young man under 21 years of age shall furnish proof as to his age. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is to place the burden of proof upon the Navy instead of upon the individual who applies for enlistment or upon his people.

Let me hastily refer to a few of the salient points that have to do with this amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. I did not quite understand the gentleman. Did the gentleman say that men under 18 had to have the consent of their parents, and is that the law?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; under 18 years of age. Let me make a statement, which I think will answer all questions and save time, because we are hurried for time this morning.

Upon the 31st of last December there were 26,865 men under 21 years of age in the Navy. That is nearly one-third of the entire enlisted personnel of the Naval Establishment. When you recognize that many of these men attained their twenty-first birthday after they had enlisted it is fair to assume that between one-third and one-half of the new enlistments in the year are of young men under 21 years of age. During the current year approximately 25,000 new men are entering the Navy and that will be true approximately for the next year, the number estimated being about 24,500.

Between July 1, 1923, and January 1, 1924, there were 17,293 men enlisted in the Navy. Of that number 287 were discharged. Why? Because they were either of nonage or else they were subject to some physical disability. Assuming, however, that they were all of nonage then what is the situation? Out of 17,293 only 287 were of nonage, and this included all of them, whether of nonage or physically disabled, men who were discharged because they had not furnished the proper affidavits or because they had furnished false affidavits.

The number I have indicated as having been discharged represents less than 2 per cent of those who were enrolled in the Navy. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas you would place the burden of proof on the Navy, and you would require not that the 287 but that the 17,293 come forward with affidavits from their parents or guardians showing that they were of the proper age.

Not only that; under the present system 287 were discharged because it developed they were of nonage. Those 287 went out not with a dishonorable discharge, but they went out with a discharge that was marked "discharged for nonage." The old policy that was followed of giving a young man a dishonorable discharge under such circumstances has been discontinued and abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he will say whether he saw the sign "Spend the winter at Palm Beach" which is held up to these boys of 18 years or less, and does he approve of that policy of the Navy?

Mr. FRENCH. It may be that some of the advertisements are too lurid. It may be that there are some that are misleading, and if so we ought to find a way to stop it. We ought not to mislead, but that is not the point involved here.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I think it is, because that is a lure to the young man, especially when they advertise and make statements like this, "Go out to Hawaii," with a picture where there are dancing maidens on a beach and the man in the Navy is on a ship sailing toward the dancing maidens. That is exactly what would appeal to a young man.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit, the very things the gentleman talks about have been omitted from the advertisements of the Navy and are no longer being used.

Mr. FRENCH. And the lurid advertisements have also been discontinued and I have not seen any lately.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I saw one last month on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. FRENCH. If there are unreasonable or extravagant advertisements, manifestly they ought not to be continued.

There are a great many young men in our country who can not show the date of their birth for the reason that they were born in States where birth registrations are not required, and not only will this operate to the great disadvantage of the Navy touching men who are under 21, but it will operate also to the disadvantage of the men above 21. Take the experience of the Army, for instance, last year, and you will find that something like 6,000 young men applied for enlistment in the Army who were over 21 years of age, but when the recruiting officer asked them to furnish affidavits showing they were of age they did not choose to go to that trouble, or it would take too much time, or, as to others, they became offended and went away from the recruiting station and the Government lost that many men who otherwise would have joined the Army.

Let me make this further suggestion: It is the greatest advantage to the Navy to have young men below 21 years of age, because they readily adjust themselves to Navy life and they begin to learn a trade.

More than that, the Navy is not in position to make an appeal that is attractive to young men above 21 years of age. In the first place, the pay is too small. Twenty-one dollars per month, plus subsistence, is what the Navy can offer. Young men above 21 years of age are apt to have trades. They are more apt to be married and have families dependent upon them; but young men who are under 21 years of age are not so apt to have these responsibilities. The Navy furnishes an opportunity to young men to go into the Navy and acquire a trade in one of many lines and after a few years of service be able to take part in the citizenship of this country as a well-trained man. Go, if you please, to the employment agencies throughout the United States and you will find that those in charge will tell you that the young men who come from the Navy with honorable discharges have no trouble in being placed in the industrial world, although there may be a surplus of men from elsewhere who are competing for places. Why? Because the young men from the Navy are trained young men and they are proficient in the lines they desire to follow. They are skilled machinists, or carpenters, or electricians, or are skilled in some other of many attractive crafts.

Under present conditions every year 20,000 or 25,000 men approximately go from the Navy of the United States to mingle with the citizenry of every State in this Union. Gentlemen, here is a great body of men who mean for the efficiency of our Government from the standpoint of national defense. In event of crisis they are ready for service. If you pass this amendment you will stop or retard this flow. The next thing you will probably need to consider will be the question of raising the pay of enlisted men in order to induce men to enter the service and make it a profession. Then what do you do further? You build up a permanent enlisted personnel—professional sailor men, if you please—and you diminish the reserve of available men in the United States who could respond to the defense of their country in the event of a national emergency.

Gentlemen, I want to tell you that this amendment is one of the most unfortunate propositions that could have been proposed touching the efficiency of the Navy, touching the welfare of your country, and touching even the welfare of thousands of the young men under 21 who are restless, who are dissatisfied, who want to make something of themselves, and who crave the opportunity of this service and of the training they will receive. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota, and Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he should now recognize some one in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in every State in this Union the contract of a young man under 21 years of age is not lawful and can be set aside in the courts at the instance of the young man when he becomes 21. That is the law of your home States where you live and where your constituents live. In every State of this Union the father and the mother of a boy, under the laws of your States, are entitled to his earnings, if you please, until he is 21 years old. That is the law of your home State. That is the law that governs your constituents, if you please, who sent you to Congress. There is not a man in this House to-day who would have his boy, 18 years of age, join the Navy. I challenge any man to get up here now and say he would like to see his 18-year-old boy join the Navy. You will not do it, because you do not believe in it as applied to your own 18-year-old son.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I accept that challenge. If my boy wanted to join the Navy, I would be glad to have him join.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and you would be the first man who would want to get him out three months afterwards, because your boy would write you and say, "For God's sake, Dad, get me out." How many boys have you?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Two.

Mr. BLANTON. How old are they.

Mr. UNDERHILL. One is 19 and the other is 26.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, they are past the 18-year age. You are ineligible to accept the challenge. I am asking men who have boys 18 years of age. You think you have control over your boy, and you are able to keep him out of the Navy. There are lots of families living on farms who have much less control over their 18-year-old boys, and these alluring naval offers are made in these lurid advertisements, in every color of the rainbow, offering inducements attractive to all boys of this age, and these boys are inveigled into enlisting and their families know nothing about it until it is too late. Then they appeal to us, and we can not get them out. I say it is an outrage, and a Member here who will not put his own 18-year-old boy in the Navy, who would not like to see his own 18-year-old boy go in, ought not to vote the 18-year-old boys of other men and women of the country into the Navy without the consent of their parents.

I want to give you a concrete case. An 18-year-old boy from my district enlisted in the Army on June 30, just the day before this similar provision now in the Army bill went into effect. The Army provision went into effect on the 1st day of July, and that prevented the Army from enlisting boys under 21 years of age after July 1 without the consent of their parents. This boy enlisted the day before that provision went into effect, and when I sent the affidavits in to the War Department showing that he was 18 years of age, showing that he did not have the consent of his father and mother, showing that his enlistment was without their knowledge, and asked that he be discharged, The Adjutant General came back with the statement that the law had not yet gone into effect; that it lacked just one day of going into effect; and that he could not release him. I said, "Mr. Adjutant General, if you make that kind of a technical construction in this case to hold this boy in the Army, I am going to place your ridiculous ruling before the Members of the House when Congress meets." The idea of holding a boy back because of one day!

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Could The Adjutant General do otherwise than to follow the law?

Mr. BLANTON. He did do otherwise. He turned him loose. He saw how ridiculous it looked, and he turned him loose.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The gentleman knows that in the Navy now they have only the consent of one parent, and if the boy can obtain the consent of his mother they take him in.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to have the consent of both parents. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said that this cost $1,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Two million dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care whether it costs $10,000,000, and I am an economist. I would rather see $10,000,000 paid out of the Government Treasury than have one boy of 18 years of age taken away from his parents in peace times by the Government when they did not want him taken away. It is a matter of principle, it is a question of taking a man's son away from him when he is under 21 years of age, when the man by law is entitled to that son. I do not believe that you will vote to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak briefly on the amendment to the naval appropriation bill offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The object of this amendment is to prevent recruiting officers from enlisting young men between the ages of 18 and 21 years without the consent of the parent or guardian of such minors. I am heartily in favor of this amendment and hope it will prevail. I recognize the fact that we should maintain a navy sufficient to place this Nation on an equal footing with the naval powers of the earth for the purposes of protection and defense, but the personnel of the Navy should be recruited from young men who have reached their majority, except in emergencies and in cases where the consent of the parent or guardian has been obtained.

The methods resorted to by the naval authorities in their effort to recruit young men under the age of 21 years without the consent of the fathers and mothers, in my judgment, can not be too strongly condemned. In every post office and in every public building throughout the land flaming posters are displayed, misleading in the extreme, designed to attract young men and lure them from the farms, schools, and homes. The boy reads these glowing accounts of travel, sight-seeing, and adventure, rushes to the recruiting office, joins the Navy, and in a short time there comes a pathetic appeal from the parents for his release. Such a condition should not prevail. In justice to the boys, in justice to the fathers and mothers, the recruiting officer should secure the consent of the parents of such young men before they are inducted into the service. [I shall never consent to the enlistment of minors in the Army or Navy in times of peace unless the consent of the fathers and mothers shall have first been obtained.] It is suggested that the Navy affords an opportunity for education and training that the young man from the families of the poor can not otherwise obtain. I agree that it does afford an opportunity for excellent training, but it is a sad commentary on this great Republic to intimate that young men of this country because of poverty are compelled to join the fighting forces of the Nation in order to secure an education. It has often been said that the poor fight the battles of the rich, but let it never be truthfully said of this great Republic of ours. Rather let it be said that patriotism, not poverty, prompts our boys to join the Army and Navy.

The hope of the Nation abides in the home. The best citizenship is molded in the home under the influence of mother. If we could keep all the boys of the Nation in the schools and in the homes under the influence, guidance, and direction of the mothers of this country until they reached the age of 21 years, and if such a policy were possible in all the other nations of the earth, it would work mightily for loyalty, patriotism, happiness, contentment, and the peace of the world. To my mind there is but a twilight zone between a mother's love and the atmosphere of heaven. It twinkles over the cradle of innocence, the stronghold of youth, the citadel of silver-haired age. Let its hallowed influence be undisturbed. Let us protect the boys, respect the mothers, and preserve the integrity of the homes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition against the amendment.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, is it now in order to offer the motion that I did 10 minutes ago, notwithstanding the action of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. To close debate at once?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has very serious doubt about that. Only five minutes remain.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have a bona fide amendment to this amendment and I would like to have a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] opposed to the amendment or in favor of it?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is this: Before the time was limited 15 minutes had been used in favor of the amendment, 10 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. After debate was limited, 10 minutes was used by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] against the amendment and 5 minutes were used in favor of it. The question is now whether the Chair should equally divide the 20 minutes that was fixed between those who were opposed to the amendment and those in favor of it, or whether he should take into consideration the amount of time used before debate was limited.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly the right of those who are opposed to the amendment to have the remaining time.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the fact that 20 minutes have already been used in favor of the amendment and but 10 minutes against it, the Chair thinks it only just to recognize gentlemen who are opposed to the amendment. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Newton].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there is something that can be said for legislation requiring the consent of the parents up to the point of 21 years of age, but that is a matter that ought to be brought in here as legislation and not by way of a limitation upon an appropriation bill. Here we have this provision that no part of the money appropriated shall be utilized for the pay of any officer or any enlisted man who may recruit any men for the Navy under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parent or guardian. There are some men who may want to enter the Navy. They have been known to get others to impersonate and forge the names of the parents. They have brought the ostensible parent to the recruiting office and have gotten him to make the statement or the affidavit, and the boy has gone into the Navy. Under this limitation the officer who was thereby imposed upon would not be entitled to his pay, and it would be the duty of the finance officer in the Navy, the duty of the Comptroller General, to hold up the officer's pay. I submit that this is the wrong way to go about this matter. Furthermore, let me say this, that after a boy gets to be of the age of 18 years and care is exercised on the part of the Navy Department in an endeavor to ascertain whether the parents consent or not, the idea, if they do happen to let the boy in, of letting him understand that he can get out of the agreement into which he entered because he has a Congressman or parent who will go to the front for him, is mighty bad training for the boy. Generally speaking, he ought to be made to understand that he should live up to his agreement, and he ought to be told at the age of 18 years that he is going to be kept to it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. How about the number of parents who exploit their children and take their wages away from them, where the boy goes into the Navy to get rid of that thing?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] mentioned 286 of these cases. We have something like 86,000 men in the Navy. I am not willing to write a policy of Congress in respect to the Navy on account of 280 men when it is likely to affect a fair portion of the 86,000 men who are in the Navy.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. Does not the gentleman know and does not every man here know that the lure to these young men is largely to get the boys from around the streets and pool rooms who will not work for their mothers or anybody else, and is it not a fact that if these fellows should go home and ask their fathers and mothers for papers that their mothers would scrub their hands off rather than let them go into the Navy?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Any man who has been in the Navy and met those boys and has seen them at work and play know it is a mighty good place. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SNYDER. Let somebody tell the truth about this proposition.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I claim recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to answer something the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] said. He said the Navy had no attraction for these men, that they were not lured in, that the pay was poor; but that is not what the Navy says in its recruiting posters. I hold one in my hand. It advertises "excellent pay, unlimited promotion, health, recreation, sports, early retirement with an independent income, medical and general attention, board and room." These are some of the things the Navy offers to secure these young men.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I do not yield.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Is it not true—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will not yield. My time is limited. After getting them in the Navy, what do they do? After they are once in the Navy the boys are like partridges in a trap, they can see the door to get in, but they can not find the door to get out. The Navy does lure these boys by the attraction of travel, by the attraction of special training, and this special training generally consists in shoveling coal down in the bunkers in the bowels of the ship or to scrub—

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Ah!

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, you may "ah." I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he has got a boy 18 years of age that he is willing to have go in and join the Navy?

Mr. SNYDER. I have recommended a good many.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Your own?

Mr. SNYDER. I have not got any. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from New York, like lots of other people, is willing for somebody else's boy to go in the Navy, but he is not willing for his own.

Mr. SNYDER. This time the gentleman from New York wants to build up the Army and the Navy and the gentleman from Texas wants to break it down.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. JONES. I have an amendment to offer which I have been trying to offer for a half hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: At the end of the Connally amendment insert the following: "or unless the applicant furnishes a birth certificate or the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses showing such applicant for enlistment to be 21 years of age."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the Chair was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 93.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. French and Mr. CONNALLY of Texas) reported that there were—ayes 119, noes 104.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FUEL AND TRANSPORTATION.

For coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $14,500,000: Provided, That fuel acquired other than by purchase shall not be issued without charging the applicable appropriation with the cost of such fuel at the rate current at the time of issue for fuel purchased: Provided further, That the President may direct the use, wholly or in part, of fuel on hand, however acquired, to be charged at the last-issue rate for fuel acquired by purchase, when, in his judgment, prices quoted for supplying fuel are excessive.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. May I have the attention of the gentleman from Idaho? The appropriation for fuel in the bill here is $14,500,000. As I understand it that is the figure that was allowed by the Budget. Has the gentleman the figure that was requested by the Navy from the Budget officer?

Mr. FRENCH. No; we do not have that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. You do not have that?

Mr. FRENCH. That is not in regular order submitted to the committee, and we did not call for it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Well, it is my understanding that the Navy requests, in order to carry out their program for the next year, will require, so far as they can now estimate, $435,000 more than that which was recommended by the Budget and which has been recommended by the committee. Now, I want to say just this. A Navy is of use not only because it has a number of ships, but only when those ships can meet in fleet formation for maneuvers. That was clearly demonstrated to some of us who were favored with the trip down to Panama one year ago. Now, the maneuvers then were very extensive and profitable. This year they have had similar ones, but in the Caribbean Sea. The Navy has planned extensive maneuvers elsewhere for this next year. Estimates were made upon that basis and were submitted to the Director of the Budget. The amount allowed will not permit of those maneuvers, if the price of fuel remains as it is, and if the price of fuel will go up—and it has been going up during the past two months—then it will still further handicap them. Now, these maneuvers ought to be carried out. They will be in a strategic position where the fleet has not yet been engaged in extended maneuvers. It seems to me it is not in the interest of sound economy to go to work and cut down the Navy requests for fuel to the extent of $435,000.

Now, I have the utmost confidence in the subcommittee and the work of its members and of the distinguished chairman of that committee. But I have not the same confidence in some of those who are employed in the office of the Director of the Budget and their knowledge of naval affairs. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has been with the fleet; he has studied its needs intensively and sympathetically. That is not true of the men in the office of the Bureau of the Budget. They have little or no knowledge of what the real needs of the fleet are.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TEMPLE). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. They have no idea of just what the fleet does in these maneuvers. They set this figure, $14,500,000, arbitrarily, without any reason whatever.

Now, then, there might be an occasion for restricting the amount if the Navy were running amuck on this question of fuel; but the fleet is only at sea one-fifth of the time during the year. You can not make sailors and you can not have that cooperation of action from the bridge clear down to the boiler room without these extended fleet maneuvers. Last year the Navy turned back into the Treasury unexpended something over $1,500,000, or nearly $2,000,000. They can be trusted not to use any more than is necessary. Therefore the Budget Bureau ought not to go to work and arbitrarily cut down the amount requested. I am not offering any amendment, but I do hope that the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, when this bill gets into conference, with fuel going up in price, will have all these matters in mind in the event that there should be a change in this bill in the other body. That is the only purpose of my statement at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, while no amendment has been offered, probably I should make a short statement touching the fuel situation. In 1923 the appropriation was $16,000,000, of which amount the Navy used for fuel purposes $13,279,476.57, and during that year extensive maneuvers of the Navy were had off Panama. Secretary Denby, in his report to the President touching the operations of the Navy for 1923, said that these maneuvers "were the most extensive maneuvers the Navy had ever attempted." For the current year the Navy will use $14,400,000. For the coming fiscal year we have recommended $14,500,000. This year the Navy has had extensive maneuvers, and next year it has planned that still further extensive maneuvers will be held.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] suggested that the appropriations made were not made upon adequate consideration of the functions to be performed. On the contrary, the appropriations are made only on the basis of extensive hearings and upon the basis of the classification of the different functions to be performed by the Navy. We considered what will be required for Navy ships to be maintained in Asiatic waters and ships to be stationed in the Mediterranean, in the West Indies, in handling the transport service, in handling the cargo and freight service, and in handling the ordinary business of the Navy about the navy yards and naval establishments throughout the United States. In addition to that we considered estimates based upon maneuvers that the fleet will likely hold during the year.

Taking into consideration all these elements, the committee believed that we had recommended an amount that would have been adequate.

The gentleman from Minnesota has suggested the increased price of fuel. I recognize that the price now is probably 60 cents a barrel—referring to fuel oil—above what the prices were at the time the hearings were held. It may be that there will be elements that will need to be taken into consideration in that connection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I know that the gentleman appreciates the necessity of the fleet being at sea. My purpose was not to criticize the committee. My principal purpose was not to criticize the committee, but to criticize the Budget for making an arbitrary figure. That is what they did do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Idaho may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho may proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman, of course, would not want these complicated maneuvers to be crippled by a lack of $400,000.

Mr. FRENCH. We know that the ships must be handled together as part of a great fleet, and necessary appropriations must be made. But the gentleman must also remember that the amount carried in the bill is $100,000 in excess of the amount that will be used during the current year and is approximately $1,200,000 more than was used in 1923.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman also will recognize that the contemplated maneuvers will necessarily consume much more fuel in the coming year than in the present year or in the year preceding.

Mr. MADDEN. Why?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Because of the greater distance.

Mr. MADDEN. They should not go a greater distance.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] has leveled the severest criticism that has ever been made on the floor of this House against the Bureau of the Budget, in that he has stated that the Director of the Bureau of the Budget knew nothing whatever about this item and did not make the proper investigation, and that it was a rather haphazard guess. If that sort of statement could be made with reference to this one item, why could not the same criticism be directed against every other item in every appropriation bill? I want to ask the chairman of this committee whether he thinks that criticism is justified, and whether as a matter of fact the Bureau of the Budget does not investigate carefully all the items that make up the several appropriation bills that we are called upon to vote upon and pass upon? I would like to have the gentleman's view on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. As the gentleman probably knows, the subcommittees do not call upon the Budget officers to come before the committees to give testimony touching the facts upon which the estimates were based. However, it must be said that the estimates that come to the Congress are the estimates of the administration. I have no doubt that the Budget officers go into great detail in shaping the estimates, and I will say that the committee, in calling for a justification of each of the several items, has furnished to it in great detail the proposed work to be carried forward under any appropriation and as complete an itemization as would be helpful either to the Congress or to the committee, and as a result we feel the item is approximately correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Idaho. The gentleman said that during the last year approximately $13,000,000 was spent for fuel?

Mr. FRENCH. That was for the fiscal year 1923.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Can the gentleman tell me how much of that $13,000,000 was spent for coal and how much for oil?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not have the exact figures for that year, but I would say that probably the expense for coal was a trifle less than one-third of the total expenditures for fuel.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. When vessels have been converted into oil-burning vessels, does that preclude them from burning coal?

Mr. FRENCH. On those that are oil burners, yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Coal can not be used after that time?

Mr. FRENCH. No; when they are converted into oil burners they become exclusively oil burners.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Has the Navy Department ever thought of the possibility or the practicability of burning coal in time of peace to the exclusion of oil in order to save our fast-dwindling oil supply for a possible war emergency?

Mr. FRENCH. That would go to the structure of the ships themselves. It would go to the matter of maintaining two distinct types of fuel-supply vessels, each one adequate for most of the fleet, one type to supply coal and the other to supply oil, and it would involve vast expenditures which I think the gentleman does not have in mind when he asks the question. It would not be a practicable thing to do.

Mr. MADDEN. You could not have coal-burning machinery and oil-burning machinery on the same vessel.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. I come from a State which furnishes the finest steaming coal in the world and naturally am interested. I would like to know to what extent the Navy is substituting the use of oil for coal?

Mr. MADDEN. They are putting in oil wherever they can.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. And letting out oil wherever they can.

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman that all the navies of the world are doing just what the United States is doing—substituting oil burners for coal burners.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT, BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

For tolls and ferrages; purchase of books and stationery; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary, hygienic, and special instruction, including the issuing of naval medical bulletins and supplements; purchase and repairs of nonpassenger-carrying wagons, automobile ambulances, and harness; purchase of and feed for horses and cows; maintenance, repair, and operation of three passenger-carrying motor vehicles for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C., and of one motor-propelled vehicle for official use only for the medical officer on out-patient medical service at the Naval Academy; trees, plants, care of grounds, garden tools, and seeds; incidental articles for the Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington, naval medical supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks; washing for medical department at Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington, naval medical supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy yards and naval stations, and ships; and for minor repairs on buildings and grounds of the United States Naval Medical School and naval medical supply depots; rent of rooms for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C., not to exceed $1,200; for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast, including supernumeraries held for transfer to the Government Hospital for the Insane; for dental outfits and dental material, and all other necessary contingent expenses; in all, $395,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 32, line 16, before the period insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to replace the present old frame buildings at the naval hospitals, Canacao, Philippine Islands, and Mare Island, Calif., with modern reinforced concrete buildings, and to construct necessary additional buildings at the naval hospitals at San Diego, Calif., Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and Mare Island, Calif., at a total cost not to exceed $2,257,500, which total expenditure, for the purposes aforesaid, shall be made from the naval hospital fund."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is one item in the bill which does not cost the Government a single penny from its Treasury. The $2,000,000 required to replace these buildings and to make these changes in the hospitals enumerated in the amendment comes from what is known as the naval hospital fund. A short time after the establishment of this Government, on July 16, 1793, an act was passed levying a tax of 10 cents per capita on the officers and men of the Marine Corps and the Navy; in addition to that, all fines and forfeitures go to make up this hospital fund. The fund now amounts to something in the neighborhood of $4,313,000. It is proposed to use approximately $2,500,000 of this fund for hospitals.

It is essential that this improvement be made in view of the fact that they have no contagious wards at the hospital in San Diego. Over 200 patients are required to be kept out in the tents. The hospital at San Diego is a 500-bed hospital, and this amendment proposes to make it a 750-bed hospital.

It is proposed by this amendment to do away with the old fire-trap wooden buildings at Mare Island and to construct concrete buildings. It is proposed to do away with the wooden buildings at the hospital at Canacao, in the Philippine Islands, which serves the Asiatic Fleet. I might state that since the earthquake in Japan at Yokohama we have no other hospital for the Asiatic Fleet except the one at Canacao, and it is intended to make that institution fireproof. This is necessary in view of the fact that we have a large naval base at Pearl Harbor, which is the advance base of the fleet. That hospital should be brought up to meet the requirements.

Now, I want to impress this fact upon every member of the committee, that not one dollar of this expenditure comes out of the Treasury of the United States; but it comes out of the naval hospital fund, put there by the officers and men and by the fines and forfeitures.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman indicate the items and the amounts?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have that information right here:

Naval hospitals.

Mr. FRENCH. And for Mare Island?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. For Mare Island it was testified by Admiral Stitt, Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, that $980,000 will be necessary to replace the wooden buildings which have been used there as part of the hospital for many years.

Mr. FRENCH. That amount to which the gentleman refers was appropriated some six years ago by the Congress for war emergency purposes and has been held with the thought in the minds of officers that it was available for this use; is that correct?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does the gentleman have reference to the appropriation for Mare Island or for all of them?

Mr. FRENCH. For Mare Island.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. My understanding is that during the war Congress appropriated $25,000,000 for hospitals for the Navy. That is all the money that Congress has ever appropriated for the construction of hospitals for the Navy. Prior to that time all expenditures came out of this fund. A portion of the $25,000,000 was used at Mare Island for the construction of these wooden buildings, and that is how these buildings were built there, and that is where they got the money.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, instead of spending money that was appropriated and could have been expended had it been expended while the emergency was on, you propose to substitute moneys in the naval hospital fund.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly.

Mr. FRENCH. And to turn the other back into the Treasury.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I propose to take out of the hospital fund over $2,000,000 of their $4,000,000 and use it for these hospitals.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The committee had this matter under advisement and, of course, recognized it would be necessary for the legislative committee to indicate their desire that this work should be done, and the committee also, as I understand, had directed that this money to which the gentleman has referred, which was appropriated during the war, should be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is it exactly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And this is a means of accomplishing what Congress has heretofore directed should be done, without any charge on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly. In other words, the portion of the $25,000,000 that has not been used in building hospitals must go back into the Treasury and the hospitals must be built out of the hospital fund.

I might state that all the maintenance of the hospitals for the Navy also comes out of this fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise just to say that I concur in the amendment. I believe this thought is shared by other members of the subcommittee. We did not have authority over the items proposed in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CARE OF THE DEAD.

For care of the dead; for purchase of cemetery lots; for funeral expenses and interment or transportation to their homes or to designated cemeteries of the remains of officers (including officers who die within the United States and supernumerary patients who die in naval hospitals) and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, of members of the Nurse Corps, and of officers and enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force, when on active service with the Navy who die or are killed in action or afloat, and also to enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Navy Department and Naval Establishment who die while employed outside of the continental limits of the United States, $40,000: Provided, That the sum herein appropriated shall be available for payment for transportation of the remains of officers and men who have died while on duty at any time since April 21, 1898.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that on page 33, line 1, a comma be inserted after the word "Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Boston, Mass.: Additional facilities, Dry Dock No. 8, $175,000.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 34, line 25, after the figures "$175,000," insert a semicolon and the words "for the removal of the roof of foundry building No. 42-6, $45,000."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, It is poor economy to allow property of the United States Government upon which the people have spent tens of millions of dollars to fall into a state of disrepair and decay.

The navy yard at Boston has successfully met all requirements pertaining to ship repair and the manufacture of standard accessories for the United States Navy under circumstances that demanded the most careful administration of Government funds, and notwithstanding limited allotments with increased work loads, the performance here by all concerned is exceptionally creditable.

If this yard is to maintain its reputation, its existence and progress as a "naval necessity" will depend on the condition of water-front facilities, piers, and docks.

The present condition of the water-front piers at this navy yard is such that a battleship of the first line of defense of the Texas type or a vessel of similar draft and length could not be tied up to any pier at this yard with safety.

In addition to the weakened condition of the pilings, the elements on the floor of the basin around the piers have piled up the mud in such quantities that dredging is essential to permit at least a 35-foot depth of water around piers. You can readily see that the berthing spaces for vessels and the piers should be of first priority in maintenance if a navy yard is to prosper.

It is estimated from a reliable source that $300,000 will be required to make the piers safe, although this does not include the cost of dredging.

No extensive repair program has been undertaken on these piers for a number of years and it has become necessary to place warning signs on each pier forbidding weights to exceed certain limits prescribed by the civil engineer.

Another matter of vital importance is the roof of the foundry at this navy yard. The foundry is a building covering an area of 50,000 square feet of land, and during the World War it became necessary to enlarge the building, which up to that time was about 250 feet in length. The annex to the old building is of modern design and construction, with a saw-tooth roof, affording light, good sanitation, and working spaces. The roof of the old foundry remains in the same shape as when the building was erected and is not of fireproof design. This roof is now in such a condition that the trusses, of wood construction, have been reduced to punk from age, a liability for continual repairs, a fire hazard, and unsafe. The roof is in a leaking condition, the rain water lodging on the floor of the shop making it extremely precarious to carry or pour molten metal into molds; and, in general, a very unsatisfactory condition prevails. The Director of the Budget has recommended that a sum of money be set aside to repair the roof of the foundry, navy yard, Boston, but for some unknown reason when the Budget recommendations were reviewed by the Naval Appropriations Committee this particular item was omitted from the bill. In this appropriation bill there is an appropriation of $20,000 for dredging at Charleston, S. C., while metropolitan Boston, the third largest city on the Atlantic seaboard, with a large naval establishment, with a history and record of achievement, is required to progress under these apparent difficulties.

The Budget recommended $45,000 for repairing this roof, which is in a positively dangerous condition and liable to fall down upon the men working underneath, and liable to cause injury to life and limb, and I fail to see where the economy lies in allowing this sort of condition to go on.

Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly stated on this floor that either the Government should abandon these navy yards and arsenals, sell them, and put the money into the Treasury, or else it ought to keep them in an efficient condition. Many of these navy yards are absolutely essential to carrying on the work of the Navy, and it is the poorest kind of economy to allow a condition of affairs such as I have described to exist; and when the Budget has made an estimate for this absolutely necessary purpose, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations ought to have included the item, and I trust my amendment will prevail.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly the different naval establishments and bases need the attention of the Congress from the standpoint of upkeep. A year ago, when the department called upon the different superintendents and commanding officers of the different stations for estimates of the work needed in respect of yards, the estimates came in totaling approximately $68,000,000. When the department made its recommendations to the Budget it had scaled those estimates down to approximately $3,000,000, as I recall, from $68,000,000. I recall this to remind you that efficient superintendents of yards or stations are alert and bring to the attention of the department the various matters that could well have attention if the times were propitious for the appropriation. This year again the different superintendents made their reports, and this year this item came to the committee in regular order through the Budget and was recommended by the Navy Department. It was the judgment of the committee, however, that the item did not present the important characteristics that were presented in connection with other items, and I believe, too, there are items which were omitted from the bill that are of more importance than this particular item. As a result of weighing the evidence that was brought to the committee the committee felt it should not recommend the appropriation asked for.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. How could anything be more pressing than the repair of the roof of a building being used and which is liable to fall in at any time and injure workmen?

Mr. FRENCH. That testimony was not submitted to the committee. The roof is a slate roof, and I would assume that as a slate roof it would not be as hazardous as the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER]. Notwithstanding the piling down of the appropriation bills, it should be taken into consideration that public property must be kept in such condition that the lives of the workmen in the various institutions are not imperiled. Since the appropriation bill was reported there has been a fire at this foundry. The roof is practically destroyed. There is practically no roof there at all. It is the third or fourth time that this roof has taken fire from the sparks from the foundry, and I believe the time has come when we ought to protect the property and not give way to a program of economy which is nothing more nor less than wasting money when we could save the money by improvements at this time.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman does not mean that any fire has occurred since we reported the bill?

Mr. TAGUE. I understand that the fire took place within two weeks.

Mr. FRENCH. How extensive was the fire?

Mr. TAGUE. It destroyed the roof. The roof was about gone, but it is practically all gone now.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me suggest that in various items in the bill the Navy Department has called attention to unforeseen matters that have arisen and that this matter has never been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. TAGUE. I think the report upon this bill was in the House before this fire happened. I think that it has been within a week or two weeks. It was brought to my attention, at least, and I think it is worthy of the consideration of this House.

Mr. FRENCH. Does not the gentleman think that inasmuch as another committee will hold hearings upon this bill, since the matter has not been brought to the attention, even informally, of the Appropriations Committee, it would be well to have the matter inquired into by that other committee in regular order?

Mr. TAGUE. That is just the question I raise here. Where an appropriation of $45,000 is called for we are asked to wait until the Naval Affairs Committee can go out and investigate, and in the meantime more than $45,000 worth of property will be destroyed if another storm or fire takes place.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think, perhaps, the gentleman from Massachusetts failed to understand the purport of the question asked by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. If there is an urgent need, and the matter making it so has occurred since the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations, the facts could be laid before the committee of the Senate. Surely the House should not vote this appropriation without a hearing. As the gentleman from Idaho stated, we went fully into all of these matters, recognizing that there was much work that we had to postpone for the time being. We have made appropriations where we thought they were absolutely necessary, and surely a hearing can be had on the matter before the Senate committee, if it is so urgent, and is due to something occurring since the hearings before the House committee a few weeks ago.

Mr. TAGUE. I will say to the gentleman that I may be mistaken as to the exact time of the last fire or the matter may have been overlooked when supplementary hearings on urgent matters were held. However, the necessity for these repairs is urgent, and this amendment should be adopted.

In a conversation yesterday with the admiral in charge of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, he not only said it was absolutely essential at this time to have this appropriation made but also to have other improvements made, for which I am going to offer an amendment as soon as this amendment is voted upon. I know this situation. It is in my district. I know where the foundry is and the condition of the building and the condition of the surroundings, and I know that while we are waiting here for a committee to report on the matter this is the time to get the appropriation, while the appropriation bill is under consideration in the House. Forty-five thousand dollars is a small amount when we look over this appropriation bill and see the amounts of money that are being expended for matters of less importance than this.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that if there has been a fire which has totally destroyed the roof since the estimate was made, the proper proceeding would be to go back to the Budget and submit the matter anew, because necessarily there must be a different situation to deal with than there was at the time the matter was heretofore considered.

Mr. TAGUE. I emphasize again that I think the proper place and time to ask for the appropriation is when the appropriation bill is before the House. This matter has been already before the Budget and the Navy Department has recommended it.

Mr. TABER. It has not been before the Budget since the fire to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. TAGUE. It was before the Budget, and the conditions are worse now than when the matter was before the Budget, and the Budget Bureau has already recommended it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that the Budget estimate was based on the fact that this roof was in an unsafe condition at that time?

Mr. TAGUE. The records show that.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were—ayes 29, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAGUE: Page 34, line 25, after the period, insert: "For water-front repairs and improvements to certain docks and piers at the Boston Navy Yard, $300,000."

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a most important amendment. At the Boston Navy Yard there are 10 piers which are in use at all times for tying up ships and the repair of ships. At the present time five of the piers are entirely out of commission.

It is an utter impossibility to tie up any ship at any one of these piers with safety. It is also a tremendous risk on the part of the Government if they would permit a ship to be tied to any one of these piers and attempt to do any kind of work upon any ship sent in there for repair. This question has been before the Director of the Budget. It is true that it was not placed before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, but I have in my hand a copy of a letter, which I will not take the time of the committee to read, sent from officials at the Boston Navy Yard in their appeal that something should be done and done immediately to prevent accidents and loss of life at the yard. They state that five of these piers at the present time are out of commission, and so much out of commission they will not permit the safe operation thereon of the yard locomotives or locomotive cranes. That there should be a general repair and strengthening of the piers, so as to provide safety in the use of the overhauling of any of our fighting craft. When this was presented to the Director of the Budget he gave it consideration to the end that he was in favor of reporting a bill for $150,000 for this work, and I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Lord, Director of the Budget, under date of February 13, 1924, which is as follows:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, February 13, 1924.

HON. PETER F. TAGUE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TAGUE: I have your letter of February 11 concerning water-front improvements at the Boston Navy Yard.

The Navy Department, in its regular estimates for the fiscal year 1925, submitted September 15, 1923, included an item for $150,000 (limit of cost, $300,000) for water-front repairs and improvements to certain docks and piers at the Boston yard.

The total amount requested by the department for public works was $8,536,800. This bureau at first proposed $3,000,000 as the maximum amount that should be allowed for public-works projects. The department protested so strongly that the matter was taken up with the President, who decided that $4,000,000 should be allowed for this purpose. The department was advised of the President's action, and the matter of selection of the projects that should be included within this amount was left with the Secretary of the Navy. It is assumed that the Navy Department selected the items that were included in the Budget in the order of priority of importance. The item of $150,000 first proposed for repairs and improvements of docks and piers at the Boston yard was not included in the department's final list of projects selected and, therefore, was not included in the Budget.

Very truly yours,

H. M. LORD, Director.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is the work of the department hampered by the lack of the use of piers to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes; they are deprived of the use of these piers.

Mr. TREADWAY. And more work could be performed in the way of repairs if these piers were in a proper condition?

Mr. TAGUE. Not only could more work be done, but it could be done more economically. These piers are adjacent to the machine and repair shops of the navy yard and are practically out of commission, and it is almost impossible to put a crane or a locomotive on these piers without risking the lives of the workmen and destroying the property of the Government.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Are not these some of the most valuable piers in Boston Harbor?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes. The navy yard is the most valuable piece of water-front property in Boston Harbor.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact at the present time, because of the fact that these piers are unsafe, to which the gentleman refers, that vessels have to wait to be repaired, whereas if they were in proper condition they could be repaired at the same time with other vessels?

Mr. TAGUE. That is so. And further, to show the extent to which these piers have rotted out recently, before the sending of the fleet to the south, the Florida was tied up to one of these piers and the officers of the navy yard were obliged to move her and tie the boat up to another pier.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAGUE. I am going to call attention to another condition, so as to show you the real condition of these piers. No money has been expended on these piers for almost 50 years—I say no money, at least very little money. Recently there was launched at the Boston Navy Yard the supply ship Whitney, built in the navy yard. When that ship was launched there were thousands of people at the yard to see the launching, and many of them were on one of these piers. Before that ship started off her ways it became necessary to clear one of these piers of people for fear of accident; and when that ship struck the water the pier moved in such a way that it really imperiled the lives of the men stationed there to brake the ship from going across the stream. Yesterday I talked with Admiral Gregory about this matter and he said if it was impossible to get this appropriation in the House, that because of the conditions that have been called to his attention recently, that he may be obliged to go over to the Senate and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is there necessity for these piers down there at all? Is there a necessity for maintaining these piers of which the gentleman is speaking? Have you not got ample space without these old piers?

Mr. TAGUE. I have emphasized the fact these piers are in the immediate center of the yard, the most important piers in the yard. I would not be here advocating the appropriation if it were not necessary to have the piers to do the work.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It seems to me the gentleman has had ample time to go before the subcommittee and present this matter without presenting it here.

Mr. TAGUE. That kind of talk is ridiculous if the gentleman knows anything about conditions. I have just read the report of the Director of the Budget. I am going to place in the Record letters from men employed at the navy yard. This appropriation is something that has been asked for for the last four years. It is absolutely necessary to immediately repair and increase the capacity of the docks at the Boston Navy Yard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES NAVY YARD,
Boston, February 21, 1925.

Memorandum for the commandant.

Subject: Supporting data for the item "Water-front repairs and improvements," estimated cost $300,000, included as project No. 1 in the annual estimates for public works for the fiscal year 1925.

Reference: (a) Letter of Congressman PETER F. TAGUE.

Inclosure: (A) Marked plan of the yard having indicated thereon in red the pier railroad tracks on which no rolling stock is permitted or else on which the load has been greatly restricted.

1. The project entitled "Water-front repairs and improvements," estimated cost $300,000, which was placed first in importance in the list of annual estimates for public works items at the Boston Navy Yard, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1925, covered two main features; first, the strengthening of Piers Nos. 2, 3, 6, 7, and 8, so as to permit safe operation thereon of the yard's locomotives and locomotive cranes; and second, the general repair and strengthening of all the piers of the yard, Nos. 1 to 10, inclusive, so as to enable them to be safely used for the overhaul and repair of the Navy's fighting craft.

2. The inclosure, a marked print of the yard plan, indicates in red the pier railroad tracks on which, by reason of their dilapidated and worn-out condition, it has been necessary either to prohibit entirely the use of the yard's rolling stock, such as locomotives and locomotive cranes, or to seriously restrict such use.

3. Since the construction of these piers there has been a steady increase in the weights which must be handled by locomotive cranes and railroad cars, and if this yard is to continue to successfully compete with other navy yards and private establishments in the economical overhaul and repair of ships, it is evident that it can not suffer the handicap of inadequate weight-handling facilities on its water front. More serious, however, than the restriction which has been placed upon the operation of yard cranes and locomotives is the fact that, due to lack of funds during recent years for ordinary repairs and maintenance, the general condition of the piers at this yard has become such that it is no longer entirely safe to continue their use for their normal function. For example, it has recently been necessary to barricade a portion of Pier No. 1 and to prevent the placing of any load whatever thereon on account of its dangerous condition; similarly the remainder of the piers at the yard are so decayed and rotten that ships are not moored at the yard with entire safety. Recently during the dock trial of the Florida, during which the loads applied on the pier were not abnormal, there was a rupture of no less than four bollard piles, revealing a decayed condition of the timber which is indicative of the generally deteriorated condition of all the wooden piers.

4. At the present time the cost of replacing dangerously defective portions of the piers is so great as to be beyond the scope of the appropriation which is available for regular routine repairs, and accordingly a specific appropriation for this purpose is necessary.

5. Each year that the matter of major repairs to the piers is deferred will result in increased final cost of the work. It is not too much to say that unless funds are made available in the comparatively near future for this very necessary work the continued operation of the yard will be jeopardized.

BOSTON, MASS., February 16, 1925.

HON. PETER F. TAGUE, M. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: 1. The present condition of certain utilities at the navy yard, Boston, warrants me to respectfully invite your attention to the following facts, with the object in view of soliciting your cooperation, to prevail on the congressional body to provide adequate appropriations for the navy yard, Boston, when the naval appropriations bill is read before Congress.

2. The navy yard, Boston, has successfully met all requirements pertaining to ship repair, and the manufacture of standard accessories for the United States Navy, under circumstances that demanded the most careful administration of Government funds and, notwithstanding limited allotments with increased work loads, the performance here by all concerned is exceptionally creditable.

3. If this yard is to maintain its reputation, its existence and progress as a "naval necessity" will depend on the condition of water-front facilities, piers, and docks.

4. The present condition of the water-front piers at this navy yard is such that a battleship of the first line of defense of the Texas type or a vessel of similar draft and length could not be tied up to any pier at this yard with safety.

5. In addition to the weakened condition of the pilings, the elements on the floor of the basin around the piers have piled up the mud in such quantities that dredging is essential to permit at least a 35-foot depth of water around piers. You can readily see that the berthing spaces for vessels and the piers should be of first priority in maintenance if a navy yard is to prosper.

6. The naval appropriation bill for the next fiscal year has not set aside a sum of money to be expended for repairs to our piers, and unless the present bill can be amended the navy yard, Boston, will be severely handicapped.

7. It is estimated from a reliable source that $300,000 will be required to make the piers safe, although this does not include the cost of dredging.

8. No extensive repair program has been undertaken on these piers for a number of years, and it has become necessary to place warning signs on each pier forbidding weights to exceed certain limits as prescribed by the civil engineer.

9. Another matter of vital importance is the roof of the foundry at this navy yard. The foundry is a building covering an area of 50,000 square feet of land, and during the World War it became necessary to enlarge the building, which up to that time was about 250 feet in length. The annex to the old building is of modern design and construction, with a saw-tooth roof affording light, good sanitation, and working spaces. The roof of the old foundry remains in the same shape as when the building was erected and is not of fire-proof design. This roof is now in such a condition that the trusses of wood construction have been reduced to punk from age, a liability for continual repairs, a fire hazard, and unsafe. The roof is in a leaking condition, the rain water lodging on the floor of the shop making it extremely precarious to carry or pour molten metal into molds, and, in general, a very unsatisfactory condition prevails. The Budget has recommended that a sum of money be set aside to repair the roof of the foundry, navy yard, Boston, but for some unknown reason when the Budget recommendations were reviewed by the Naval Affairs Committee this particular item was omitted from the bill. In reviewing the appropriation bill a recommendation exists to appropriate $20,000 for dredging at Charleston, S. C.; while metropolitan Boston, a city rated in fourth priority, with a naval establishment of historical record, is required to progress under apparent difficulties.

10. An appropriation should be provided to remodel the old foundry roof after the type of the new, thereby removing fire hazards caused by overheated stacks from cupolas and steel converters that are in operation daily.

11. I feel that in forwarding this information to you that you will make a special effort to induce your colleagues to support a measure to provide funds to make the corrections that have been set forth.

Thanking you for past courtesies, I am,

Respectfully,

WM. A. McDONALD,

45 Speedwell Street, Dorchester, Mass.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment proposes an appropriation of $300,000 for the work he has indicated in his remarks. The items to which he refers are entirely new items. They were not submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. They were not submitted by the gentleman himself or by the Budget officers. They come to this House as unknown quantities other than as the gentleman himself presents them in his speech. And without attempting to impair the statement that he makes, I want to say that there could be justified on the same basis excessive appropriations for probably every establishment in the country. Our committee members and the chairman of the subcommittee have received memorials and petitions and letters from chambers of commerce, from labor bodies, from boards of trade, from different organizations that are immediately in touch with just such establishments as this, and I have had letters bearing upon this particular proposition, although it is a proposition not recommended by the Budget. I want to appeal to the Members of this House and say that we can not, if we are to proceed in an orderly manner here, act upon the basis of a statement such as that which has just been made, no matter by what Member, and appropriate $300,000 out of hand, as though it were some free gift we had at our disposal. The facts have not been presented to the committee that is charged with the responsibility of holding hearings and considering the many items of the bill. The items may be worthy, but they were not regarded as so worthy as to justify the administration through the Bureau of the Budget in submitting them in the orderly way to the Congress, and I appeal to Members of Congress to refuse to support the amendment.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? As a member of the Committee on Appropriations can you kindly tell me how any Member of this House can ask for an appropriation for his district when the Budget Bureau has not reported the bill to the House except upon the floor of this House?

Mr. FRENCH. The limitations under the law do not refer to Members of Congress. The limitations refer to officers of the department. The department officers could not come here unless the committee asked the officers to do so and urge this particular appropriation. That, of course, does not apply, as the gentleman knows, to the Members of this body; and different Members of this body did come before the subcommittee and ask for a hearing upon one item and another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal about Boston, but I have never been there.

Mr. TAGUE. I extend to the gentleman an invitation.

Mr. WEFALD. Thank you. But if I should ever go to Boston I believe I would have to be very careful if I carried in mind the fears of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] who has spoken on this amendment. I am in a state of mind now as though if I went to Boston I would be afraid of taking the next step because of the chance that something might happen to me. The good old city of Boston must be in a bad state of repair; they say that roofs are falling down and that the piers are crumbling in. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I am from New York, and I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WEFALD. It looks to me, if we were to allow this amendment and give to Boston $300,000 for this purpose, as though we would give it to them in the shape of "pork." I have heard so much about Boston beans that I do not wonder that the gentlemen from Boston would want to get a little pork for their beans.

We have just voted on an amendment here for $40,000 with which to repair a roof in the city of Boston. The gentleman that proposed that amendment pleaded so earnestly that we were afraid that every roof in Boston was coming down. When we consider the fears that these gentlemen have had, I want to remind them that the foremost son of Massachusetts, the President of the United States, has not got nearly as many fears as these men have. I would like to see every building in this country put in a state of good repair, public buildings and other buildings. I read in the newspapers a little while ago that the White House was in bad condition and that it ought to be repaired; in fact, it was said to be in such a bad condition that when Mr. Ford called on Mr. Coolidge he got so scared that he quit his race for the Presidency. [Laughter.] But the President is sticking it out bravely against all his troubles. He does not even seem to be afraid that the Daugherty affair will pull the roof down over his head. The gentlemen from Massachusetts should emulate his example—the good old city of Boston can not need so much repair.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman noticed how quiescent the committee is on this proposition? When have you ever before seen the committee become quiescent to keep an amendment from getting in?

Mr. WEFALD. I understand that the gentlemen from the State of Massachusetts have had a habit of getting anything they wanted heretofore. Massachusetts rules this Nation; a committee will be quiescent when Massachusetts wants it to be; for that reason I could not be quiet. I want to suggest that we, the Representatives of the Northwest, are going to vote in this Congress, and we are going to ask that something be done for the farmers. We do not want all of the money to be taken out of the United States Treasury at this time. We do not know how much more Boston is going to ask if this item is given to her; if Boston gets all she and Massachusetts wants, some one else will ask for like amounts or more, and the first thing we know we will have no money left for real necessary expenditures; I am against the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is such a constant attendant on the floor of the House that it is extremely unfortunate when he acknowledges his absence.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman know I am always here?

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not hear the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I asked the most distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts how does he know that I stay here?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I stay here myself so much that I have to go out once in a while to escape listening to the gentleman's speeches. I noticed that the gentleman of the committee spoke in strenuous terms in opposition to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] five minutes ago, and either the gentleman from Texas has a poor memory, or poor hearing, or he was absent from the Chamber. One of those three things is true, because the committee is not in favor of this amendment. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] made a very vigorous speech in opposition to it. As a generality I agree with him that matters of this kind ought to come before the committee in the first instance, but so far as the argument in this case is concerned, my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] absolutely covered the case. I submit that the evidence of a Member representing the particular section having to do with an item coming up is much better than the evidence of a man from the Northwest, as in the case of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD], who says that he never was in the city where the improvements are desired.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD] seems to think it has something to do with beans; on the contrary it has to do with the building of a pier where the vessels of the United States Government are under repair. Therefore, I consider that the evidence submitted by my colleague [Mr. TAGUE] is of a great deal more value as to the merits of the case than that of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD], who acknowledges he does not know anything about it and does not know anything about where the money is to be expended.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I am glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in a different class.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; the gentleman is in a class by himself.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the most delightful hours I ever spent were spent in the city of Boston, but I want to say to the gentleman that I gave him credit for being able to distinguish between a smoke barrage and a real fight when the chairman of the subcommittee was speaking.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is now questioning the sincerity of the chairman of the subcommittee, which I do not agree with at all. I know of no gentleman on the floor who states his case more explicitly, more firmly, and more honestly than does the chairman of this subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having this naval bill before us. So I do not recognize that there was any smoke screen there whatever. The merits of the case have been vouched for by my colleague [Mr. TAGUE], and when one Member attempts to belittle it by getting beans mixed into it he is making a serious blunder, because that has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts recognizes that the proper procedure would be to first present this matter to the subcommittee.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do. I have said I agreed with that as a general proposition.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It would be a dangerous thing to make appropriations purely on the statements of Members deeply interested in the appropriations.

Mr. TREADWAY. It would be a dangerous thing, and I agree with my friend from Alabama in that particular.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is not said as reflecting in any way on any Members of the House, but the orderly procedure would be to first present such matters to the subcommittee.

Mr. TREADWAY. But this is not based on that; it is based on the evidence of the Navy Department itself as to the needs of the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. TAGUE. The evidence is based upon the request of the officers at the Boston Navy Yard, the evidence of the Navy Department itself, and as set forth in the letter—a part of which I have read and the whole of which I will put in the Record—from the Budget Director, and in that letter he acknowledges that the matter was under consideration by the Budget Director.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. However, the Budget Director did not recommend this item.

Mr. TAGUE. I said that in my opening remarks.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In other words, the Budget is an administrative body and supposedly represent the views of the President and the President has not recommended or urged this item.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LOZIER. I rise to address the committee in opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to register my opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE]. The naval appropriation bill we are now considering calls for an appropriation of approximately $272,000,000. The paragraph we now have under review appropriates the sum of $175,000 for additional facilities for Dry Dock No. 3, Boston Navy Yard. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] proposes an additional appropriation of $300,000 for the repair of the docks or piers in the Boston Navy Yard. I am convinced that this amendment should not prevail and I shall vote against it.

After weeks of painstaking investigation and after considering carefully all requests for appropriations, the Appropriations Committee has submitted a report and recommendations of the amount it considers reasonably necessary to meet the needs of the Navy Department for the fiscal year of 1925. I believe the committee has performed its work honestly, intelligently, and efficiently.

The only complaint I have to the bill is that it already carries too much money, or at least more than I think should be appropriated for the Navy Department this year in view of present economic conditions. I do not want to be understood as criticizing the subcommittee having the appropriation in charge, for I am sure they have done the best they could under the circumstances. The committee had to deal with the Navy and the Navy Department as they found them. They had to make provision for the Navy Department, the Navy, the personnel, and employees as now constituted. Here was a great big machine that the committee has to keep running until we can, by orderly processes, dispense with a part of the equipment.

I very much regret that a way has not been found to reduce the expenditures for our War and Navy Departments. Undoubtedly these departments are costing us too much money, and I favor a substantial reduction all along the line. However, the present bill carries $23,024,333 less than the last naval appropriation bill, which is a good sign and points in the right direction. Moreover, the present bill carries $4,452,927 less than the Budget estimate, which is further proof that the present Appropriations Committee has reduced expenses as much, probably, as can be done at the present time.

But, seriously, I can see no good reason why we should spend annually anything like $270,000,000 for the maintenance of the Navy Department. These expenditures must be reduced each year and the only way to do this is to "pare to the bone" at all times where by so doing we will not materially impair the efficiency of the Navy. To do this we must begin at the bottom, reorganize the department on an efficiency basis, eliminate all superfluous and unnecessary employees, reduce expenses, destroy the bureaucratic system that has grown up in the department and Navy, discontinue the competitive shipbuilding plans, and everywhere in the department and Navy introduce necessary reforms. I assert this can be done without impairing the efficiency of our Navy.

I do not want to be understood as desiring to withhold any necessary appropriations from the Army and Navy, but I do insist that the naval and military policy of this Nation be not dictated, controlled, or even formulated by the officers of the Army and Navy. The size of our Army and Navy should be determined by the people and not by the military and naval officers, nor by those under the influence of the Army and naval forces. The people of the United States determine our internal, domestic, foreign, and economic policies. The people take advice from all sources, weigh that advice, and then accept or reject it as to them seems right and proper.

So while the Army and naval officers may with propriety make recommendations as to the size of our Army and Navy and in relation to our military and naval policy, still the people are the final judges as to whether we are to have a large or small Army and Navy, and while we welcome the advice of our military and naval officers it does not follow that we will follow their advice.

May I call to your attention that history teaches us that in all ages military and naval officers have advocated the creation and maintenance of large standing armies and strong navies and have insisted that this policy was necessary to protect governments from rebellion within and from foes without. History has also demonstrated the weakness, vice, and extreme danger of this policy. Standing armies and strong navies have more often been a menace to the liberties and safety of nations than a protection, for in the tide of time few governments have fallen where military intrigue and coercion have not materially contributed to national disintegration.

There is something in the life, environment, and atmosphere in which military and naval men live that breeds a contempt for the masses and imbues them with a consciousness of their superior judgment, attainments, and divine right to rule the so-called "common herd." Expert and professional soldiers have a distorted vision of their relation to the rest of mankind—an astigmatism that blinds them to the common affairs of life and to the rights and aspirations of the ordinary man. Military life breeds an autocratic disposition and a desire to rule, as well as a contempt for the opinions that run counter to their imperious will.

I can conceive of no greater calamity that could come to this Nation than would follow giving to our professional military and naval leaders control and entire direction of our military and naval policies. I do not mean to charge that the military and naval leaders are venal or lacking in patriotism, but I do say that many of them are blind to the consequences of their own policies and lack experience in the practical affairs of life and government.

I concede that the national defense should at all times be uppermost in our minds and plans, but this is not to be secured by the adoption of an aggressive naval or military policy, but by the exercise of the ethics of government and by holding fast to the traditional policies bequeathed to us by the founders of our Republic.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment aside from the reasons I have already stated.

I have listened to this argument with all the thoughtful attention and deliberation it is possible for me to exercise, and I can not escape the conviction that we will make a very serious mistake if this amendment should be adopted.

Now, there is an orderly, systematic, safe, and proper method of securing appropriations for purposes of this character. There are probably as strong reasons for increasing the appropriations for every navy yard in the United States as in this particular instance; there is just as great reason for a public building program throughout the United States, and in every department of our Government there are just as urgent needs and opportunities for the expenditure of money in order to increase the efficiency of our Government. But we have reached the point where it is important to economize at every stage of the game.

Now, here is a proposition to appropriate $300,000 over the heads of the committee, without the advice of the committee, and against the recommendation of the committee. If you let down the bars and begin increasing these appropriations, where will the end be?

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TAGUE. The gentleman says this is a recommendation over the head of the committee, but the committee admits it never considered it; and that being the case, how could it be a recommendation over its head?

Mr. LOZIER. Well, it seems to me that if these conditions prevail in the Boston Navy Yard, and if they are as bad as represented, it was the duty of the gentleman from Massachusetts and his colleagues from that State to go before the Appropriations Committee and present these matters, and if the gentleman's case was meritorious and the needs as imperative as he represents, undoubtedly the committee would have given careful consideration to his request and granted the appropriation.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WEFALD. Would not an item of this kind more properly belong to a rivers and harbors bill?

Mr. LOZIER. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman from Minnesota satisfactorily. I think the item could very properly have been included by the committee in this bill if the committee had found that the appropriation should be granted; but I do say there should be a limit to the practice of this body in impulsively and without due deliberation appropriating large sums in excess of the amount recommended by the committees for projects not considered by the committees and concerning which there may be little or no evidence before the committee or House. While we may be justified occasionally in adding small items in excess of the amounts recommended by the committees where the need is obvious and justified, still, as a rule, if we make any changes the changes should reduce rather than increase the aggregate appropriations.

I have not only listened to this debate, but I listened carefully to the address of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French], chairman of the subcommittee, when he presented the report, and I desire to say that it has not been my privilege to hear in this House a clearer, fairer, more logical, more forceful, and more persuasive presentation of an appropriation bill than that with which the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] presented this measure. It was indeed refreshing to hear the illuminating address with which the gentleman from Idaho favored us. I think we should draw the line here and now and refuse to reach into the Treasury of the United States, without so much as a recommendation from the Appropriations Committee, and take $300,000 of public funds for the purpose mentioned in this amendment when there are probably hundreds of propositions in the United States that are just as meritorious and where the needs and demands are just as great as in the instant case.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then the gentleman does not agree with our colleague from Texas that the statement of the gentleman from Idaho was a smoke screen?

Mr. LOZIER. I never saw or heard the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] in action on this floor until he presented this report of the Committee on Appropriations for the Navy Department, but after listening to that report I could not refrain from giving expression to my opinion that a clearer, more logical, and more convincing report had not been presented on the floor of this House during the short time I have been a Member of this body. Moreover, I am convinced the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] and his committee associates are wholeheartedly opposed to this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman. I was only trying to prod this committee into defeating the amendment. You have got to prod them sometimes, and I was trying to get some of the committee to help the distinguished gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

Mr. LOZIER. I would like, gentlemen, in conclusion, to agree with my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague], but we ought to draw the line here and now, and stand by the report of this committee, defeat this amendment, and keep this $300,000 in the Treasury. Later on, when economic conditions are more favorable, we may be able to do something for the Boston Navy Yard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Tague) there were—ayes 19, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, New York, N. Y.: Sprinkler system, building No. 4, $13,500; repairs and extensions to steam-heating distributing system, $17,500; central power plant improvements, $40,000; in all, $71,000.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Black] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK of New York offers the following amendment: Page 35, line 4, after the semicolon insert: "Conversion of building No. 13, $60,000; transfer of yard telephone exchange from building No. 13 to some other place within the yard, to be designated by the commandant, $10,000; in all, $141,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law, and that it is not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black] care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I, of course, can lay no claim to any special familiarity with the traditions or the precedents of this institution, and having that in mind I have consulted various experts in the parliamentary practice of this House, submitting to them this amendment, and they informed me this was the proper place to attach the amendment. I understand that this is only an administrative proposition. It calls for work in progress in the navy yard and is not legislation in that sense.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order; if the gentleman wants to speak upon it, it is new construction. It is an entirely new building.

Mr. BLACK of New York. No; it is not a new building. It is an alteration of an existing building.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Black] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment was to have been introduced by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quattle], in whose district the navy yard is situated, but unfortunately he was called away from the Chamber yesterday because of illness, and he asked me to submit the amendment. I must therefore apologize to the committee for not having that detailed information on this project that a man should have before addressing himself to this committee.

However, I wish to state that the amendment simply provides that we alter a building in the Brooklyn Navy Yard for the purpose of properly housing the marine garrison at our navy yard.

To-day we devoted a great deal of time to the welfare of men who might or might not come into the Navy, depending on the ultimate fate of the Connally amendment. My amendment takes care of those men now in the Navy, and I do think that no outfit connected with the United States Government in any way is entitled to more consideration than the United States marines.

In November, 1918, the old marine barracks in the navy yard was demolished to make way for a machine shop. The men were then housed in two other buildings that were makeshift buildings for that purpose—buildings 93 and 425. It seems now that the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery have set forth certain minimum requirements for the housing of men, and under the regulations suggested by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery the buildings in which the men are now housed can only properly accommodate 117 men, whereas they are actually accommodating 232 men. The buildings now used for housing the men of the marines stationed in the third naval district—and all the men of the marines stationed in the third naval district—are now housed in our yard—will only accommodate two-fifths of the number of men that the old marine barracks would accommodate.

This is a small appropriation—$60,000 for the proper alteration of building No. 13 to accommodate the men and $10,000 for the removal of the telephone exchange now in building No. 13. It is a great navy yard that comes here for a great outfit asking a very modest appropriation, and I trust that my good friend from Texas may now withdraw his point of order to my amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly legislation. There is legislation in both paragraphs of the amendment, and I make the point of order against it on that account, and also because it is not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] reads:

Transfer of yard telephone exchange from building No. 13 to some other place within the yard, to be designated by the commandant, $10,000.

The only question is whether this might be held to be an appropriation in continuation of appropriations for public works and objects already in progress.

Mr. BLANTON. This requires them to do something that they are not now required to do by present law.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, does the amendment say some other place in the yard or some other place?

The CHAIRMAN. Some other place within the yard. The Chair does not know anything about the physical situation in this particular navy yard, but under this amendment it would be possible for the commandant to direct the taking of the telephone exchange out of building No. 13 and to even erect a suitable building for it at some other place within the yard and there house it.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I also reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is plainly subject to a point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Mare Island, Calif.: Rebuilding dikes, wharves, and quay walls, and maintenance dredging (limit of cost, $2,800,000), to complete, $350,000; dredging equipment, $150,000; mooring dolphins, replacement, $28,000; in all, $728,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 35, after line 17, insert: "For continuance of the development of a submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River, Oreg., $350,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would rather have the gentleman make it.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the proposed expenditure.

Mr. BLANTON. And the additional point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. FRENCH. And that it might contemplate work not authorized.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the last appropriation act reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs when that committee was an appropriating committee, approved June 4, 1920, found in the Forty-first United States Statutes, at page 822, the following language was used:

Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from incumbrances and conditions and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for a naval submarine and destroyer base, and containing 115 acres, more or less, of hard land, and 256 acres of submerged land, $250,000.

I call the attention of the Chair to the first words of this item—"toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The language the gentleman is quoting is in an appropriation bill instead of in the permanent statutes, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is in the last appropriation act reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs when it was an appropriating committee.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman admits that it dies with the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, not all the provisions of a bill die with the end of the year, because legislation was frequently carried in appropriation bills in those days. The use of the words "toward the development" would indicate that it is a work in progress and that further appropriations were contemplated to be necessary to complete the work in question.

Mr. FRENCH. Does not the gentleman think that under the language of his amendment new buildings could be constructed, piers could be constructed, projects carried forward, that were not necessarily contemplated when the language was put into the bill originally?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman is going somewhat afield when he says it was not necessarily intended in any appropriation bill previously. How can the gentleman know what the committee had in mind except from what they put into the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Is it not true that under the language the gentleman has offered new buildings could be constructed?

Mr. HAWLEY. It might be, but that is a matter extraneous to the proposed amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. But it is contrary to the rule. Our committee can not bring in an authorization.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to discussion of the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the point of order that the amendment is not germane at this point, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there are provisions in the bill for navy yards and submarine bases, but that they are not arranged in order. Navy yard provisions occur on page 36, and in line 22 provision is made for a submarine base, and this is followed by provisions for another navy yard. There was no attempt to arrange in order the items in this section. The amendment is as much germane here as it is to any other part of the section under consideration.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the Statutes at Large dealing with this matter, 1919-1921, volume 41, page 822. The language used is:

Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from incumbrances and conditions and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for naval submarine and destroyer base, and containing 115 acres, more or less, of hard land and 256 acres of submerged land, $250,000.

In support of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], I claim that under Rule XXI, subdivision 2, of the rules of this House this is clearly in order and it is certainly germane. The rule in question reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be in order in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are clearly in progress.

This work there is in progress. It needs more money to continue it. The gentleman's amendment has that purpose in view. I maintain that under the act of June 4, 1920, establishing this base and appropriating $250,000 for its development, that this amendment asking for $300,000 is clearly in order, and is merely in continuation of a work already in progress and that it is germane.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The expenditure of this $250,000 completed the project, did it not?

Mr. WATKINS. Oh, no. It will not complete it, as the Helm reports disclosed, also that signed by Parks, McKean, and Hilton, for it is recommended that an appropriation of $1,500,000 be obtained from the present Congress. The gentleman himself was there last June, and he must know that it is not completed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] offers an amendment, which reads as follows:

For continuance of the development of a submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River, Oreg., $350,000.

The gentleman from Oregon submits in support of his contention that it is a proper amendment; that it is an appropriation in continuance of an appropriation for a public work already in progress.

The naval act passed in 1920 contains this provision:

Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from encumbrances and conditions and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for a naval submarine and destroyer base, and containing 115 acres, more or less, of hard land and 256 acres of submerged land, $250,000.

There is in this particular section which the Chair has read no limit as to the cost of that improvement. Congress did not attempt in this legislation to limit the cost of that improvement, but simply appropriated $250,000 to start the project, namely, the development of a submarine and destroyer base by acquiring certain land.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks—

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the Chair to what this language applies where it says "without cost to the Government"?

Mr. HAWLEY. The acquisition of the base.

The CHAIRMAN. It says "accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from any encumbrance and conditions without cost a tract of land at Tongue Point." Now, this amendment is in order in the judgment of the Chair. Just what the appropriation can be used for is a matter of administration, but the Chair is of opinion that, judging by the language of the original appropriating act, this present appropriation can only be used to carry out the purposes made in the original appropriation and the only work that can be conducted under this appropriation would be the work authorized by the section which the Chair has just read. The question as to whether a new building might be built or some other construction does not arise. It is sufficient to say that the amendment is framed in the language of the original statute and is properly a continuation of work in progress. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, on October 8, 1919, a special board of inspection of naval bases, and so forth, on the Pacific Coast made a report to the Secretary of the Navy on the then proposed submarine and destroyer base on the Columbia River, which contained the following language:

The board recommends that this area be secured at the earliest date practicable, either by gift or purchase; that its development to the capacity or for the successful maintenance and operation of a minimum of 12 submarines, 6 destroyers, and the necessary aircraft for the patrol of the waters in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River be proceeded with at once; that the project be planned to be completed within three years; and that the plans be so made as to permit of the operation of double the force recommended above in time of emergency.

The report in full reads:

OCTOBER 8, 1919.

From: Special Board of Inspection of Naval Bases, etc., on the Pacific coast.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

Subject: Proposed submarine, destroyer, and aviation base, Columbia River.

1. The board is in full agreement with the report of the Helm Commission as to necessity for the location of a submarine, destroyer, and aviation base between Puget Sound and San Francisco, and is in further agreement with the commission in its selection of the Tongue Point site at Astoria, Oreg., as the best site both strategically and tactically. The board recommends the site in the locality chosen, but that a larger area, including all the shore front between the railroad and the pier land line extending from the western point where Tongue Point Peninsula joins the mainland around and including Tongue Point and along the shore line to the mouth of John Day River, is essential.

2. The board recommends that this area be secured at the earliest date practicable, either by gift or purchase; that its development to a capacity for the successful maintenance and operation of a minimum of 12 submarines, 6 destroyers, and the necessary aircraft for the patrol of the waters in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River be proceeded with at once; that the project be planned to be completed within three years; and that the plans be so made as to permit of the operation of double the force recommended above in time of emergency.

3. It is further recommended that the Navy Department take up with the War Department the desirability of the dredging of the necessary channel and anchor ground in the vicinity of this proposed base to permit a safe entrance and anchorage of at least a division of dreadnoughts. This anchorage and channel development will not only be of great service to the fleet but will be of greater aid to commerce and will permit and provide for the full use of the fine harbor facilities built and building at Astoria. It is the opinion of the board that the problem of the Columbia River bar has been satisfactorily solved, there now being a depth of 42 feet over the bar, and the board is also of the opinion that it will be only a short time until a minimum of 50 feet will be obtained, thus making this a practicable port in any weather.

4. It is recommended that an appropriation of a million and a half be obtained from the present Congress, with authorization of the completed project not to exceed five millions, to be completed within three years.

5. Although not, strictly speaking, a part of this report, the board calls attention of the department to the desirability, primarily, from a commercial point of view, but also from the Navy point of view, of the continued development of the Columbia River and the Willamette River as far as Portland, Oreg.

On July 13, 1920, the office of the Solicitor of the Navy Department addressed a letter to the mayor of the city of Astoria, Oreg., as follows, calling attention to the act approved June 4, 1920, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept the gift of a site for a base on the Columbia River.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, July 13, 1920.

The honorable the MAYOR,
Astoria, Oreg.

SIR: I have the honor to direct your attention to the following provision contained in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, approved June 4, 1920 (Public No. 243, 66th Cong.):

"Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of the submarine and destroyer base the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from encumbrances and conditions and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for a naval submarine and destroyer base and containing 156 acres of submerged land."

It is the desire of the department to begin the development of this site, but before any money can be expended title to the tract of land must be vested in the United States.

An unconditional deed to the United States of America represented by the Secretary of the Navy without cost to the Government is required, as will be seen from the provisions of the act above quoted. The deed should be accompanied by an abstract title showing title in grantee free and unencumbered. If the city of Astoria is the grantee, evidence of compliance with the laws of the State of Washington relating to the conveyance of real estate by municipalities should also accompany deed.

The abstract of title and deed will have to be approved by the Attorney General of the United States. It is suggested that the evidence of the title and the right of the grantee to convey be submitted to the United States district attorney for the district of Oregon, Portland, Oreg., in order to quickly secure this approval.

The solicitor has requested the Attorney General to issue appropriate instructions to the district attorney at Portland, Oreg., to insure prompt consideration in the matter.

Very respectfully,

PICKENS NEASLER, Acting Solicitor.

In compliance with the suggestions in this letter, the county of Clatsop, in which the city of Astoria is situated, transferred to the United States, by warranty deed, for the consideration of $1—that is, by gift—a large tract of land said to comprise about 1,300 acres, for the purposes set forth in paragraph 2 of the report of the special board, which reads as follows:

2. The board recommends that this area be secured at the earliest date practicable, either by gift or purchase; that its development to a capacity for the successful maintenance and operation of a minimum of 12 submarines, 6 destroyers, and the necessary aircraft for the patrol of the waters in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River be proceeded with at once; that the project be planned to be completed within three years; and that the plans be so made as to permit of the operation of double the force recommended above in time of emergency.

The work so far provided for will accommodate only three vessels with berthing accommodations.

The people of Clatsop County, moved by patriotic zeal, bonded the county in the sum of $100,000, and with the proceeds of the issue purchased the lands deeded to the Government. The owners of the lands made large concessions in the prices asked to such an extent that the lands were obtained for $100,000, although reasonably worth $200,000 for commercial and other purposes. The deed to the Government is dated January 31, 1921.

That the requirements of paragraph 3 of the report of the special board have been fully met is evidenced by the statement of Maj. R. Park, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, under date of January 16, 1924, addressed to the editor of the Oregonian, of Portland, Oreg.:

The facts are these: The shoals at the entrance to the Columbia River have, by the art of man, been so deepened and controlled by the construction of twin jetties that for years there has been a channel over 40 feet deep and over 1 mile wide; that this channel has improved year by year until now there is a channel 43 feet deep and over 2,000 feet wide; that the largest freight vessel afloat can and has navigated this channel; that the largest vessels in the world can regularly navigate this channel at high tide in any but the most severe weather; that the 40-foot channel is far wider than the Ambrose Channel into the harbor of New York; and that the 43-foot channel is deeper and safer than the entrance channels of the greatest ports of the world.

The river channel proper is, of course, a succession of deep, wide pools and some 25 shoals, where dredging is necessary. Out of 114 miles of river there are some 35 miles of shoals. Channels are provided through these shoals from 300 to 500 feet wide and 30 feet deep.

In the last appropriation act reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House (41 U. S. Stat. L. p. 822, ch. 228, approved June 4, 1920), the following provision was made:

Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from encumbrances and conditions, and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for a naval submarine and destroyer base, and containing 115 acres, more or less, of hard land and 256 acres of submerged land, $250,000.

The expenditure of the money provided in this act has accomplished "dredging of an entrance channel with depth of 28 feet, a turning basin 600 feet in width with 22 foot depth, the construction of a timber-retaining bulkhead, a timber pier, and three timber finger piers for berthing of submarines and destroyers," as stated by the Secretary of the Navy in a letter to me, dated February 7, 1924.

This work by no manner of means conforms to paragraph 2 of the report of the special board, upon which the people of Clatsop County relied when they made their generous gift of the site for a real and effective base.

Submarine-destroyer base is described to include workshops, including machine shops, repair shops, barracks, quarters, and so forth; wharves and dockage, warehouses for storage of torpedoes, armament, and so forth; roads and approaches to dockages; utilities necessary to keep up repair work, power connections, and so forth.

Harbor facilities include sufficiently dredged channel, with enough space to assure accommodation of all anchored crafts and all boats out of commission. This should also include dry dockage in case it was to be utilized for boats undergoing repair.

The mouth of the Columbia is the only fresh-water harbor on the Pacific coast of the United States. This is a particularly important fact, from the naval standpoint, as it immediately frees all vessels entering the harbor from the salt-water accumulation of barnacles and other sea débris. This accumulation of salt-water débris is sufficient to lessen their speed from 10 to 20 degrees.

The mouth of the Columbia is the entrance to the Columbia River Basin, which is the only natural egress from the interior for large maneuvering bodies of troops. This fact is further emphasized by the condition by which it is necessary for 60 per cent of our transcontinental railroad lines to pass through the Columbia gorge in order to approach the western coast. The Columbia taps, through its tributaries and main river, approximately 300,000 square miles of northwestern territory, whereas the sound has just 40,000 square miles of tributary territory and San Francisco about 70. The entrance to the Columbia effected by an enemy's army would mean the occupation of Portland, Oreg., and the severing of the only strategic line of railroad we have from the Pacific coast, namely, the Southern Pacific, whereas our troops would be kept immobilized by the loss of this parallel communicating system.

Therefore the necessity of protecting the only logical approach to this line, namely, the Columbia River, and particularly the only approach from the sea, is obvious.

On January 28, 1924, Brig. Gen. Henry D. Todd, Jr., commanding the ninth Coast Artillery district, which comprises all the coast defenses on the Pacific coast, having completed a tour of inspection of the fortifications guarding the Puget Sound and the mouth of the Columbia River, made a report, from which I quote his findings as to the defenses on the Columbia River:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
HEADQUARTERS NINTH CORPS AREA,
Presidio of San Francisco, January 28, 1924.

Brig. Gen. Henry D. Todd, Jr., commanding the ninth Coast Artillery district, which comprises all coast defense on the Pacific coast, recently completed a tour of inspection of the fortifications guarding Puget Sound and the mouth of the Columbia River. General Todd's report follows:

"Between the 8th and 18th of December I inspected the coast defenses of Puget Sound and of the Columbia, including the works at Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay. As is the case in the coast defenses of San Francisco, I found the armament to consist of guns designed in 1895 and unable to shoot at ranges beyond 17,000 yards. At that time, however, the best foreign battleships carried but four 12-inch guns and twelve 6-inch guns each, and these guns were no better than the American guns—that is, it would have taken a number of the British Majestic class, the Japanese Fuji class, or the German Wittelsbach class to furnish as many guns of the larger calibers as are mounted in Puget Sound. To-day each ship of the British Royal Sovereign class carries eight 15-inch guns and fourteen 6-inch guns, the 15-inch guns being able to outrange our 12-inch guns by at least 10,000 yards, and each ship of the Japanese Nagato class carries eight 16-inch guns and twenty 5.5-inch guns, of which the 16-inch guns also greatly outrange our 12-inch guns. Consequently the coast defenses of the northwest part of the country would be utterly unable to protect units of the American Battle Fleet while leaving the harbor and before they could take up battle formation.

"The armament, with its accessories, power plants, etc., however, old fashioned as they are, I found in excellent condition. While the work entailed on the depleted garrisons is enormous, the morale of both officers and enlisted men was high, and everyone seemed to realize he must do double work to make up for the shortage in personnel.

"We always considered that it took at least 1,300 Coast Artillery officers and men to maintain the Puget Sound forts in a serviceable condition and be able to repulse a surprise attack from a raiding force, yet in the Puget Sound forts to-day there are but 11 Coast Artillery officers and 281 enlisted men.

"Conditions are worse in the coast defenses of the Columbia. There the garrison is so small—2 Coast Artillery officers and 20 enlisted men for the three forts at the mouth of the Columbia and for the batteries at Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay—that all that can be done is to keep the material in good condition.

"If the Coast Artillery National Guard organizations in the State of Washington were called into the Federal service, they would increase the garrisons of the Puget Sound forts by but 210 officers and men, and the forts at the mouth of the Columbia could be increased by the Oregon National Guard organizations to the extent of 350 officers and men. The war strength authorized by the War Department for the Puget Sound forts is 3,235 officers and men, while that for the forts at the mouth of the Columbia is 1,341. Consequently, in case of sudden attack, these forts could not put up much resistance until the units of the Organized Reserves had been enlisted, equipped, and transferred to these forts."

F. D. GRIFFITH, JR.,
Assistant Chief of Staff, Military Intelligence.

The need for an effective, well-equipped base on the Columbia River is apparent. That it is the most exposed portion of our national coast line and therefore the part most inviting attack is clear. That it is practically undefended is evident. The Columbia River is the only river on the coast whose sources lie east of both the Coast and Cascade Mountain Ranges and extend to the Rocky Mountains. It is a most fertile area, capable of subsisting a large force, which, through its railroad systems and hard-surfaced roads, could be rapidly distributed to whatever point an invader might desire in an area of over 250,000 square miles. The products of grains, meat animals, vegetables, and other products would subsist a large army indefinitely. Its timber products alone, comprising more than one-third of the standing merchantable timber of the United States, would be in itself a great prize. This great area is separated from the rest of the United States by the great mountain systems of the Rockies on the east and of the Siskiyou on the south, which would afford effective barriers to protect an invader who controlled the road and railroad systems.

We on this far-flung line are asking for a protection that will discourage any attempt at invasion, and which in case of war will keep an invader at a distance on the sea and destroy him before he can reach the land or turn him back.

Our pioneer fathers and mothers, before the middle of the last century, after enduring great hardships and sufferings and the attacks of savage foes, won and held this important area for the United States against the claims of other powers who endeavored to secure it for their possession. We now ask the United States to prepare in time against the ever-recurring eventuality of war. It may seem to those who reside at places far distant that no danger can ever arise. So may Belgium have thought. Our people are greatly concerned and are unanimous in favor of the development of the base on the Columbia. The people of Clatsop County made their gift, understanding that a very active, fully equipped, and effective base would be developed upon the site.

At a meeting of the Clatsop County Council, held on the 24th day of January, 1924, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the county of Clatsop, State of Oregon, having presented deed of gift to the United States Government of about 1,300 acres of land and water, known as the Tongue Point naval base site, under an act of Congress instructing the Secretary of the Navy to accept the said deed, and the people of Clatsop County having anticipated through an act of Congress that the site would be improved by the construction of an aviation base, submarine base, destroyer base, and anchorage for superdreadnaughts, and taxpayers of Clatsop County having expended for the site $100,000; and

Whereas an appropriation by Congress of $250,000 will have been expended by the 1st of April next: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Clatsop County Council, an advisory body composed of the municipalities listed below, urge upon Congress that an appropriation of $350,000 be included in the naval appropriation bill at the present session of Congress or a special act introduced and passed for the said amount, to be expended in the construction of quarters, barracks, machine shop, and other appurtenances and equipment necessary for the proper conduct of a minor naval base in accordance with the understanding of the people of Clatsop County through the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of a deed of gift for the so-called Tongue Point naval base site, and the combined efforts of the Oregon delegation in Congress are hereby requested to strenuously secure the amount stated, to be expended as stated, during the present session of Congress.

Representatives of the following bodies were present at the meeting above stated:

Mayor and councilmen of city of Astoria, Oreg.
Mayor and councilmen of city of Seaside, Oreg.
Mayor and councilmen of city of Warrenton, Oreg.
Mayor and councilmen of city of Hammond, Oreg.
Mayor and councilmen of city of Gearhart, Oreg.

CLATSOP COUNTY COUNCIL,
By H. F. STONE, President,
By THOS. J. JORDAN, Secretary.

COUNTY COURT, CLATSOP COUNTY,
Port of Astoria.

The work done by the expenditure of the $250,000 heretofore appropriated is well done as far as it goes, and money's worth has been fully obtained for the money expended, but it provides for the berthing of only three vessels at a time and for nothing more.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman inform the committee what improvement is contemplated by this additional appropriation?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will restate the matter and will come to that if the gentleman will permit. In conformity with this recommendation and with the act in Public Law No. 243, Sixty-sixth Congress, approved June 4, 1920, the people of Clatsop County bonded themselves in the sum of $100,000 and bought a tract of land designated by the Navy Department. The land was reasonably worth twice the amount the county paid for it, but out of consideration to the wishes of the rest of the people the owners of the tracts sold them for about 50 per cent of their value. The area includes 1,300 acres of the very best sites for manufacturing purposes near the mouth of the Columbia River and is an ideal site for a submarine and destroyer base. There was an appropriation made in 1920 of $250,000 with which there has been constructed a timber bulkhead and timber pier and three timber fingers providing berthing space for submarines. Now, the original proposal of the special board was that there should be berthing space for 12 submarines and 6 destroyers and for the necessary aircraft, with the necessary appliances for the maintenance and operation of all craft. There is no provision at this time for maintenance, nothing for operation, and berthing spaces for only 3 out of the 18 vessels have been provided, and no place has been provided for the landing or rise of aircraft or—

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is there any space there where an aircraft or a hydroplane or a lighter than air craft could land?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are more than 50 square miles of water in which the hydroplane could land. I have seen them land many times in these waters and rise from them.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is in reference to the Columbia River, but there is no landing field there; there is no place for a landing field?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is the best possible.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. On the top of the mountains?

Mr. HAWLEY. Just across from the bulkheading, as the gentleman will remember who did us the honor to visit Oregon last summer, there is a bay called the Cathlamet Bay. By bulkheading as large a space as may be desired and filling in with a suction dredge a magnificent place for a flying field could readily be made. A field so made would be long enough, wide enough, and smooth enough for any aircraft to rise or land.

Now, the people when they made this gift—very generous for a county—expected that a real base would be constructed, but nothing has been done to make it a usable station. A vessel could come in, having been injured by an enemy or crippled by a storm, and run into one of the slips, but that is all that it could do. There is no machine shop, no repair shop, or supplies, nothing at all to assist a vessel in distress. Now, the Columbia River is the one river on the Pacific coast that breaks through both the Coast Range and the Cascade Mountains.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. Its drainage basin includes an area of 250,000 square miles of land as fertile as there is in this country. It opens a way into the interior of the country. An enemy vessel drawing 30 feet of water can go up to Portland by using the Willamette River, and could go very far inland by using the Columbia River. It is a country rich in grain production, in food animals, and in vegetables and fruits, and if an invader ever entered that country he could subsist upon it indefinitely. It is segregated from the rest of the United States by the barrier of the Rocky Mountains on the east and the Siskiyou on the south. There is only one railroad out of Oregon to the south at present, and there are only a few passes to the east, and if the roads east and south were seized by an enemy invader it would be almost impossible for the American troops to get in there and dislodge them by land attack.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Was the appropriation recommended by the Budget Bureau, or has the Navy Department recommended to the committee the consideration of this additional work that you contemplate having done there?

Mr. HAWLEY. There was no recommendation by the Budget—

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Has the Navy Department recommended this additional expenditure?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know of any recommendation from the Navy Department.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a matter of fact that the Navy Department has all the necessary facilities for the activities that are required there now?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman means that all the activities required for vessels are provided, he is mistaken. There are three finger piers at which they can berth, but there are no shops, storehouses, or any other means of repairing a vessel or furnishing it with ammunition, fuel, food, or anything else it may need.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does the gentleman contemplate doing anything at Tongue Point to have a base for the destroyers, or merely for having a berth pier there? What does the gentleman contemplate?

Mr. HAWLEY. We contemplate what the report I read a moment ago contemplates, and which I have previously described.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But the Navy Department does not need any more there.

Mr. HAWLEY. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Because they have not asked Congress for anything more. The gentleman is trying to read into the bill the conclusions contained in the Helm report for the development there. Does not the gentleman know that it would cost many millions of dollars to carry out the recommendations of the Helm report?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not at all. There never was a suggestion of anything more than a little over a million dollars for complete construction.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When the distinguished gentleman from Georgia was up in Oregon did he approve of this item?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I thought it was a waste of money ever to have spent one dollar at Tongue Point, and I could never see any justification in trying to build a submarine base 50 miles up the Columbia River.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Georgia is entirely in error about his figures. It is only about 13 miles from the mouth of the Columbia River. There is better water at the entrance of the Columbia River than in any other waterway in this country, so the engineers of the War Department say, and there is ample water in the river channel for vessels of great draft. At the entrance there is a channel a mile wide and 40 feet in depth, and a section of the channel 2,000 feet wide has a 45-foot depth; and in all except the roughest weather large vessels can enter and depart at will.

I was speaking, when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Georgia, about the segregation of this area from the rest of the country. It may seem to gentlemen who come from localities far removed from that section that we are unduly alarmed, but we are the farthest-flung post in the United States. If attacked by an enemy and if the roads and railroads are seized, we are segregated from the rest of the United States by mountain barriers that would afford an invader a great protection.

Little Belgium assumed that she was perfectly safe until it was proven that she was not safe. We are asking Congress at this time to proceed with the development of the land which was obtained from the citizens of Clatsop County as a gift, with the understanding that the proposal would be carried out, as stated in the report of the special board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. We are asking that the proposal shall be carried out to some complete development. There is in all this Northwest territory drained by the Columbia River one-third of all the standing timber in the United States. One-third of all our standing merchantable timber is in this Northwest section that is to be protected by this base. At the mouth of the Columbia River there is a fort with some 20 men. If an enemy should approach it and begin firing, he could fire effectively at a distance of 10,000 yards; that is, or nearly 6 miles, beyond the range of any guns at the mouth of the Columbia River.

This timber alone would be an invaluable prize of war, scarce as timber is becoming in the world. These people having made all these sacrifices, understanding that a complete development would be made here, donated 1,800 acres of valuable land to the Government on that understanding. In their behalf my colleagues and I are asking that the Congress make this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am always reluctant to oppose a proposition urged by my persuasive and able friend from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], who never overlooks an opportunity to advance every interest of his district, but I am opposed to the proposition that he now brings to the House.

In the first place, the project was begun two years prior to the Limitation of Armaments Conference. It was started on the basis of the Helm report, which in turn had been made before that armaments conference was held and the treaty entered into.

We have at this time throughout the United States different naval establishments that are tied up, that are out of commission, for which we have no use whatever, any more than a wagon has use for a fifth wheel. I am very sure that if the proposition had not been acted upon favorably prior to the Limitation of Armaments Conference it would never have been approved by the Government.

There is another point: This proposition has not come before the House through the Budget Bureau. It does not have the backing of the department. It is not an urgent proposition, and we have at this time an abundance of facilities to care for the submarines and destroyers that are upon the Pacific coast.

Another thought I must not fail to mention: If this proposition is to be adopted it ought not to be adopted unless a limit of cost shall be fixed.

Of course, that would be legislation pure and simple. Here we are asked to appropriate $300,000 for the continuation of a project, turning over to the department complete authority and discretion as to how the money shall be handled, without limitation or restriction and without the Congress knowing what may be in the minds of the Navy Department. The proposition has never come to the committee that shaped this bill from the Navy Department. We do not have one word from naval officers to indicate that it is desirable, but we do know that there are bases upon the Pacific coast ample and sufficient to care for all our submarines and destroyers on the Pacific, and we do not need at this time to carry on the development program suggested by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to submit some observations which I hope will convert and induce the committee to favor this amendment.

The act of June 4, 1920, appropriated $250,000 toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base at Astoria, and the project, now nearing completion, undertaken with the funds appropriated by this act, includes the dredging of an entrance channel with depth of 28 feet, a turning basin 600 feet in width with 22-foot depth, the construction of a timber retaining bulkhead, a timber pier, and three timber finger piers for berthing of submarines and destroyers.

The people of Astoria, Oreg., acting in good faith and believing that the United States intended to develop, establish, and maintain a submarine, destroyer, and airplane base and anchorage for superdreadnaughts, at an expense of $100,000, presented a deed of gift to the United States for the site embracing about thirteen hundred acres. The correspondence is fully covered in the President's message, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, Document No. 1946, part 7, pages 93, 99, 132, 139, and 150.

By act of June 4, 1920, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to accept said land for said purposes—Statutes at Large, 1919-1921, volume 41, page 822.

In June, 1921, Lieutenant Commander Church, of the United States Navy, arrived in Astoria and took possession of the site in the name of the United States Government, since which time improvements have been going on under the original appropriation of $250,000, which will be exhausted upon the completion of the present contract.

Unless the Congress appropriates more money for further development the money expended so far will be useless, as is the case with any construction or development not maintained. Admiral Coontz, in his report, No. 1946, part 4, Navy Yards and Naval Stations Commission, fourth report, page 76, Appendix E, Sixty-fourth Congress, has the following to say on this matter:

At Astoria should be placed the best temporary base on the Washington and Oregon coasts. Land, Government or otherwise, at a place recommended by the commission, should be acquired to allow for distilling plant, motor generator plant, and a small repair shop for emergency.

The Pacific Ocean is likely to be our most important theater of future commercial growth and activity, involving problems of both a national and international character. The long

Pacific coast line, with its many important cities and harbors, the rapid development of our shipping and commerce generally, the constantly increasing quantity of food, forest, and other products which go from the west coast to supply the needs of other sections of our own country, as well as the needs of other countries, seem to make it advisable, if not indeed quite imperative as a naval policy, that the major part of our naval forces should be maintained and accommodated in the Pacific Ocean.

I believe that any broadly conceived, well-rounded plan for Pacific coast naval development should include the location and development of at least a secondary base in the Columbia River. Depth of water, anchorage area, easy access from the ocean, and other necessary physical conditions exist. The shipping and general commercial importance of the Columbia River is large and rapidly growing. From its shores easy access is obtained, free from natural obstacles, to rich and populous regions, north and south, from the mouth of the river to approximately 150 miles eastward. The water grade it affords through the Cascade Mountains is the gateway to a great producing region east of these mountains. The strange value and necessity of naval defense is obvious.

Prior to the World War we were concerned with the strict observance of and the universal respect for the Monroe doctrine; for this reason we stationed our fleet in the Atlantic, and to maintain and preserve it we developed navy yards at various and sundry places on the Atlantic coast. The possible and almost probable theater of war has now been shifted to the Pacific, due to a combination of circumstances. And this fact necessitates the development and establishment of proper facilities on the Pacific coast so as to meet the needs for the fleet.

One of the most strategic places on the Pacific coast for a naval base is Tongue Point, near the mouth of the Columbia River. It is strategic because of the following facts:

1. It is the only fresh-water harbor on the Pacific coast.
2. It is protected from wind and strong currents.
3. It is without range of the enemy's gun.
4. It commands commodious water frontage.
5. It is protected from the fire of any gun by a hillside of rock which no gun can penetrate.
6. In time of war base is imperative.
7. It protects the entrance of the Columbia River, the second largest river in the United States, and the most vulnerable place of attack on the Pacific coast.
8. There is no base—no place for ships of the Navy to go—nearer than 700 miles to the south or 150 miles to the north—nearly 900 miles of unprotected sea coast.
9. It is ideal for defensive and offensive fighting.
10. It is the only water grade on the Pacific coast.
11. It is ideal for an observation tower in aviation matters.
12. Finally, it protects and defends an empire wherein is raised enough food and munitions of war to maintain our Army and Navy indefinitely. An empire the enemy could seize, if unprotected, and feed its army, support its navy, and fight the American people on their own territory with their own resources, and with the railroads and other means of transportation available move its army to the inland, slowly but surely, to the final goal.

We now have a fleet but do not have sufficient bases.

We need to unify the Pacific coast line of defense.

We need to protect the one vulnerable point on the Pacific coast.

Help us to secure appropriation for Tongue Point and you serve the whole country.

I take the liberty of submitting at this point a naval report most instructive on this matter, reading as follows:

OFFICIAL INSPECTION BOARD REPORT.

[From special board of inspection of naval bases, etc., on the Pacific coast.]

To: The Secretary of the Navy.

Subject: Proposed submarine, destroyer, and aviation base, Columbia River.

1. The board is in full agreement with the report of the Helm Commission as to necessity for the location of a submarine, destroyer, and aviation base between Puget Sound and San Francisco, and is in further agreement with the commission in its selection of the Tongue Point site at Astoria, Oreg., and the best site both strategically and tactically. The board recommends the site in the locality chosen, but that a larger area, including all the shore front between the railroad and the pierhead line extending from the western point where Tongue Point Peninsula joins the mainland around and including Tongue Point and along the shore line to the mouth of John Day River, is essential.

2. The board recommends that this area be secured at the earliest date practicable, either by gift or purchase; that its development to a capacity for the successful maintenance and operation of a minimum of 12 submarines, 6 destroyers, and the necessary aircraft for the patrol of the waters in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia River be proceeded with at once; that the project be planned to be completed within three years, and that the plans be so made as to permit of the operation of double the force recommended above in time of emergency.

3. It is further recommended that the Navy Department take up with the War Department the desirability of the dredging of the necessary channel and anchor ground in the vicinity of this proposed base to permit a safe entrance and anchorage of at least a division of dreadnoughts. This anchorage and channel development will not only be of great service to the fleet, but will be of greater aid to commerce and will permit and provide for the full use of the fine harbor facilities, built and building at Astoria. It is the opinion of the board that the problem of the Columbia River bar has been satisfactorily solved, there now being a depth of 42 feet over the bar, and the board is also of the opinion that it will be only a short time until a minimum of 50 feet will be obtained, thus making this a practicable port in any weather.

4. It is recommended that an appropriation of a million and a half be obtained from the present Congress, with authorization for the completion of project not to exceed $5,000,000, to be completed within three years.

5. Although not, strictly speaking, a part of this report, the board calls attention of the department to the desirability, primarily from a commercial point of view, but also from the Navy point of view, of the continued development of the Columbia River and the Willamette River as far as Portland, Oreg.

C. W. PARKS, Rear Admiral (C. E. C.), U. S. Navy,

Chief, Bureau Yards and Docks.

J. S. MCKEAN, Rear Admiral, U. S. Navy,

Assistant Chief of Naval Operations.

J. C. HILTON, Commander (S. O.), U. S. Navy,

Supplies and Accounts.

Mr. FRENCH. What is the date of that report?

Mr. WATKINS. That was in 1917.

Mr. FRENCH. That was during the war and, of course, some years prior to the Limitation of Armament Conference?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is the duty of the United States to protect all of her citizens and to keep them in a condition of safety and prevent their minds from being disturbed. Are the people out there as scared up as the other gentleman from Oregon indicated?

Mr. WATKINS. Well, I do not think that the people out there are scared, but I know that if any foreign power wants to jump on this Government the people on the Pacific coast are ready to a man to repel the invader.

At this point I want to read from a report of an Army official dated January, 1924, which is as follows:

Brig. Gen. Henry D. Todd, Jr., commanding the Ninth Coast Artillery District, which comprises all coast defense on the Pacific coast, recently completed a tour of inspection of the fortifications guarding Puget Sound and the mouth of the Columbia River. General Todd's report, inter alia, said:

"Between the 8th and 18th of December I inspected the coast defenses of Puget Sound and of the Columbia, including the works at Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay. As is the case in the coast defenses of San Francisco, I found the armament to consist of guns designed in 1895 and unable to shoot at ranges beyond 17,000 yards. At that time, however, the best foreign battleships carried but four 12-inch guns and twelve 6-inch guns each, and these guns were no better than the American guns. That is, it would have taken a number of the British Majestic class, the Japanese Fuji class, or the German Wittelsbach class to furnish as many guns of the larger calibers as are mounted in Puget Sound. To-day each ship of the British Royal Sovereign class carries eight 15-inch guns and fourteen 6-inch guns, the 15-inch guns being able to outrange our 12-inch guns by at least 10,000 yards, and each ship of the Japanese Nagato class carries eight 16-inch guns and twenty 5.5-inch guns, of which the 16-inch guns also greatly outrange our 12-inch guns. Consequently the coast defenses of the Northwest part of the country would be utterly unable to protect units of the American Battle Fleet while leaving the harbor and before they could take up battle formation.

"Conditions are worse in the coast defenses of the Columbia. There the garrison is so small, 2 Coast Artillery officers and 20 enlisted men for the three forts at the mouth of the Columbia and for the batteries at Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay, that all that can be done is to keep the material in good condition.

"Of course if an enemy determined to make a base near the mouth of the Columbia, he could outrange and overpower the batteries there just as he could at Puget Sound."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman does not think that a submarine and destroyer base with 12 submarines would protect that whole coast, does he?

Mr. WATKINS. No; but I do say that the Pacific coast for 1,000 miles is defenseless and unprotected.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The Navy can protect the coast.

Mr. WATKINS. The Navy has no place of refuge and no place to seek shelter in case a boat is crippled, as I pointed out heretofore.

The following table shows the distance between certain points and for that reason is most timely:

The following facts, submitted to me from a reliable source, are most interesting:

The mean depth of entrance channel from Pacific Ocean through mouth of Columbia River leading to port of Portland is 43 feet for width of 4,000 feet, and for width of 1½ miles, mean depth of 40 feet obtains. (From survey United States Army Engineers' Department, June, 1921.)

Rock jetties, extending miles into ocean, protect harbor entrance, with open-water space between of about 2 miles. (Constructed by United States Government at cost of $16,000,000.)

Channel entrance is well supplied with all necessary aids to navigation, including lightship, buoys, pilotage service, and other facilities for uninterrupted navigation day or night. (Listed in United States Government publications, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey charts, etc.)

Mean rise of tide at channel entrance, 7.5 feet, extending in diminishing amount up river to port of Portland Harbor.

At entrance to Columbia River pilots are placed aboard or taken off vessels by pilot tugs of the port of Portland.

Minimum fog condition at Columbia River entrance is important item in reducing delays and subsequent financial loss to shipping. Records of United States Lighthouse Service, * * * indicate most favorable conditions as compared with other Pacific port entrances.

Port.	Station.	Hours of fog, 1921.	Average 10-year period.
Entrance to Puget Sound.	Swiftsure Bank, Lightship No. 59.	1,113	1,413
Entrance to San Francisco.	San Francisco, Lightship No. 70.	1,962	1,725
Entrance to Columbia River.	Columbia River, Lightship No. 88.	325	694

Approximately 100 miles from the mouth of the Columbia River is America's foremost American city, Portland, Oreg.

Portland is the greatest lumber manufacturing city in the world, with region tributary to Columbia River basin having standing timber amounting to 500,000,000,000 feet, board measure, with approximately one-fifth of standing timber in United States located in Oregon. During 1921, 526,298,929 feet of lumber were shipped by water from the Columbia River.

Portland is the leading wheat shipping port on the Pacific Ocean and one of the largest in the United States, with cargo wheat shipments during calendar year 1921 totaling 37,290,188 bushels.

Portland ranks equal of any Pacific coast city in flour manufacture, besides being distributing point for thousands of tons of flour manufactured elsewhere in Pacific northwest. Flour shipments for calendar year 1921 totaled 1,419,304 barrels, being equivalent of 6,386,808 wheat bushels, thus making port's total water-borne wheat shipments during 1921 amount to 43,677,058 wheat bushels.

Extensive sheep raising in northwestern group of States has led to concentration of wool clip at Portland, for storage, manufacture, and annual auction. Portland ranks second only to Boston as Nation's wool market. Eight woolen mills are established in vicinity. Portland is largest wool manufacturing city west of the Mississippi.

Portland was world ranking shipbuilding center during war, resulting in being well equipped to continue the industry as conditions demand.

Ten railway lines serve Portland, five of which are transcontinental systems.

Portland's water supply is world famous and unlimited, originating from mountain streams of the Cascades.

Tributary to this wonderful city is an empire unequalled and unsurpassed by any land anywhere.

Because of strategic position at foot of only down grade from the rich productive plateaus of the Rocky Mountains, which extends from Canada to the Mexican border, Portland is natural outlet for a vast hinterland.

It is estimated 100,000,000 bushels of grain are annually raised within immediate tributary territory and which, with other products of 10,000,000 acres of land under crop, naturally seek market through the port of Portland.

The Columbia River drainage basin has approximate area of 254,000 square miles, with Portland the industrial center, where basic raw material supplies from this territory are converted into staple commodities and shipped to world markets.

The Pacific Northwest, of which Portland's hinterland is a major portion, leads in supply of raw materials on which industry is based. It is estimated that approximately one-fifth of remaining standing timber in United States is located in Oregon alone.

Minerals abound throughout tributary territory, with one of world's largest phosphate rock deposits in southern Idaho, so located that marketing is naturally through the port of Portland. Rich deposits of coal in Wyoming and Utah fields likewise find a route of least resistance via port of Portland.

The port of Portland is the only Pacific coast port where transcontinental rail lines from Rocky Mountain plateaus connect with ocean carriers without having to climb over the snow-covered peaks of Cascade and Sierra Ranges.

Population of countries bordering on Pacific Ocean is estimated at 910,000,000 people. This great consuming market becomes more attractive each year, developing water-borne traffic in the resources of the Pacific Northwest with its neighbors of the Far East.

The Pacific Northwest, one of the last sections of the United States to be developed, is fast fulfilling the prophetic words of ex-President Roosevelt:

"The Mediterranean era died with the discovery of America; the Atlantic era has reached the height of its development; the Pacific era, destined to be the greatest, is just at the dawn."

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Pacific coast is like a football line. There is no need to have your right and left wings protected and your center wide open, and no need to protect San Francisco, the California coast, and Washington and leave the Oregon coast unprotected. The enemy can push right up the Columbia River and in that market basket of the world plant its army on American shores and with our food maintain itself for years and years, and fight us with our own food, munitions, and material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WATKINS. I ask for one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATKINS. It can transport its soldiers down through California by the railroads, north by the railroads, and east by the railroads.

Not only that, this submarine base would afford a chance for the biggest ships of the Navy to have a place of shelter; in case a boat were crippled out in the Pacific Ocean it could enter this place and have safety; to go south it has to sail 700 miles, and if it goes north it has to cover 150 miles.

We have authorized the expenditure of $250,000, and this amendment is asking for $300,000 more. If we do not give something, it will mean that the piers and the base as it now is will deteriorate.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman know that they have not finished it?

Mr. WATKINS. No; they have not finished it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then how is it going to deteriorate?

Mr. WATKINS. The same as any pier or building exposed and abandoned to the elements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill, and I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not do that. Let us go on with the bill. I ask the gentleman as a personal favor to withdraw that. I do not think there is anything to be gained by it except to kill time.

Mr. JONES. I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

AVIATION, NAVY.

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1924, $325,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, helium plant, air stations, fleet activities, testing laboratories, and for overhauling of planes, $6,716,950, including $300,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, $1,573,224; for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service, $710,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $5,264,826; in all, $14,590,000; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing laws as "Aviation" and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $250: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during the fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, because it embraces legislation not authorized on an appropriation bill, and I call the attention of the Chair to the new construction in the paragraph and also to the provisos in the last paragraph, both of which make it subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Idaho have any suggestions to make on this point of order? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made a point of order on the two provisos.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order to the whole paragraph, because of legislation in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order, calling attention particularly to the first proviso.

Mr. FRENCH. In regard to that, Mr. Chairman, I would say that these planes are in the nature of replacements and this is in the nature of continuing work. The airplanes are upon a somewhat different basis from battleships. We use up planes in the course of training and we have to carry money in every bill in order to care for replacement of parts and replacement of machines.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What about the language in line 13, on page 37, where it says for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $5,264,826?

Mr. FRENCH. That was the item to which I was referring.

Mr. BLANTON. That has never been authorized by legislation at all. I challenge the gentleman to show any substantive law whatever authorizing it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not the floor. The gentleman from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that every time a new airplane is constructed we would have to come to Congress and get an authorization for building an airplane, the same as in the case of a battleship?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman by asking him a question. Does the distinguished parliamentarian from Connecticut believe that this Appropriations Committee can build a dreadnaught without coming to Congress for legislation that would authorize the appropriation? What is an airship but an air dreadnaught. It has the same position with respect to legislation and appropriations that a dreadnaught on the sea occupies.

Mr. TILSON. No; I think it has much more the relationship of building a rifle or an automobile or something of that sort.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not think so and I do not believe the gentleman really thinks so.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, I can not believe that the Bureau of Aeronautics is without any power to construct any airplanes at all.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the difference between an air dreadnaught and a sea dreadnaught, so far as the principle is concerned? They are both fighting machines, one to fight on the sea and one to fight in the air.

Mr. TILSON. And the gentleman contends that he would have to come Congress and get an authorization for each individual airplane built?

Mr. BLANTON. For every new construction; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Idaho, does the gentleman from Idaho contend that the language contained in the first proviso is in order if a point is made against it?

Mr. FRENCH. I think the language in the first proviso is probably subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so, too. It seems to the Chair that it is plainly legislation.

Mr. FRENCH. Likewise the second proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained on account of the legislative matter in the paragraph.

Mr. FRENCH. Then do I understand the whole paragraph goes out? I offer an amendment in that case.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not require the gentleman to reoffer it, because that just delays matters. I will direct the point of order specifically, in view of the Chair's ruling, to the first and second provisos.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the first and second provisos, the point of order is manifestly good.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 38, line 1, strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: On page 38, line 1, after the word "Provided," strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Pay, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $275,000: Provided, That not more than $36,500 shall be paid for masters and instructors in swordsmanship and physical training.

Mr. STENGLE and Mr. BEGG rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. BEGG. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I want the amendment offered at the end of line 15, on page 38.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: At the end of line 15, on page 38, insert: "No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as professor or instructor in academic subjects at the United States Naval Academy to perform the duties which were performed by civilian professors or instructors on January 1, 1922, whenever the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in such duties shall be less than 80: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the provisos on the ground that they are new legislation and impose duties and will not retrench expenditures, but, on the contrary, will have a tendency to increase the expenses, and also that it is not a proper limitation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the points of order, I will say, first, which is not conclusive at all, that this language is contained in the appropriation act of last year. As to its not being a limitation, it is a limitation on where the money and how the money shall be expended. It has been repeatedly held by various Chairmen that the House can direct the expenditures of any part of an appropriation to any channel or in any direction it desires.

As to the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, the only reply that a man can make to that is that the whole appropriation is legislation, and that it is not legislation within the terms of the rule which seeks to exclude legislation when direction is given to the authorities as to how they shall expend the money. Technically, you can not pass an appropriation bill unless you legislate, but the rule is intended to keep basic legislation off appropriation bills. I submit this is not basic legislation but that it is made directory.

The other point is that this adds new duties. I submit that to stipulate that instructors in the Naval Academy shall be a minimum of 80 civilians is to add no new duty or responsibility upon the superintendent of the academy nor any other official. On the contrary, these civilian employees are now there working, and instead of putting an added burden on the superintendent, it would keep them there, but to discharge them, and substitute military instructors would add labors to the officers who are now responsible for the conduct of the institution. I think that covers the points of orders that have been made against the amendment and I believe answers the contention completely.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in support of the point of order. The point of order is directed against the entire amendment which purports to be a limitation. It does not purport to come under the proposition of a retrenchment of expenditures. That is not involved in the point of order. The sole question, as I gather it, that the Chair must decide is whether this is a proper limitation upon an appropriation. It is legislation. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] quite well says that that does not bar it. We have a right to put on legislation if it is merely by way of a limitation on an appropriation, the theory being that the appropriation committee has the entire jurisdiction to appropriate, and having entire jurisdiction to appropriate it may appropriate for a purpose, it may appropriate for the entire naval program, it may appropriate for part of it, and anyone can offer an amendment which limits it properly. Mr. Chairman, I had in mind a decision with which the Chair is no doubt familiar, but I can not turn to it for the moment. It is the decision by Chairman Saunders, of Virginia, which says that a limitation can not go clear out beyond the purpose of the limitation and bring in legislative matters not properly connected with the limitation. This amendment was put in last year by way of amendment, but no point of order was addressed to the two provisos, which clearly are in no way connected with the limitation itself. It seems to me they are clearly legislation. The first proviso is that in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated. That is plain, straight-out legislation. It has nothing in the world to do with a limitation. There is a second proviso that no civilian professor or instructor, and so forth, shall be dismissed except for sufficient cause after six months' notice to him that his services will no longer be required. I do not think any plausible contention can be made that either of those provisos has anything to do with the limitation, and no plausible contention can be made that they are not both straight-out legislation within the rules which exclude legislation. In other words, the rule provides that there can be no legislation upon an appropriation bill, but there has been read into that rule a provision that a limitation is proper. Whenever a limitation goes outside of the strict interpretation of a limitation then it is subject to the point of order, and either one of those provisos being subject to the point of order makes the entire amendment fall.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the point of order correctly it was first made to the two provisos.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the entire amendment.

Mr. DENISON. I was listening very carefully. I understood the gentleman to say that the point of order was made separately to the two provisos. Possibly afterwards he made it to the entire amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if there is any question about it I make the point of order to the entire amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any doubt but that the point of order is well taken against the provisos, but the point of order is not well taken against the amendment proper. Whether the two provisos will invalidate the entire amendment I am not sure.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. To end the argument and expedite time I am willing to withdraw the amendment and reoffer it without the two provisos. I concede the argument on the last proviso. I question the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The better method of procedure would be to have the point of order sustained to the existing amendment and then the gentleman can offer another amendment.

Mr. DENISON. I was about to state that the limitation was put on the bill in the House, and that these two provisos were inserted in the bill in the Senate, but that is how they came to be in the last year's bill. I think the point of order is well taken against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment without the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report, being that part of this amendment down to the first proviso. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 38, after line 15, insert: "Provided, That no part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as professor or instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform the duties which were performed by civilian professors or instructors on January 1, 1922, whenever the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in such duties shall be less than 80."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, all I want to say is this, and it will not take but a minute: The military teachers that can be permitted to teach in Annapolis must first have served the minimum of 12 years on outside service. Now, the only training they get for teaching purposes is that training they receive at Annapolis. Now, the absence from teaching work for 12 years disqualifies any man, and we all know that from our experience, to be a first-rate instructor in academic subjects, and the only interest I have is to maintain the high order of instruction that has always been maintained at the Annapolis Academy.

Mr. STENGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. STENGLE. Why fix the number of civilians at 80?

Mr. BEGG. Because it was fixed last year as a proper proportion of civil instructors on academic subjects. This does not interfere at all with that branch of instruction that applies to the military or navigation.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know the number of civilian instructors at present is only 77?

Mr. BEGG. If that is the case, I also know we need all the more to put our amendment in, because if Admiral Wilson, superintendent at Annapolis, is going to defy the direct order of this House, the only conclusion is we need a new superintendent at Annapolis. I know this to be a fact: The instructors of the military end of it who have been placed to instruct in academic subjects have gone before their class and have made the cold-blooded statement, "Boys, go ahead to the blackboard, put on the problems; if you can work it out, we will try to be a fair referee between you and the textbooks." Now, I have had that told me by no less than three boys in my own home. If that be true, it seems to me we ought to protect the academic end. I have nothing but the highest praise for the navigation and the military end of both our academies, but I am not so sure though that the academic end is on a par with good institutions in civil life. But I do think that these naval men in this country who graduate at West Point and Annapolis should be superior, if possible, in every single line of training, and it is only in sympathy with that idea that I offered my amendment and in no way of criticism of the efficiency of it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the amendment. Gentlemen, perhaps I can give you a brief history of this proposition. In 1913 the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, Captain Gibson, came over and recommended to the committee that all the civilian professors be put out of the institution; he did not want them around. Congress put this same limitation in the appropriation act of 1913, which would prevent them from substituting naval officers for civilian professors in the academic branches at the academy. The limitation was carried in every appropriation bill from 1913 down to 1918, if I remember correctly, during the war. Then the committee, when we were appropriating for war purposes, left it out because all the naval officers were at sea fighting; they could not get any to detail to the academy to take the place of civilians, so the committee omitted the limitation from the bill. Two years ago Admiral Wilson came before the committee and made another recommendation—he was then superintendent of the academy—that a large part of the civilian professors be discharged and naval officers be put in their places. The Appropriations Committee apparently were willing to permit it, for they reported the bill with a greatly reduced amount for the pay for civilian professors.

When this item was reached during the consideration of the bill I offered an amendment similar to the one now pending, and we put back in the bill this limitation which had been carried so many years, and we also increased the appropriation so as to provide a sufficient amount to pay the civilian professors. So the House, by an overwhelming vote, put this limitation into the bill; but when it went to the Senate the Senate inserted the provision for 80 professors into the limitation which had been inserted in the House, so that the 80 part of the limitation was put in by the Senate. Now, I want to say also these other provisions in the limitation, which have gone out on the point of order, and I think properly so, were also put into the bill by the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman state the difference in the number of civilian instructors in 1913, when the limitation was first placed, and the number of civilian instructors after the war?

Mr. DENISON. The number of civilian professors at the academy has varied from time to time. There was a time back after the Civil War when a great part of the teachers at the academy were civilians, but the ratio changed; sometimes there were many more civilians than military instructors and at other times there were less.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In 1913 there were very few civilian instructors, and after the war we had the 80 limitation.
